In levying our taxes we see fit to make one tax against the individual, another against a partnership, and a third against a corporation. Does anybody contend that a law which makes these discriminations is unconstitutional for that reason?

Again, in the last several revenue measures we made an especially high tax upon the manufacturers of munitions, and, while there was a difference of opinion as to the policy of such a distinction, no one questioned the power of the Congress to do it. We could place a certain tax upon the manufacture of steel and a certain other tax upon the manufacture of copper and a certain other tax upon the manufacture of flour—I mean in the form of an excise tax—and, while we might question the wisdom of legislation of that kind, no one would question the constitutional power to do it.

At the present time and for a number of years we find, as a matter of fact, that certain manufacturers and certain mine operators employ labor of tender years. As the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has said, they employ it because of the profit they are making out of it, and for no other reason. The Congress of the United States sees that situation. Is it beyond their discretionary power to say that if these men are going to employ children of tender years we will say to them we are going to levy an additional tax? That is all this amendment involves.

When we make this suggestion we are told that we should leave this subject to the legislatures of the several States, because we are offending certain of the States. In answer to that I say your action is offending the whole United States.

In the McCray case the Chief Justice, in delivering the opinion, in referring to the power of Congress, said, on page 61, One hundred and ninety-fifth United States Reports:

> The right of Congress to tax within its delegated power being unrestrained, except as limited by the Constitution, it was within the authority conferred on Congress to select the objects upon which an excise should be laid.

We have seen fit by this amendment to say that here is a certain class of individuals or corporations, as the case may be, who are exercising certain rights and privileges under the permission of Congress, and they employ certain instrumentalities. The fact that they are permitted to do these things, it seems to me, includes the power to say if you are going to do it out of your profits you shall pay an additional tax.

I am not able to distinguish between the tax on the profits derived from child labor and the tax on the profits derived from the manufacture of oleomargarine. It is a tax on profits. The tax on oleomargarine to a certain extent discourages the manufacture of oleomargarine, but that did not make it unconstitutional. The tax upon those men who employ child labor is but a tax upon one of the instrumentalities by which they coin their profits. Is there any legal distinction between the two? If so, I am not able to see it. I feel very confident that in view of the long line of decisions sustaining the taxing power in similar legislation, the court, when it comes to review this amendment, if it becomes a law, will sustain it.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, there has been so much said on this matter I feel that I can not add anything to the very thorough discussion of the legal problem, but I do want to make a few observations. I have been much interested in the whole course of the child-labor legislation, and was so keenly disappointed with the decision of the Supreme Court, deriving very little satisfaction from the fact that four judges dissented, that I want to add just a word or two to what has been said.

I have come to the conclusion that there is no constitutional question so clear that it is not without very serious difficulties. I felt that way about the child-labor bill before. The argument advanced here by the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], whose opinion I value so highly on constitutional questions, that we, in fact, are getting around or nullifying the action of the Supreme Court, does not appeal to me with great force. When the income-tax case was decided by the Supreme Court we did not hesitate to try to nullify the action of the Supreme Court by passing further legislation.

Now that the Supreme Court in the original child-labor case has decided that that law was unconstitutional, it seems to me perfectly proper and perfectly right that we should try and find some means of nullifying that action of the Supreme Court, and that is what we are trying to do.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the Senator whether it is exactly correct to assume that we are nullifying the action of the Supreme Court when the Supreme Court nullified the action of Congress?

Mr. KENYON. That is correct, of course, and better stated. The same is true as to the employers' liability act. The method we tried to get at it the Supreme Court declared unconstitutional. Then we tried some other method. Here the Supreme Court decided that our attempt through the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution to regulate this wrong was an unconstitutional way to get at it. Now, we try another way, and pass that on to the Supreme Court for them to state whether or not it is constitutional legislation.

Some things are particularly well established in this discussion. First, this is an excise tax; it is not a direct tax. Second, I think it is conceded, established by a long line of decisions, that the court does not go into the question of the motives or intention or the purposes of the Congress. Third, another proposition fairly established is that there are few limitations upon the taxing power. Of course, direct taxes follow the constitutional rule of apportionment. Indirect taxes must be uniform in their operation. There can be no tax on exports; there can be no tax upon the agencies of State government, but outside of that there are practically no limitations on the taxing power. It has been held that the fifth amendment does not amount to a limitation upon the taxing power.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. One important exception is that there can be no tax on State officers or State securities under the constitutional provision.

Mr. KENYON. Let me say that we can not interfere with the rights of the State or the power to carry on the State government by any scheme of taxation.

Mr. HARDWICK. If it is true in respect to State securities and State officers that there should be such a limitation on the Federal power, why is it not true in reference to other rights and powers?

Mr. KENYON. I do not think there are any such rights and powers involved here.

Mr. LENROOT. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the dispensary cases in South Carolina some years ago, where the State itself undertook to go into the liquor business and claimed that the State undertaking that business it was not subject to the general internal-revenue tax; but the court held that while there was such a limitation in so far as necessary to carry on the State government they were exempt from a Federal tax; wherever the State undertook to go into private business it was subject to the Federal tax the same of an individual.

Mr. KENYON. There might be agencies of the State carrying out its public functions not its private business. The agencies carrying out public functions can not be interfered with by taxation.

I am not going to prolong this discussion. I think the propositions I have laid down are incontrovertible.

Now, what was the real decision in the child-labor case? I want to read just a word or two, so that it may go into the RECORD, from the majority opinion. I feel myself the minority is the strongest opinion. It is the case of Hammer against Dagenhart. The court said:

> In our view the necessary effect of this act is, by means of a prohibition against the movement in interstate commerce of ordinary commercial commodities to regulate the hours of labor of children in factories and mines within the States, a purely State authority. Thus the act in a twofold sense is repugnant to the Constitution. It not only transcends the authority delegated to Congress over commerce, but also exerts a power as to a purely local matter to which the Federal authority does not extend. The far-reaching result of upholding the act can not be more plainly indicated than by pointing out that if Congress can thus regulate matters intrusted to local authority by prohibition of the movement of commodities in interstate commerce, all freedom of commerce will be at an end and the power of the States over local matters may be eliminated, and thus our system of government be practically destroyed.

It seems to me we come to this question in the final analysis, that if the Supreme Court shall say we brush aside all the questions as to taxation, and this is apparently to us an attempt to regulate affairs of a State within a State under the doctrine of the old child-labor case, we hold this statute to be unconstitutional. In other words, while not inquiring into the motives of Congress or the purpose of Congress, yet if it is apparent to them that the taxing power has been used to strike down a fundamental right, then the Supreme Court declares it unconstitutional. That is the question here, and that is the question that no one short of the Supreme Court can determine.

In the oleomargarine case, the McCray case, referred to by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], in One hundred and ninety-fifth United States, the language makes this point rather clear. In the concluding part of that opinion the court said:

> Let us concede that if a case was presented where the abuse of the taxing power was so extreme as to be beyond the principles which we have previously stated, and where it was plain to the judicial mind that the power had been called into play not for revenue but solely for the purpose of destroying rights which could not be rightfully destroyed consistently with the principles of freedom and justice upon which the Constitution rests, that it would be the duty of the courts to say that such an arbirary act was not merely an abuse of a delegated power but was the exercise of an authority not conferred. This concession, however, like the one previously made, must be without influence upon the decision of this cause for the reasons previously stated; that is, that the manufacture of artificially colored oleomargarine may be prohibited by a free government without a violation of fundamental rights.

So that the prohibition of child labor—a prohibition of that character—would not violate fundamental rights, though I know the point is made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] that it violates the fundamental right of the State to control its own affairs; that is slightly different from the mere question of prohibiting child labor.

In the discussion on this floor of the law which was involved in what is known as the phosphorus match case, which has been referred to this afternoon, it was openly conceded—I think by the Senator from Massachusetts—that the purpose of that proposed act was not for revenue, but was to blot out that evil; a general public policy to get rid of those detrimental things in manufacture which were injuring the lives of the workingmen. The then Senator from Texas, than whom no greater constitutional lawyer, I think, ever sat in this body, said, among other things, in that debate, as will be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 3, 1912, he having been speaking with reference to the power of the courts to inquire into the motives of Congress:

> But whatever my opinion may be about that, the rule is too well established now to be successfully assailed, and I know perfectly well that if Congress passes this act, and it is challenged in the courts, the courts will sustain it precisely as they sustained the oleomargarine act.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Iowa has not given the name of the Senator from Texas to whom he refers.

Mr. KENYON. I am reading from the speech of former Senator Bailey, of Texas. Texas has produced so many great constitutional lawyers, I suppose that I should have mentioned Senator Bailey's name, though I thought everyone would recognize the fact that I referred to him.

So it gets back, in its final analysis, to the suggestion, it seems to me, which was made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], of each Senator, under his oath, determining in his own mind whether this proposed legislation is or is not constitutional. Oftentimes questions arise here when we can not determine that matter. As to what was known as the Webb-Kenyon law, in the argument of that question upon the floor of the Senate, I said very frankly that it was a close constitutional question. So great a lawyer as President Taft vetoed the bill, saying that it was unquestionably unconstitutional, and the then Attorney General of the United States rendered a very learned opinion, in which he said there was no question about its being unconstitutional. However, we passed the bill over the veto of the President; it went to the Supreme Court and was there sustained, I think, with only two dissenting votes. So we meet that practical question in all of this forward-looking legislation.

Here is a great wrong to be remedied. Perhaps it is not so great now as it has been in the past. We have to take some chances on all such legislation, as to its constitutionality. We have tried one method to cure the evil, and it has been a failure. This is the only method left. Can the Supreme Court say, "We assume that there will be no taxes raised by this law; that it is a mere subterfuge"? What right have they to do that? In order to overthrow the law they will have to overthrow their decision in the oleomargarine case; they will have to assume that this legislation clearly shows that it is not for the purpose of raising any revenue but is solely for the purpose—even going to the extreme cited by the Senator from Georgia of striking down some rights within the State which belong only to the regulatory power of the State in order to hold the act to be unconstitutional. I have no trouble, in my own mind, in reaching the conclusion that, under those circumstances, believing that we are remedying a great wrong, a great evil, and are trying to protect and to conserve the children of this country, my duty is to vote for this amendment to the pending bill. It is the only means now presented for curing this evil of child labor.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I shall vote for this amendment because it furnishes us an opportunity for legislating at this time upon this most important matter; but lest my position should be misunderstood, I desire to say now that I shall not vote for the amendment because I am laboring under that which I believe to be a general misapprehension, that we must accomplish by indirection and by subterfuge, so to speak—for that is what we are proposing to do in this instance—the beneficent end which this legislation seeks to achieve.

I know that probably the lawyers here may not agree with me, and those who have studied the Constitution for many years may differ with me, but, notwithstanding, I believe it to be a fact that we might adopt this as a rule of constitutional interpretation. So broadly constructive and progressive is the Constitution in its purposes and in its whole nature that segregative, disintegrative, negative, and purely prohibitive legislation must generally be found to be repugnant to it, while constructive, conservative, affirmative, and ameliorative measures are almost of necessity in harmony with its provisions.

The soundness of this principle of constitutional interpretation, it seems to me, is well illustrated in the recent decision of the Supreme Court with reference to this very child-labor law. I do not understand, from reading that decision rather carefully, that the Supreme Court nullified that legislation because it was ready to affirm that this Republic had no right whatever to protect the life, the health, and the liberty of the children who are to become the citizens of this Republic; I do not understand that the Supreme Court nullified that law because of an opinion that all jurisdiction over the children of the land belongs to the several States. The decision, it seems to me, says very clearly that this act was unconstitutional because it prohibited to interstate commerce certain articles, whereas the Congress is only empowered to regulate interstate commerce. There is the essence of the whole opinion of the court in this case.

The legislation which was annulled is a very clear example of prohibitive, negative, and, I believe, in one sense, destructive legislation, although the purposes of the legislation were clearly commendable and the ends sought to be achieved were entirely beneficent. I am not willing to criticize the Supreme Court of the United States for nullifying this legislation, for I think that the legislation was an attempt to accomplish by illegitimate means most legitimate purposes. The whole object of the brief remarks which I am making will appear when I say that I am not willing to admit that it is ever necessary to evade constitutional provisions in order to accomplish such beneficent purposes as we have in view in the adoption of this amendment. My purpose in saying this much is simply this: There is a constructive way to deal with the child-labor question, and that is the way in which we must deal with it ultimately. It must be dealt with affirmatively and not negatively. It is not enough to deny that children should labor; we must do more than that. We must affirm that they must all be educated and trained for citizenship.

I believe that it is the duty of this Republic, when the State fails to train children for citizenship in a universal compulsory system of State education, to provide for such training of its citizens. I propose at some time in the near future to discuss whether or not the Federal Government has the power to train its youth for citizenship, or whether it must stand helpless while certain of the States may be allowing an illiteracy of nearly 20 per cent to continue to exist.

I think that the constitutional question is very clear. Some, since the beginning of the war, have maintained that the powers of the Constitution, by war, are enlarged; others have contended that the powers of the Executive during war are increased, and yet others have contended that during war the powers of the Constitution and the limitations imposed by the Constitution are suspended. There is no foundation for any of those contentions. The constitutional powers exist continually; they are neither enlarged by war nor are they narrowed by war or peace. I will not go into any quotation of Supreme Court decisions to that effect. While the constitutional powers of the Executive are more largely exercised during war, they are not enlarged. I do not care to go into a discussion of that question at this time, although I have before me certain cases which will support that contention.

I wish merely to say that the very purpose of the adoption of the Constitution—and that was clearly set forth in the great argument of Marshall before the Virginia convention—was to make better provision for the national defense. His opponent at that convention, whom you all well remember as you have in mind that debate, contended that the Nation might easily in times of war prepare for war, and John Marshall, of course, made in reply that great statement, in which he showed that the powers to prepare for war must exist as well during times of peace as during times of war, or otherwise the Nation would not have the necessary powers in times of peace to prepare for times of war.

Mr. President, if that great doctrine is true, that all of the powers which the Federal Government enjoys during times of war it can also exercise in times of peace in preparation for war, then, of course, all of the powers which we exercised during this last war we can exercise, if we see fit, during times of peace, so far as those powers were exercised for putting the country into a condition to wage war. What I mean is this: We found when we made a census to see what available man power we had for carrying on this war that among those of military age there were 700,000 who could neither read nor write, who were unprepared to understand the simplest written orders presented to them by a commanding officer; and there is at least one instance where a man was court-martialed in the United States Army, so I am informed, because he could not read an order nor would he admit his own illiteracy. During the war we sent men to colleges to be educated; we sent men, adults, to schools in the camps to be educated so that they might read their orders and comprehend the written statements which it was necessary for them to understand in order that they might properly perform their duties of citizenship during war.

Now, we face this situation: Is the Constitution of such a nature that we can take 700,000 men who can neither read nor write and compel them during times of war to get that preliminary education which they need in order to become soldiers to defend the Nation, and yet are we as a Nation helpless to see that illiteracy is eradicated in times of peace? Mr. President, the doctrine that the Federal Government is helpless to deal with the illiteracy which the States are permitting to exist is a monstrous doctrine. It is a doctrine which is repugnant not only to the whole constructive nature of our Constitution, but it is one of which the fathers never dreamed. The very first presidential inaugural addresses dealt with the subject of the necessity for the extension of education, and the fathers never contemplated that we should attempt to form a great Federal Government which would be helpless to prevent its citizens living in ignorance and degradation if certain of the States saw fit to let them so live.

Mr. President, I did not care to have this occasion pass without saying that I do not subscribe to the doctrine that we must legislate for the accomplishment of these great and beneficent ends by methods of indirection. I wish to read just a short paragraph from what Alexander Hamilton said in connection with this general subject as to the division of the Federal and the local powers. His language expresses very well what I would say if I were gifted with the power of expression which he had:

> Whatever constitutional provisions are made to the contrary, every government will be at last driven to the necessity of subjecting the partial to the universal interest. Gentlemen ought always in their reasoning to distinguish between the real, genuine need of a State and the opinions and prejudices which may prevail respecting it. The latter may be opposed to the general good, and consequently ought to be sacrificed. The former is involved in it and can never be sacrificed.

I am making these observations to present to you this great question which I propose later on to discuss. I believe it is the greatest question we have to consider during this reconstruction period—how we can accomplish these beneficent ends, which we must accomplish, without violating any of the provisions of the Constitution.

I have offered some amendments to the census bill which not only change the method of the census, but which also change the whole theory upon which the census is based. Under these amendments to the census bill if enacted there would be a continuing enrollment of the people of the country, with the collection of vital, social, and industrial statistics such as are necessary if we are to legislate with that precision which is so desirable. These amendments which I mention look forward to legislation which would establish a Federal system or a federalized system of education, a federalized system of public health, and a more scientifically organized federalized system of employment agencies. It is because I am looking forward to the discussion of these amendments and to the presentation of such legislation that I am not willing to seem to be going on record as one of those who believe that we must continue to seek to accomplish these great and beneficent ends by indirection, when I believe that we have under the Federal Constitution ample powers for the enactment of such conservative, constructive, and truly ameliorative legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Spencer
Baird	Kellogg	Overman	Sterling
Bankhead	Kenyon	Penrose	Sutherland
Beckham	Kirby	Poindexter	Swanson
Chamberlain	La Follette	Pollock	Thomas
Curtis	Lenroot	Pomerene	Thompson
Dillingham	Lodge	Ransdell	Underwood
France	McKellar	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Gay	McLean	Shafroth	Warren
Gerry	Martin, Ky.	Sheppard	Watson
Gore	Martin, Va.	Sherman	Williams
Hardwick	Moses	Simmons	Wolcott
Henderson	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Johnson, Cal.	New	Smith, S. C.
Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Smoot

Mr. JONES of Washington. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is absent on important business of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. HARDWICK. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. C

I am told by the Senator that on this question he would vote as I shall vote. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. McKELLAR (when Mr. SHIELDS's name was called). I announce the absence of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] on account of illness.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GERRY (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. I am informed that he would vote as I shall vote on this question, and I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Washington. The junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] is necessarily absent on account of illness in his family. He is paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. If the junior Senator from Michigan were present and at liberty to vote, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote I should vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF];

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL];

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND];

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE]; and

The Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN].

The result was announced—yeas 50, nays 12, as follows:

YEAS—50.

Ashurst	Jones, Wash.	Myers	Sherman
Baird	Kellogg	Nelson	Smoot
Curtis	Kenyon	New	Spencer
Dillingham	Kirby	Norris	Sterling
Fernald	La Follette	Nugent	Sutherland
Fletcher	Lenroot	Penrose	Swanson
France	Lodge	Pittman	Thompson
Gay	McCumber	Poindexter	Vardaman
Gerry	McKellar	Pomerene	Warren
Gore	McLean	Ransdell	Watson
Henderson	McNary	Saulsbury	Wolcott
Johnson, Cal.	Martin, Va.	Shafroth
Johnson, S. Dak.	Moses	Sheppard

NAYS—12.

Bankhead	Martin, Ky.	Simmons	Thomas
Beckham	Overman	Smith, Ga.	Underwood
Hardwick	Pollock	Smith, S. C.	Williams

NOT VOTING—34.

Borah	Goff	Knox	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Gronna	Lewis	Smith, Mich.
Calder	Hale	Owen	Townsend
Chamberlain	Harding	Page	Trammell
Colt	Hitchcock	Phelan	Wadsworth
Culberson	Hollis	Reed	Walsh
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Robinson	Weeks
Fall	Kendrick	Shields
Frelinghuysen	King	Smith, Ariz.

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I should have liked very much to take up this afternoon the section of the bill repealing the zone system; but several Senators who desire to submit some remarks upon that section of the bill do not wish to begin so late in the afternoon. I am advised that it is necessary to have an executive session, and, therefore, Mr. President——

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, before the Senator moves an executive session there are two bills on the calendar, which have been reported from the Naval Affairs Committee, that ought to be passed. We have saved some little time on the pending bill on account of not having had a morning hour, and I should like to have the bill laid aside temporarily in order that the bills on the calendar may be passed.

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator for that purpose; and I ask unanimous consent to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business. I understand from the Senator from Virginia that the bills to which he refers will take only a few minutes.

Mr. SWANSON. Only a few minutes. I do not think there will be any objection to them. They are reported unanimously from the Naval Affairs Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to laying aside temporarily the unfinished business? The Chair hears none.

PURCHASE OF UNIFORMS.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12945, providing for the purchase of uniforms, accouterments, and equipment by officers of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, and midshipmen at the Naval Academy, from the Government at cost.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter uniforms, accouterments, and equipment shall, upon the request of any officer of the Navy or any officer of the Marine Corps or any officer of the Coast Guard while operating with the Navy or any midshipman at the Naval Academy or cadets at the Coast Guard Academy, be furnished by the Government at cost, subject to such restrictions and regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TEMPORARY PROMOTIONS IN THE MARINE CORPS.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 12916, to provide for the temporary promotion of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps serving with the Army.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I should like to have the bill read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That commissioned officers of the Marine Corps detached for duty with the Army under the provisions of section 1621, Revised Statutes, shall be eligible, in the same manner as officers of the Regular Army, for temporary promotion to higher grades in any of the forces provided by the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917: Provided, That officers of the Marine Corps temporarily promoted to higher grades in any of the forces of the Army under the provisions of this act shall not thereby vacate their permanent appointments or commissions, or be prejudiced in their relative lineal standing in the Marine Corps: Provided further, That temporary vacancies in the Marine Corps caused by the appointment of officers to higher grades in the Army shall be temporarily filled in the same manner as is now prescribed by law: And provided further, That the temporary promotions herein authorized shall continue only while such officers are detached for duty with the Army.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. What is the purpose of this sort of legislation with the war over and with the demobilization of the Marine Corps to a large extent in prospect?

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the Marine Corps have been brigaded with the Army. They have several brigades that have been serving with the Army in Europe. They have served gallantly. This bill simply gives them the same right of temporary promotions that has been accorded to the Army. After they have been temporarily promoted in the Army the question arises as to whether they revert back to their permanent places in the Marine Corps, which is under the Navy; and the question also arises, after they have had these temporary promotions that have been accorded them on account of gallantry and superb conduct and bravery in the Army, as to whether their positions in the Marine Corps are thereby vacated. This bill gives them the right of having temporary promotions while serving with the Army equal to an Army officer, which is a right they ought to have. It then provides that when they have thus been promoted that fact shall not deprive them of the permanent positions which they had previously in the Marine Corps. It is a measure of justice and right, and the record of the Marine Corps is such that they are entitled to this consideration. The question has arisen as to whether they do not vacate their permanent appointments in the Marine Corps in case they are temporarily appointed to positions in the Army.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to say, if the Senator from Virginia will permit me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SWANSON. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. It is true, I think, as the Senator from Virginia knows and other Senators perhaps do not know, that the Marine Corps is assimilated throughout on Army rank and Army pay; and this is simply to relieve what might be a very considerable injustice.

Mr. SWANSON. In addition to that the Marine Corps is legislated for in connection with the Navy and the positions that they can get in the Navy are fixed; and a question might arise as to whether these temporary appointments that have been or will be accorded them are in accordance with the law.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I understand that this bill puts them on precisely the same plane as the Army?

Mr. SWANSON. Precisely, for temporary appointments. While serving with the Army they are entitled to temporary promotions like officers of the Regular Army—no more and no less. When they have these temporary appointments in the Army and are promoted as such the bill provides that they shall not vacate the appointments that they have in the permanent Marine Corps. I can see no objection to it. It is a matter of justice and right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR GALLINGER.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate shall convene on Sunday, January 19, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m., to consider resolutions in commemoration of the life, character, and public services of the late Senator from New Hampshire, Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection? There is none, and it is so ordered.

RECESS.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, December 19, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate December 18 (legislative day of December 15), 1918.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Charles J. Cronan, of Louisville, Ky., to be collector of internal revenue for the fifth district of Kentucky, in place of Thomas Scott Mayes, resigned.

MEMBER OF BOARD OF GENERAL APPRAISERS.

George E. Weller, of New York, N. Y., to be a member of the board of general appraisers of merchandise at New York, to fill an existing vacancy.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate December 18 (legislative day of December 15), 1918.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

Julian P. Alexander to be United States attorney, southern district of Mississippi.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Richard I. Lawson to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 38, with headquarters at Detroit, Mich.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Bertram Gardner to be collector of internal revenue for the first district of New York.

POSTMASTERS.

DELAWARE.

Rhubert R. German, Delmar.
Alfred L. Cummins, Smyrna.

LOUISIANA.

John D. Fultz, Newellton.
Jesse L. Fowler, Oak Grove.
Lillian E. Collins, West Monroe.
Thomas Siddon, Winnsboro.

OHIO.

George R. Irwin, Upper Sandusky.

OREGON.

Henry H. McReynolds, Pilot Rock.
Exel Vogel, Rainier.
Richard H. Yates, Willamina.
Guy W. Brace, Yamhill.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 18, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Rev. Earle Wilfley, D. D., of the Vermont Avenue Christian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O God, we pray Thee this morning that across the pathway of duty as it lies before us may shine the illumination of Thy holy will. We pray that among the nations of the earth Thy will may be known more and more as the days go by, and, when clearly known, may men be constrained to do it. Bless our own country as it strives to do Thy righteous will, and may those in authority and those who are in this Congress be pleased to find Thy will and be courageous to do it. So wilt Thou bless the deeds of this day in the Congress of our country. For Thy name's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

TRANSPORTATION OF GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report on the bill H. R. 13261, and I ask unanimous consent to have it taken up without printing under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to take up this conference report without having it printed under the rules. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, has the gentleman made any other change?

Mr. SHERLEY. The House conferees receded from the amendment which gave 20 days in connection with the proving up of claims for transportation in place of lesser time, and the House agreed to the Senate amendment with an amendment touching the date that the act would be in effect. The House passed it as of the 31st of March; the Senate passed it as of the 15th of January, and the conferees agreed on the 20th of February.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this conference report? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following are the conference report and statement:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13261) providing for the transportation from the District of Columbia of governmental employees whose services no longer are required, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: "February 20"; and the Senate agree to the same.

SWAGAR SHERLEY,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
FRED'K H. GILLETT,
Managers on the part of the House.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,
O. W. UNDERWOOD,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13261) providing for the transportation from the District of Columbia of governmental employees whose services no longer are required, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee in the accompanying conference report as to each of the said amendments, namely:

On No. 1: Fixes February 20, 1919, instead of January 15, as proposed by the Senate, and March 31, as proposed by the House, as the date on or before which employees must be separated from the service in order to come within the benefits of the bill.

On No. 2: Extends the time from 10 to 20 days, as proposed by the Senate, within which employees who have been separated from the service between November 11, 1918, and the date of the passage of this act must apply for transportation.

SWAGAR SHERLEY,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
FRED'K H. GILLETT,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

RETURN OF HOUSE BILL 12001 FOR CORRECTION.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 483.

Resolved, That House bill 12001, having been passed by the House on the 13th instant and erroneously transcribed as fixing the salaries of circuit judges at $7,500 instead of $8,500 per annum, as fixed by the House, and so erroneously transcribed messaged to the Senate on the 16th instant, the Senate be respectfully requested to return same for correction.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

AVIATION RECORD, SOUTHER FIELD, AMERICUS, GA.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to address the House for not exceeding two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker and gentleman of the House, yesterday, when the Post Office bill was up for consideration, we had under discussion the question of aeronautic service. I was in the chair presiding over the committee and did not take part in the debate.

I have some statistics relative to one of the aviation camps, located at my home, Americus, Ga., that I think would be a valuable contribution to the debate, and I have asked this time to give you the benefit of those statistics.

The commandant of that camp is Maj. Carlisle Hilton Wash, a West Pointer, appointed from Minneapolis, Minn., and he himself a very distinguished flier. While at home during the recess of Congress he gave me these figures as to the record of Souther Field, Americus, Ga. The camp was completed this year, and cadets first arrived about May. From that time up to the 5th of November there were graduated as pilots from that camp 227 cadets. The cadets and officers of the camp had been in the air 20,000 hours. They had flown 1,200,000 miles, equivalent to about 50 times around the world, and with that record they had only one serious accident. I think this is the best record of any camp in the United States. [Applause.]

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] is recognized.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13308, the Post Office appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 13308, the Post Office appropriation bill, with Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the House rose yesterday afternoon an amendment was pending, proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], to which a point of order was made, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of saving the time of the committee by not offering further amendments, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment that was pending when the committee rose last evening and to offer a new amendment, which embodies all the points that I desired to raise. I will then offer no further amendments after this amendment is disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment and to offer a new amendment in lieu thereof. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the Garrett amendment by Mr. GREEN of Iowa: After the word "aeroplanes," in the first line, strike out "$59,825,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$59,625,000"; after the word "exceeding," in the second proviso, strike out "$500,000" and insert "$300,000" in lieu thereof; and at the end of the amendment, after the words "aeroplane service," strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the following: "and that no part of this sum shall be expended for the maintenance or operation of the aeroplanes above directed to be delivered to the Postmaster General by the Secretary of War, which shall be operated and maintained by the personnel of the air service of the Army."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in this particular case, this matter having been gone over at some length, I ask that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] make his point of order now, so that we can dispose of it.

Mr. MOON. I do not know for sure that the point of order is well taken. I may withdraw it later, but I reserve it in the meantime.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the section read as it is now written.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this will not be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and then the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN]. Of course, it will not be taken out of the time of the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee: Strike out all of the paragraph beginning with line 7 and insert:

"For inland transportation by railroad routes and aeroplanes, $59,825,000: Provided, That not to exceed $1,000,000 be expended for payment of freight and incidental charges for the transportation of mails conveyed under special arrangements in freight trains or otherwise"——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, either the Clerk did not understand the direction of the Chair or I did not. I understood that the Chair directed that the Garrett amendment be read first and then that my amendment be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk is reading the Garrett amendment. The Clerk will read the Garrett amendment as it now stands before the committee, and after that is read he will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee offers the following: Strike out the paragraph beginning with line 7 and insert:

"For inland transportation by railroad routes and aeroplanes, $59,825,000: Provided, That not to exceed $1,000,000 be expended for payment of freight and incidental charges for the transportation of mails conveyed under special arrangements in freight trains or otherwise: Provided further, That out of this appropriation the Postmaster General is authorized to expend not exceeding $500,000 for the purchase of aeroplanes and the operation and maintenance of aeroplane service between such places as may be determined: Provided further, That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to deliver immediately to the Postmaster General 100 De Haviland 4 aeroplanes, 100 Handley-Pages, 10 Glen Martin day bombers, all planes completely assembled and with the necessary spare parts; also 100 extra Liberty engines with spare parts, 50 Hispano-Suiza engines with 300-horsepower motors, and 20 Hispano-Suiza engines with 150-horsepower motors, the same to be out of any equipment that the War Department has on hand or under construction, the War Department appropriation to be credited with the equipment turned over to the Post Office Department: And provided further, That separate accounts be kept of the amount expended for aeroplane service."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa proposes to add an amendment to follow this.

Mr. MANN. The Clerk did not finish reading the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs the committee's pardon. The Chair thought he had.

Mr. MANN. The committee amended the amendment. That part has not been read yet.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The committee had adopted the Stafford amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk omitted to read the Stafford amendment, adopted into the Garrett amendment. The Clerk will read it again. The Clerk will read the Garrett amendment with the Stafford amendment incorporated.

Mr. MANN. It came in at the end.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; it came in the middle.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Garrett amendment, as modified by the Stafford amendment: Strike out the paragraph beginning with line 7 and insert:

"For inland transportation by railroad routes and aeroplanes, $59,825,000: Provided, That not to exceed $1,000,000 be expended for payment of freight and incidental charges for the transportation of mails conveyed under special arrangements in freight trains or otherwise: Provided further, That out of this appropriation the Postmaster General is authorized to expend not exceeding $500,000 for the purchase of aeroplanes and the operation and maintenance of aeroplane service between such places as may be determined; and that the Postmaster General in expending the appropriation herein for aeroplane service shall purchase, so far as possible, the aeroplanes, motors, equipment, and supplies from the War Department and Navy Department when no longer required, because of the cessation of war activities. It shall be the duty of the Postmaster General before purchasing any of such articles to ascertain whether the War or Navy Department has articles of the character described that are serviceable, and articles purchased from either of said departments, if the same have not been used, shall be paid for at a reasonable price, not to exceed actual cost, and if the same have been used, at a reasonable price based upon length of usage. Said departments are authorized to sell such articles to the Post Office Department under the conditions specified, and the proceeds of such sales shall be covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt: Provided further, That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to deliver immediately to the Postmaster General 100 De Haviland 4 aeroplanes, 100 Handley-Pages, 10 Glen Martin day bombers, all planes completely assembled and with the necessary spare parts; also 100 extra Liberty engines with spare parts, 50 Hispano-Suiza engines with 300-horsepower motors and 20 Hispano-Suiza engines with 150-horsepower motors, the same to be out of any equipment that the War Department has on hand or under construction, the War Department appropriation to be credited with the equipment turned over to the Post Office Department: And provided further, That separate accounts be kept of the amount expended for aeroplane service."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment to add to that amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GREEN of Iowa: After the word "aeroplanes" in the first line strike out "$59,825,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$59,625,000"; after the word "exceeding" in the second proviso strike out "$500,000" and insert "$300,000" in lieu thereof; at the end of the amendment, after the words "aeroplane service," strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the following: "and that no part of said sums shall be expended for the maintenance or operation of the aeroplanes above directed to be delivered to the Postmaster General by the Secretary of War, which shall be operated and maintained by the personnel air service of the Army."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the effect of my amendment may be briefly stated by saying that it would carry out what was proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA]. The House has already voted, in effect, although the Garrett amendment has not actually been adopted, for the turning over to the Post Office Department of a large number of planes—I think altogether 150—by the War Department.

In the Garrett amendment as it stands there is a provision for the use of $500,000 for operating and maintenance of aeroplanes by the Post Office Department. My amendment reduces the total carried by the paragraph $200,000, and in order to make up for that reduction, in order to fix matters so that the reduction can be made, it provides that the planes which are turned over by the War Department shall be operated by the air personnel or air service of the War Department.

Some objection has been made when the question was brought up before that this is hardly practicable, that it can not be carried out, in fact. This argument has only been adduced by gentlemen, although of high ability and judgment, who never had any practical experience in military affairs or in the operation of aeroplanes. The two gentlemen who have spoken on the subject, who have large experience and, I think, are high authority on the subject, are the gentleman from Connecticut, Col. TILSON, and the gentleman from New York, Maj. LAGUARDIA. Col. TILSON has had a long experience in the management of military affairs as an officer in the service, and he says it is entirely practicable; that there is not difficulty at all about carrying it out. Maj. LAGUARDIA has had extensive experience with aeroplanes, both in their operation and maintenance, and he says it is perfectly practicable and can be easily carried out. The House is aware, of course, that he is an experienced and highly successful flyer.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. MOON. It seems to me that this is a postal matter and a postal function. What experience has Maj. LAGUARDIA or Col. TILSON in postal affairs?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman will allow me to reply in the same manner, what experience has an engineer on a railroad in postal matters? And yet he is able to take the trains along and carry the mails.

Mr. MOON. That is not the question you are dealing with here.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Exactly; it is the operation and maintenance of planes which are provided for just the same as the engineer operates the engine and looks after its maintenance and repair.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. With pleasure, to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. The operation by the Army would not determine what mail should be carried, but that would be under the direction, so far as the service is concerned, of the Postmaster General.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Exactly.

Mr. CANNON. That was my understanding, and I wanted to be sure that I was right.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois expressed the relation exactly. That is what would take place—the time the mail is to be carried, its destination, when it shall start, the amount that is to be carried—all would be under the direction of the Post Office Department. A great saving would be made thereby, and I have accordingly cut down the appropriation by my amendment.

Now, I wish to comment upon some of the remarks of the gentleman now in the chair before we went into Committee of the Whole this morning. He stated that in one of these aviation camps flights had been carried on sufficiently to carry a man in a straight line fifty times around the earth. Think of it! It was all to no purpose except to give the aviators experience in flying. Otherwise all this time was wasted, and probably a million dollars spent. Yet it might just as well have been used, as the gentleman from New York, Maj. LAGUARDIA, says, in the work of carrying the aeroplane mails as a part of the training for military operations. In the post-office work there would be no use of learning stunts necessary for the operation of machines in the air for military purposes, but as the gentleman from New York well remarked, in order to first perform these stunts it is necessary to have experience in straight flights, it is necessary to get accustomed to air currents in the handling of the aeroplane, and numerous other conditions that might all be learned by the operation of these planes in the post-office service.

I can see no good reason whatever for not accepting this amendment. The matter has been argued so well by other gentlemen that I do not care to dwell on the subject further.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I reserved a point of order on the amendment, but I take it that probably the gentleman's amendment is in order coming under the provisions of the Holman rule, and I therefore will not insist on the point of order. But I want to insist to the House that it is not a good thing or a wise system of administration for the functions of one department to be performed by another and be under the control of another department of the Government. They ought not to be mixed in that way. It does not make for good government nor for a good service.

It evidently is true that those who are experienced as aviators would make the best drivers of machines for carrying the mails, but it does not necessarily follow because that class of men are in the service of the War Department that the War Department should take over the Postal Service that they might perform it. It might be well if a provision was made in the bill for the employment of these men in the Post Office Department and under the direction of the Postmaster General. It is very clear in my mind that differences between the departments will arise on matters of this sort, as they have already arisen between the officers of the War Department and the Post Office as to turning over these machines.

The War Department refuses absolutely to turn over the machines to the Post Office Department, notwithstanding the act of Congress, because within that act they have the discretion to retain the machines. There is no desire in the world to do anything more than to promote to the utmost this service. It is an experimental service. It is one that may turn out to be valuable; it is one that we may feel later on we ought to discard; but the experiment wholly and completely ought to be under the jurisdiction of that branch of the Government that is carrying the mail, and the War Department ought not to have anything to do with it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. It may be all right if you provide in some amendment a means by which we can use the aviators, but do not put the carrying of any part of this mail directly or indirectly under the War Department. It is not the proper place for it. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman refers to the fact that the War Department heretofore has refused to turn over these planes, but we have already in effect adopted a provision which would remedy that part of it.

Mr. MOON. I know, but I refer to it not that there may be so much trouble about it hereafter, but in order to refer to the fact that where a duty is imposed on two instead of one conflicts will arise, and they are more likely to arise from this matter than anything else.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The Postal Department has nothing to do with fixing the train schedules. Those are all fixed by the railway authorities. They determine when they shall run their trains, and then the Post Office Department simply put their mail on the train.

Mr. MOON. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken about that. The department has the power to fix the schedules by which this mail is carried on the train, and it did fix them for years, and I believe still fixes the schedules for special trains on the southern roads. As a rule the gentleman is correct—the railroads do fix their own schedules, and if it suits the convenience of the department well and good, but where it does not suit the convenience of the department an order is made through the department requiring certain trains to be run.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I was about to go further and say in this connection that under the provisions of my amendment the Post Office authorities would be given greater authority than they have over the running of the railroad trains.

Mr. MOON. Why do you want to tie them up with the War Department? Why not keep these departments separate?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. To save money.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman from Georgia directed our attention, before the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole, to the fact that a large number of these young men have been trained at a camp in his section. There will be hundreds of young men trained and hundreds have already been trained to this work of flying. As a matter of fact, I understand that already hundreds of them are seeking some kind of service, and appeals have been made to the State Department to see if they could not secure some sort of service abroad for them. Those men are discharged from the military service and are ready to enter civil life. From this group of men the Post Office Department can secure a personnel for this service, and if the exigency of war should arise those men would return to the military service. That would keep your departments separate and keep down any friction.

Mr. MOON. I am very much obliged to my colleague for his suggestion, but as a matter of government we ought in all instances to keep these departments separate and apart in order that the responsibility may rest upon one and not upon two for good service. It is a matter about which I have not the slightest feeling. I think that it is wise and best, if we want to promote that service, to let the Post Office Department have exclusive control. I believe if you do not do that it will finally result in the disorganization and possible discontinuance of the service, even though it may be a very fine service.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think I appreciate the feeling of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], yet I am not able to agree with him. I do not think the Green amendment interferes in any way whatever with the conduct of the Post Office Department or with their control over the air service. The Green amendment provides only that, as to aeroplanes which are turned over by the Army to the Postmaster General, they shall be operated and maintained by the personnel of the War Department. That personnel will have no control over the regulations in regard to the transportation of mail. The provisions for the transportation and location of routes and times of departure, the question of how the mail shall be delivered at one end or obtained at the other will still be under the control of the Postmaster General.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I would prefer to make a consecutive statement, if the gentleman will pardon me. This is merely the practical operation of the aeroplanes in the air. The Postmaster General retains all other authority. Not only that, but under the Green amendment the Postmaster General would have $300,000 with which to operate an air service by civilians, if he desires to, under his own control. He can still continue his New York-Washington route under the operation of the same people now operating it. What is the sense of the Government having in its employ great numbers of men in the Army operating aeroplanes with nothing to do but to kill time or get themselves killed? Why should they not be authorized to transport the mails, if the Postmaster General desires to have it transported by aeroplane? Not only that, but we make special provision in case an Army officer is killed operating an aeroplane, and we make practically no provision in respect to civilians under the Postmaster General in case they are killed operating aeroplanes. Although I do not speak with knowledge, yet I have no doubt it will cost a great deal more to employ civilian aviators, per man, than it will Army aviators.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I prefer to make a consecutive statement. Whether that be the case or not, there is reason for it. It will eventually be the case, if we pursue the system, because we must take into consideration the danger of the service. You can not expect men to volunteer in a service which is liable or likely sooner or later to cost them their lives unless they receive higher compensation than they would for other services. Here is a practical business situation. It is idle to say that in a Government like ours we are unable to coordinate two branches of the Government and, therefore, must duplicate the work of the two. It is a reflection upon the Government itself and upon our form of Government if we beg the question by saying that we have the capacity to do the work with the War Department, but, forsooth, because they may not be able to agree between the War Department and the Post Office Department, therefore we leave the War Department service idle and build up a new service for the Post Office Department.

If that is the contention of the gentleman from Tennessee, instead of making it he ought to endeavor to provide a way to avoid the trouble. If we have reached that point in government where we are so complicated, so involved, that we have to duplicate services, for God's sake let us endeavor to simplify the work of government instead of going ahead with uneconomical, extravagant duplications. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had agreed to recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], if he desires it.

Mr. CANNON. I will apply for recognition later.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I think my record in the House will establish that I stand for economy as much as the average Member. But this proposition to place one branch of the Postal Service under the control of the military branch appeals to me as an unwise proposition, and would neither effect economy or efficiency. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks the question, Why have a number of aviators in the Army with nothing to do but fly? It might be just as reasonable to ask the question, Why have men in the Regular Army with nothing to do but fight? Why not put them out to building roads? If you have got men in the Army who are railroad engineers, why not detail them to Director General McAdoo and put them to running the trains of the country? The gentleman from Illinois might as well ask the question, If you have got men in the Navy of the United States in time of peace with nothing to do, why not transfer them to the merchant marine and private merchant ships instead of using them on our great battleships that sail the seas? There is no logic, gentlemen, for his argument. The Army and the Navy ought to keep in times of peace only enough men in the Aviation Service that is deemed wise and prudent as a nucleus for expansion in time of war. We certainly would not need to keep them in the Army to run the Postal Service. That would be about as foolish a proposition as I ever heard of.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. As far as the comparison the gentleman makes with reference to the merchant marine, I think it might well be operated by the Navy under certain circumstances. Now——

Mr. BLACK. Let me answer the gentleman's question before I yield further. Would the gentleman advocate the putting of our battleships in dry dock during time of peace and turning over our Navy personnel to the merchant marine?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, yes; I am going to advocate the putting of a large number in dry docks. That is where they ought to be.

Mr. BLACK. I do not know what Congress will decide as to the future size of our Navy, but whatever that may be, I think it will be operated as a naval service and not a merchant marine.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The operation of these aeroplanes will be in a direct line with what these aviators will be doing in the Army.

Mr. BLACK. That may be true, but when they go out of the Army, as many of them will do very soon, they will be qualified to enter this Postal Service as civilian employees. Would that not be more in harmony with American precedents? Now, let me reply to one argument the gentleman from Iowa made. He cites the fact that the railroad companies in transporting the mail are not under the jurisdiction of the Postal Service. That is very true, but the gentleman will no doubt bear in mind that the men on the railway trains that have charge of the mail matter are the railway mail clerks, who are absolutely under the control of the Post Office Department and subject to its disciplinary rules and paid by its revenues.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does not the gentleman realize that an officer of the Post Office Department will be the person who will go with these aeroplanes and be in charge of the mail? The operator can not handle these sacks and attend to this.

Mr. BLACK. It is not at all necessary there be any distinction between the operator and the man who handles the sacks. All of these men ought to be under the control of the Postal Service. Why, gentlemen, if you adopt the Green amendment you will have men transporting the mail who are under the control and direction of the Secretary of War. If it should not suit their convenience to fly on a certain day, how is the Postmaster General going to give them orders that would be obeyed? It does not seem to me that there is any logic at all in the gentleman's position that the War Department should furnish the personnel to operate this aerial mail service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLACK. I would ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman requests that his time be extended for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLACK. I want to bring out this point: In the hearings before our committee it was developed that the Post Office Department has in mind the perfecting of an aeroplane whereby some mail can be assorted in transit, so that it will be ready for delivery when it reaches its destination in these large cities. In railway mail transportation a great deal of the mail is assorted in transit, and that is why its delivery is so rapidly expedited when it reaches its destination. Now, are we going to have these men, who are under the control of the Army—are we going to have them trained to the distribution of mail? I submit——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the gentleman will permit, can the gentleman enlighten us and give any details as to the improved machine which will deliver mail in transit?

Mr. BLACK. I want to say this: It is expected that the Post Office Department will be wise enough to make improvements in the service, and it is not expected that it will remain stationary and immovable. Of course the Post Office Department expects——

Mr. LAGUARDIA rose.

Mr. BLACK. I do not yield.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. They will have to show a more marked improvement in the service than they have shown for the last hundred years.

Mr. BLACK. I do not yield for any observation of that kind. The Post Office Department expects to develop this service and make a useful, practical thing out of it, and therefore we ought not to tie their hands, but ought to put it under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Post Office Department. If it succeeds, then the Post Office Department can take the credit. If it fails, the responsibility will be theirs. Looking at any phase of the matter, I do not think there should be a divided responsibility. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the Post Office Department does a very valuable service. The mails are carried and practically the great service of delivering the mail matter is through the railways. Of course we have the star service, let by contract. You have all the employees of the department that deliver the mail when it arrives at its destination, the carriers, and so forth, but I want to submit that this is an experiment. Why, think of it! An hour and 30 minutes from New York over here, so they say. Of course it takes more than one man. There will be an employee to care for the mail, so far as the delivery is concerned. The flier himself can not run his machine and handle the mail and deliver it. Of course we have traveling post offices on the railroad for distributing the mail, and so forth. Now, I do not know, I have my doubts, very serious doubts, with the telegraph and the telephone and the rapid railroad transit, whether this service will prove to be a valuable service, for the reasons assigned by my colleague from Illinois, and I heartily agree with him and with his reasoning in the premises.

I want to say another thing. The Postmaster General—and I have no attack to make on him personally—is for absorbing permanently railroads, telegraphs, telephones, and the air service. He is a radical Government-ownership man. Now, as we have these planes and as we have the men in the Army that would be glad, and more than enough, to operate them, men who are skilled already, trained, and we have 3,000 planes in this country, far more than would be used for the coming year, I want to submit, with all that Congress has to do in unscrambling the eggs, that this experiment can be tried, and tried with far less expense, tried by people who will fairly try it, so far as the operations of the machines are concerned, with those who are educated for it; and, of course, the mails would go under the direction of the Postmaster General.

Mr. AYRES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. Two departments have experimented with it. One has made practically a failure of it, and the other has met with fairly good success. Which would the gentleman prefer? That is the record made by the War Department and also by the Post Office Department.

Mr. CANNON. The two departments. All the Army would do with these planes that are under the direction of the Army would be to let the planes be operated by those who are already trained at the Government expense, and they could be operated less expensively in trying out this experiment than to let the Postmaster General train a lot of people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CANNON I would like two or three minutes further.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Illinois be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been reported twice. If the gentleman desires it, when the gentleman concludes the Chair will have it reported again. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. There is no more trouble in operating these planes by men in the service of the Army, already trained, than there is in operating the railways. The same argument that would prevent us in adopting this amendment would apply to the Government taking over the railroads.

Mr. MOON. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. MOON. I want to ask the gentleman what his construction of the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] is? Is he of the opinion that by the terms of that amendment the War Department would simply be compelled to turn over to the Post Office Department machines and aviators to be directed and controlled by the Post Office Department? Is that the extent of it?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no. As I understand the amendment, it would require the Army, which owns, so to speak, the planes, to have the trained men in the service of the Army to operate these planes as the Postmaster General might direct.

Mr. MOON. Then there would be no objection to placing at the end of this amendment, "under the control and direction of the Postmaster General"?

Mr. CANNON. Not at all, except this——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I would have no objection.

Mr. CANNON. So far as this is concerned, under the control and direction of the Postmaster General, not that he could remove an aviator, not that he could appoint an aviator, not that he could build an aeroplane, because, God knows, we have 3,000 of them in this country and I do not know how many in France, costing multiplied millions of dollars. I think they have spent for aviation something in the neighborhood of a billion of dollars. I do not want to place the operation and the flying of these machines under the Postmaster General. I am perfectly willing—and the amendment, as I understand it, would allow it—for the Postmaster General to establish the routes, whether they go to Chicago, whether they fly across the continent, or wherever they may be, in trying out this experiment. The Army would have no power in the premises touching that matter. And the Army, under the amendment, would be compelled to furnish the aeroplanes upon the routes as prescribed by the Postmaster General.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. CALDWELL. Does the gentleman know how many men there are in the Aviation Service who will be in four months after the terms of peace are signed?

Mr. CANNON. Enough of them, and five times over, to do this service, and men that are trained.

Mr. CALDWELL. Are not many of the men who are there now practically reserve officers, who came in under emergency legislation, and four months after peace is declared go out of the service?

Mr. CANNON. After all that is said, there are plenty of them there to operate all the machines and try out this experiment. I do not want to go and buy a lot of aeroplanes. I do not want to build aeroplanes. We have them already, and God knows, with the great burden that we are under to care for the interest on the public debt, to pay our debts, to bear all the burdens that result—and we are not going to shirk any of them—from this great struggle, I believe in being somewhat economical when it does not impair the public service. And therefore I shall vote for this amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, the Garrett amendment, as I understand it, provides already that these machines shall be turned over by the War Department to the Post Office Department, and the Green amendment provides that the sum of $300,000 shall be expended for maintenance and operation, and provides that no part of it shall be expended for the maintenance or operation of the aeroplanes above directed, to be delivered to the Postmaster General by the Secretary of War, which shall be operated and maintained by the personnel of the Air Service of the Army. Now, it strikes me that creates an inconsistency. I have the greatest confidence in the judgment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and his colleague [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] as to what should be done in regard to this aeroplane service. But I want to call attention to the fact that this money is taken out of the appropriation for transportation of mail by railways.

Now, the railway transportation of the mail is a contract service. The Post Office Department makes a contract. It may not be wholly voluntary on the part of these railroad companies, but it is considered a contract service; and the railroads agree to carry the mail at such and such a compensation, they furnishing all the machinery and the engines and the cars and the space that is required and all the equipment, and mail cars of steel, and the equipment for the distribution of mail, and so forth, all complete, with engines and cars and tracks and everything. They agree to furnish it at so much per pound, or at so much according to space, and the Post Office Department has the privilege of putting the clerks on to distribute the mail.

This amendment provides, first, that you compel the War Department to turn over flying machines to the Post Office Department, and then you compel the Army or the War Department to supply some of their personnel as aviators to run these machines, which the War Department has no control over. They will have been turned over to the Post Office Department.

Now, what can be the object of that? If you are going to have something analogous to the main provision relating to the Railway Mail Service, you want to require that the Post Office Department should enter into a contract with the War Department for carrying the mail by air. Then the airplanes would not have to be turned over to the Post Office Department, and the department which owns the airplanes would have the responsibility of keeping them in repair and would have responsibility for the safety of the fliers. As it is now, you compel the Army aviator to ride in a plane that is inspected and repaired and kept in condition by the Post Office Department.

There is no necessity for it. If you use any logic in this proposition, it would require that the Post Office Department do it all, simply requiring that the Post Office Department act as the proprietor of the business and let out a contract of carrying the mail by air, just as you let out contracts for carrying the mail by railway or steamboat or star route or motor-truck route or any other contract service.

It seems to me, if you adopt either of these amendments—and I should like to support them, deferring to the opinion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] and the opinions of the gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. CANNON and Mr. MANN]—you will involve us in an inconsistency and illogical situation that will require the War Department to furnish aviators to operate machines over which they have no control, although they are responsible for the life and safety of the personnel. The Post Office Department would not have the facilities, anyway, to take as good care of these machines as the department that owns them has, and the turning them over to the Post Office Department is superfluous and unnecessary.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I will be very brief, but I believe that the time for spending the people's money extravagantly, without questioning the purpose for which it is raised and spent, is nearly at an end.

During the war all men in Congress were patriotic and raised no question as to what use the people's money was going to be put in carrying on the war. Much of it has been extravagantly spent and hereafter will be accounted for with much criticism, perhaps.

I believe that to delegate to the Postmaster General the power to establish a system of mail carriage by the air service means the expenditure of not a few million dollars, but more than a billion dollars before long.

Personally—I speak for myself—I believe that it would be wise to place all of the air service under one department, a separate department. I do not believe it would be wise to delegate to the Postmaster General this authority and this power. He is wholly inexperienced and all the men under his control or in the Postal Service are inexperienced in the air service. We do have now some experienced men in the War Department, some experienced men in the air service.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will say that if my amendment does not prevail the Postmaster General will have a great deal more power than he would have otherwise.

Mr. FORDNEY. I agree with the gentleman. I am speaking in the interest of the gentleman's amendment. I concur with him in his views.

Now, to point out the incompetency of some men, let me tell you what may happen if we give this power to the Postmaster General. I had occasion a few days ago to ask for certain information about certain Army supplies. I found that at the time the armistice was signed we had 128,000 Cavalry horses owned by the Government. We had on hand 1,050,000 saddles for those 128,000 Cavalry horses.

Now, I mention this to show the incompetency of some men back of the management of these affairs. I will only mention that, but I could stand here and give you a dozen more illustrations of supplies on hand quite equal to the extravagance that I have mentioned in the purchase of Army supplies.

Mr. MOON. That was not the Post Office Department. It was the War Department.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, it was another instance of incompetency. I have no faith in the Postmaster General's knowledge of the air service in handling the mail, and therefore I am opposed to giving to him this great power to spend the people's money.

The time has come, my friends, when patriotism no more appropriates the people's money. I have stood here, as other men have, and voted for taxing the people to the extreme for money to carry on successfully this war, and we have succeeded. Now comes the time, my friends, to scrutinize closely the expenditure of large sums of money by this Government.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I would like to ask the gentleman if he proposes, in the line of the Green amendment, to make this experiment of carrying the mails by air with the War Department rather than with the Postmaster General?

Mr. FORDNEY. My good friend, it is useless for me to go over the ground that has been so thoroughly discussed here, and that is this: I do not want to interfere with the Postmaster General's management of the mails——

Mr. STERLING. I understand.

Mr. FORDNEY. But—wait a minute; you have asked a question; let me answer you—there is no more comparison between the two propositions than there is between the sun and the moon. The Army can manage the airplanes. Let the Postmaster General handle the mails, just as it is now handled on the railroads and on the steamboats of the country.

Mr. STERLING. I have great respect for the gentleman's position on all matters, because of his experience in business.

Mr. FORDNEY. I thank you.

Mr. STERLING. What I am trying to find out is, if the experiment is made under the supervision and control of the War Department and it proves to be a success, would it continue under the operation and control of the War Department? And does the gentleman believe, after all that the American people have sacrificed, not only in money but in lives and in the bodies and health of the men, that the people of this country are ready to turn over the control of any civil department to military operation and control?

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. President, I have stated that personally I am in favor of establishing a separate department for the air service.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; I think that is all right; but the gentleman would not turn it over to the military, would he?

Mr. FORDNEY. I have said, and I repeat, that the Army has experimented and does have some knowledge of the air service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for just one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORDNEY. Whatever experienced men we have now in the service are in the Army and the Navy and not in the Post Office Department. Therefore, if we put the control of aeroplanes under the War Department we will start out with some experienced men, whereas if we give the Postmaster General this power, he must learn the whole business, as must all the men who come under his control.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; although I have but a minute.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Hundreds of men who have been trained in aviation are being discharged from the military now.

Mr. FORDNEY. That is true, and rightfully so. I am in favor of discharging the men more rapidly than we are, but I presume all the machinery that is available is set at work in discharging our men now. That does not enter into this question at all.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Precisely. I think it does, because from that force the Postmaster General can draw experienced men to operate these machines.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, this matter has been discussed two or three hours, and all time allowed under the rules for the discussion of amendments long since has passed. I move that debate be now closed and that we take a vote on the proposition.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Tennessee is a privileged motion. The gentleman moves that debate on the paragraphs and amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. MOON. It is on this amendment and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the way the Chair stated it—on the paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand that the gentleman moves to close debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto?

Mr. MOON. I move to close debate on this amendment.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman was desirous of having an amendment offered to this amendment.

Mr. MOON. I have no objection to that, without debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's motion, as stated by the Chair, was to close debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I am going to modify that motion just a little. The gentleman from Iowa, I understand, wants to offer an amendment to his amendment, and I am willing to have that done. The gentleman from Mississippi desires five minutes, as does the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], and I move that all debate close on this amendment and all amendments thereto in 10 minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman let me have three minutes?

Mr. MOON. No; we have talked about this too much now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that all debate on the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment. The gentleman from Tennessee has indicated that he would like to see a modification of it, and, as I understand, said that if that modification were made there would be no objection on his part.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his modification.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Add at the end of my amendment the words "under the control and direction of the Postmaster General."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modify the amendment offered by Mr. GREEN of Iowa by adding at the end thereof the words "under the control and direction of the Postmaster General."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to further modify my amendment. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] whom we all know is an expert in drafting legislation has suggested that the word "which," after the words "Secretary of War" in my amendment, might possibly not be construed as a direction, but simply as a part of the limitation, which I did not intend, and he suggests that the words "but such machines," be substituted for that word. I ask unanimous consent to so modify the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to further modify his amendment as indicated by him, and the Clerk will read the suggested modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "which," after the words "Secretary of War," and insert in lieu thereof "but such machines."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the modification?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. There are four minutes of the time of the gentleman from Iowa left, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I hope the membership of the House will bear in mind that the air service in the War Department must go on, whether it carries the mail or not. It must go on so that we may have as a part of our national defense a well-trained, adequate air service. It is unthinkable that we should stop now and let this most important branch of our military service dwindle or decay. Unless we keep men engaged in it all of the time we are not going to have a trained air service. Therefore let us start with the proposition that, at any rate, we are going to have an air service in the War Department, that we are going to have plenty of trained fliers in the War Department, and that we are going to keep them flying, whether the mail is carried or not, whether the Post Office Department has an additional air service or not. If we have that, then, as a matter of economy, as a matter of good, sound business judgment, it seems to me the thing for us to do is to let that service, which must be flying anyway, carry the mail, as it can be done with little additional expense to the Government. In my judgment, no sufficient reason has been advocated here why that service, which must go on, should not also perform this additional service. For that reason it seems to me to be unwise for us to start here another department doing the very same work.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Certainly.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is it not true that the flying is the smallest part of aviation; that the great expense is the maintenance and repair; and if the Post Office were to take over the machines to be delivered to it, it has no facilities to take care of the machines or for repairing them—machines worth millions of dollars? The Post Office Department has no shops and no mechanics to take care of them.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman is entirely correct and speaks with knowledge based upon a wonderful experience in the military service. We must maintain a repair and maintenance service to keep these machines going, and it must be done under the War Department, whether there is any postal air service or not.

Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. Is it not a fact that if the repair business is done under the Army it will be done by enlisted men as soon as the Army is demobilized, and you will have enlisted men competing with organized labor?

Mr. TILSON. Such work must be done in this service just the same as in any other branch of the military service. The maintenance of the air service in a high state of efficiency, in peace as in war, is more important because it takes more expert training to fit a man to perform these duties than in any other branch of the military service.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in this aeroplane service. I am interested in the development of the service so that it may carry the express and the fast mail, and I look in time for it to carry passengers. But in my own mind I believe it to be unthinkable that you should turn over to the Post Office Department this branch of the military service of the War Department. I think it will result in a failure if you permit the War Department to have the training, manufacture, and control of aeroplanes until it gets into this service. So far as economy is concerned, everyone of you gentlemen know that there has not been an ounce of economy in the War Department in the time of peace. The training of the Army and the naval officers never made for economy. They have been educated by a Government that is rich; all Army engineers have been educated by a rich Government, and they never look at economical means to accomplish results. What they want is the result. Ask the man who built the canal and he will tell you that that is one of the faults that the Army engineers have had. If you want economical service, if you want efficient service, if you want to develop the aeroplane service, let the Post Office Department take advantage of it, assemble the experts, whose whole business will be not only to carry the mail but to develop the proper plane for economical and efficient carrying of the mail. If you permit the War Department to spend its time and energy in developing planes for military and bombing purposes, you will not have the experience in experimental matter in machines for carrying the mails; you will not get the imagination necessary for that development. You will make a mistake and you will be doomed to failure if you permit the development of the plane and the fliers to be left to the military arm of the service.

Another thing we must guard against in this demobilizing period is that we want to get the Government back into peaceful pursuits. I am one who will never admit that the Army or the Navy can do things in civil life as well as men in civil life. If this is granted in one instance, it will be asked for in others; and why not let them run the railroads, why not let them run the factories, why not let the Army run all the different departments of the Government and have a military government?

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I can not yield now.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to help the gentleman.

Mr. SISSON. Well, the gentleman can help me by voting.

Mr. MADDEN. I will do that.

Mr. SISSON. It will not do to let the military nose get under the tent, and the next Congress may be more militaristic than this if you adopt this amendment.

When this war is ended I hope to see the Army reduced to a minimum. If you love peace and want to develop this along peaceful lines, let us not encourage a more extensive Army.

They say that the aviators in the Army will not have much to do. I do not believe—and perhaps I have no right to speak, not being an expert, but I have a right to my opinion—that mere flying in carrying the mails will not develop a fighting man in the air. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired and all time has expired. The Chair will state the proposition before the committee to be passed upon: The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROBBINS] offered an amendment to strike out certain lines in a paragraph of the bill. To that amendment the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] offered a substitute. The substitute has been amended by the committee by the adoption of the Stafford amendment to the substitute. There is now pending to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee an amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], which will first be voted upon. The Chair will direct the Clerk to report the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Can we not have the paragraph read as it will read when amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph is stricken out and this is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Can we have the Garrett amendment reported with the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, that has been twice read this morning.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I admit that, but I was busy about something else.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee as amended be again read. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the substitute as it would read if amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote will first be taken on the amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

The question was taken; and on a division there were—74 ayes and 80 noes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 96, noes 82.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the adoption of the Garrett substitute as amended for the Robbins amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. CALDWELL) there were—ayes 110, noes 6.

So the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, the question is on agreeing to the Garrett substitute as amended.

The question was taken, and the Garrett substitute as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Railway Mail Service: For 15 division superintendents, at $3,250 each; 2 assistant superintendents, at $2,350 each; 15 assistant division superintendents, at $2,250 each; 115 chief clerks, at not exceeding $2,100 each; 432 clerks, grade 10, at not exceeding $1,800 each; 1,922 clerks, grade 9, at not exceeding $1,700 each; 375 clerks, grade 8, at not exceeding $1,600 each; 7,703 clerks, grade 7, at not exceeding $1,500 each; 952 clerks, grade 6, at not exceeding $1,400 each; 1,737 clerks, grade 5, at not exceeding $1,300 each; 2,721 clerks, grade 4, at not exceeding $1,200 each; 60 clerks, grade 3, at not exceeding $1,100 each; 4,666 clerks, grade 2, at not exceeding $1,000 each; 1,164 clerks, grade 1, at not exceeding $900 each; in all, $28,385,500: Provided, That railway postal clerks shall be credited with full time when deadheading under orders of the department, and the appointment and assignment of clerks hereunder shall be so made during the fiscal year as not to involve a greater aggregate expenditure than this sum; and, to enable the Postmaster General to reclassify the salaries of railway postal clerks and make necessary appointments and promotions, he may exceed the number of clerks in such of the grades as may be necessary: Provided, That the number of regular clerks in the aggregate as herein authorized be not exceeded.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, line 15, after the word "railway" insert "and substitute railway."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment I have offered is to enable the Post Office Department to credit substitute railway postal clerks for full time when deadheading under orders of the department; and in respect to the amendment I will state to the committee that the Second Assistant Postmaster General says that he now has no authority to credit a substitute with his time while he is deadheading under orders of the department, and that in many cases a hardship is thereby done the substitute, and he favors an amendment of this kind. I do not think it is necessary to argue it any further, unless the committee should have some objection.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I see no reason why the amendment should not be agreed to.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous equipment and supplies, including the purchase and repair of furniture, letter boxes, package boxes, posts, trucks, baskets, satchels, straps, letter-box paint, baling machines, perforating machines, duplicating machines, printing presses, directories, cleaning supplies, and the manufacture, repair, and exchange of equipment, the erection, manufacture, repair, and painting of letter-box equipment, and for the purchase and repair of presses and dies for use in the manufacture of letter boxes; for miscellaneous expenses in the preparation and publication of post-route maps and rural-delivery maps or blue prints, including tracing for photolithographic reproduction, and the Postmaster General may authorize the sale to the public of post-route maps and rural-delivery maps or blue prints at the cost of printing and 10 per cent thereof added, the proceeds of such sale to be used as a further appropriation for the preparation and publication of post-route maps and rural-delivery maps or blue prints; of this amount $1,500 may be expended in the purchase of atlases and geographical and technical works, and for other expenditures necessary and incidental to post offices of the first, second, and third classes, including offices of the fourth class having or to have rural-delivery service, $480,000.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill if they have adopted any standard for rural mail boxes? Do they require any uniform manufacture, make, or form in the case of these boxes?

Mr. MOON. What item, what page?

Mr. ROBBINS. In this paragraph they refer to letter boxes.

Mr. MOON. On page 20, is it?

Mr. ROBBINS. It is on page 20. It seems to be covered in this paragraph. Is there any uniformity required in the rural boxes that are put up by the patrons of the rural routes?

Mr. MOON. Well, I think the department has heretofore indicated the character of box that might be used upon a route, but there is no requirement.

Mr. ROBBINS. There is no required form other than that those placed by the patron should be accessible to the carrier?

Mr. MOON. I think so.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rental, purchase, exchange, and repair of canceling machines and motors, mechanical mail-handling apparatus, and other labor-saving devices, including cost of power in rented buildings, and miscellaneous expenses of installation and operation of same, including salaries of five traveling mechanicians and for per diem allowance of traveling mechanicians while actually traveling on official business away from their homes and their official domiciles at a rate to be fixed by the Postmaster General, not to exceed $4 per day, $337,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. May I inquire of the chairman of the committee, in reference to the rental of these canceling machines, what the annual rental is, what the purchases amount to now in place of rental, and if it is the policy of the department to purchase these machines instead of renting them whenever it is possible to do it?

Mr. MOON. Well, the department says in the hearing:

Estimate of the department is $337,000, a decrease of $86,000. That decrease is due to the fact that the department is now operating its own canceling machines. There will be no rented canceling machines in the Postal Service after December 31, 1918.

Mr. FOSTER. So they are not purchasing any at all?

Mr. MOON. They are not buying any at all.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the gentleman inform the committee how much these machines are costing—these large machines?

Mr. MOON. The individual machine?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MOON. No; I can not. It is in the hearing, perhaps, but I do not recall it.

Mr. FOSTER. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For experimental motor vehicle truck service in such localities of the United States as the Postmaster General may select, the establishment and extension of such service, the improvement of highways, the purchase, manufacture, exchange, and repair of equipment, supervision and maintenance, and expenses incidental to conveyance and marketing of produce and commodities, $1,000,000.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "the improvement of highways."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, line 18, after the word "service," strike out the words "the improvement of highways."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I hardly think it is necessary to take any time on that. I think that motion is a very good one, and I think it ought to be stricken out.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I now move to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$500,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, line 21, strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$500,000."

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Minnesota that we ought not to limit this matter too closely. Possibly $1,000,000 is a little excessive; suppose he makes his amendment $750,000.

Mr. STEENERSON. If the gentleman will permit me perhaps I will do that, but I want to say I have a letter from the department, from Mr. Blakslee, Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, and I would like to have it read and answer it. I will require about 10 minutes. It relates to this point. I ask that I may have 10 minutes.

Mr. MOON. I request that the gentleman have 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEENERSON. Now, I would like to have this letter read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the letter will be read in the time of the gentleman.

There was no objection.

The letter was read, as follows:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 17, 1918.

Hon. HALVOR STEENERSON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I note in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Monday, December 16, 1918, that you state—

"And the remarkable thing about this motor-truck service is that they parallel the railroads. They run parallel in most every instance to an existing railroad line, and the railroads, of course, are anxious for business."

Later you state:

"It must be that the Post Office Department intends to supplant railroads by motor trucks."

The hearings before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads will disclose that experimental motor vehicle truck service is to be established between any two large markets through producing territory not adjacent to rail or water transportation facilities. This is exactly what has occurred in every instance, except where road conditions would not permit any other method of operation unless adjacent to railroad lines. This only in a very limited number of instances.

You also state that under cross-examination it was admitted "that in arriving at income of motor-truck service on those routes they counted all the postage."

Any expert accountant will assure you that this method is pursued in all enterprises that maintain accurate income or cost records. Gross revenue is always reckoned on the basis of total amounts received and in making up cost sheets deductions are made for every item that should be properly charged against the total income. Therefore, in the hearings before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads it was clearly set forth that allowances had been made for war tax and for the treatment of mail prior to its receipt on motor-truck routes and its dispatch from termini thereof, together with every conceivable direct or indirect operating expense, including depreciation, interest on the investment, and replacement of equipment.

I note you fail to include in your remarks any reference to the mile cost of this service as compared to star contract service or rural delivery service.

You made inquiry by telephone of the department on these subjects.

The cost of star route service per mile is 11.8 cents; the cost of rural delivery service is 18.4 cents; the cost of motor vehicle truck service is 17.1 cents.

No doubt you overlooked these statistics on account of the many numerous items in the postal appropriation bill which you endeavored to explain.

I wish to thank you for your complimentary reference to my ability, and in return I feel sure that your well-known sense of fairness will prompt you to include this letter in the RECORD to correct any misunderstanding as to the intent of this service to parallel railroads or to take credit for earnings that belong to some other branch of the postal establishment.

My contention has always been that where the railroads should be used, use them; where the waterway should be used, use it; where the air lane should be used, use it; and where the highway should be used, I hope for your hearty cooperation.

Sincerely, yours,

JAS. I. BLAKSLEE,
Fourth Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, now it is unnecessary for me to say it was far from my intention to misrepresent anything that Mr. Blakslee has said, that the omission to mention the cost of rural service per mile, motor-truck service and contract service, the star-route service. The subject was not on my mind. I had very many subjects to deal with, and I had no intention to create a false impression by such omission. But what he mostly complains of here is a few remarks I made in reference to the inquiry of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN]. Mr. GREEN inquired about the calculations, whether they were too optimistic or not, and it was rather a little pleasantry on my part that in referring to the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General I described him as rather too sanguine about phenomenal returns of this service. Well, it was not my intention to reflect in any way upon the gentleman's ability or correctness or intended correctness in his testimony, but I did intend to indicate that he was a little too optimistic, that he was led too far afield by his vivid imagination.

Now, we all like an imaginative person. I do. I am very fond of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General personally. But he has, no doubt, a very vivid imagination, and he is an optimist, which is also creditable; but it is not always safe to follow the calculation of people who are so sanguine. Now, one of the points he makes in his letters is, that it does not parallel the railroads as I said it mostly did. Now, if you take the Postmaster General's report, where he deals with the subject, you will find in every instance so far as I can determine the motor-truck route starts from a railroad point, a railroad town, and ends in a railroad town, in most of the cases on the same railroad. The gentleman refers here to a blue print that he gave to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I have been unable to see it. Perhaps that blue print would indicate that the motor-truck route does bulge out, or makes a little departure from the straight line of the railroad. But in the sense I used it, I think it is fair to say that it is competitive with the railroads and that it is to a great extent competing. However, I wanted Mr. Blakslee's statement to go before the House, as it was far from my intention to misrepresent anything. I derived my information not from a blue print but from the general maps of the country, which give the railroads in this section, and, of course, they are drawn on rather a small scale, and when you only know the two termini of a road, and they both begin and end on the same railroad, you naturally conclude that it is a competing and parallel line.

The most important part of the letter is in reference to the calculating of the revenue, and he says that you should always include the total postage. He says that is the practice of accountants. That shows he has faith in accountants. He trusts blindly in them. But I submit that you can not always do that. You must think it out for yourself, if you want to arrive at the truth. Now, let us see what the result of this method of the accountants would be.

You take one of these motor-truck routes 100 miles long, and you credit the total postage. We will say that on the starting point and on the stopping places along the route he collects 100 pounds of first-class mail, and he collects 1,500 pounds of parcels, farm truck, and such things, which is the usual amount, say, 1,000 or 1,500 pounds. The revenue on that would be about a cent and a half a pound on the farm produce. Under the lower parcel rate for 150—that is, 5 cents for the first pound and 1 cent additional for each additional pound—fifteen hundred pounds would be $22.50. But the letter postage is 2 cents an ounce, which was the rate before the war, and would bring in 90 cents a pound, and 100 pounds would bring in $90, or, if it was 3 cents an ounce, it would be $135. And if you credit the route with the first-class postage, why, you can figure up a most wonderful income for that route. But if it did not go by motor route but went by rail then it would cost about 6½ to 7 cents per ton-mile, and you would have about 35 cents for the whole cost, if I figure it right in my head. A profit of $89 or $134, as the case might be, according to what rate of letter postage is charged.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEENERSON. I would like to have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEENERSON. So that the letter mail when it is paid by the pound is the most profitable thing and it pays for nearly the whole service. And, of course, if you are going to give the credit to the motor route for all the postage on first-class mail that passes over it, you include what it costs the Government to bring letters through, and so forth. However, Mr. Blakesley seems to think that it is right to credit the route with this postage on this profitable matter as correct. I can not agree with him. If we shipped the letters by rail it would only cost a few cents, and the rest would help to pay other postal expenses.

However, I submit his letter to the House for what it contains. I am afraid of this proposition. The gentleman is too sanguine. Every great man is sanguine. If Columbus had not been visionary and been gifted with great imagination, he would never have discovered America and we would not have been here. So I do not want to blame him for being too optimistic; but at the same time, inasmuch as we are holding the purse strings, I want to go a little slow, and I want to be a little careful. I would like to have an accountant, an inspector, an expert in journal business, go over these routes and inform Congress before we go to work to appropriate so much as this.

Now, the chairman of the committee has suggested that if the motion was to substitute $750,000 instead of $1,000,000 he might agree to it. However, I think it is fair to the House that we should vote on my motion to strike out $1,000,000 and insert $500,000. I understand there are others here on the floor that would like to increase it to $1,500,000. So you would have your choice. It seems to me it is a dangerous thing to place so much money in the hands of the department for this purpose, because you are simply duplicating other service to a very large extent; and you are entering upon a new field, and you will not know where it will end.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment. I understand the motion is to strike out of the bill $1,000,000 and insert $250,000.

Mr. STEENERSON. Five hundred thousand.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I offer a substitute for that, making it $1,500,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I would like to say a word in connection with the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute offered by Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia: Page 23, line 21, strike out "$1,000,000" and insert "$1,500,000."

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, if there is any one feature of this bill which should commend itself to the Representatives from the country districts, as most of us are, it is the provision for this motor service.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] indicated that he was afraid of these "experiments" (as he calls them), on the part of the Post Office Department. But, having in mind the experiment upon which we have entered in the aeroplane venture, we should not be afraid of experiments like this on firm ground. We are not "up in the air" with respect to this proposition, but on the sure foundation of the solid earth.

This proposition relates to a form of activity by the Post Office Department which will inevitably develop every area into which these projected lines will run. The scheme has been fully worked out on trial routes. It does not come before the committee enveloped in the uncertainty which surrounds the aeroplane project. While I believe that airplanes may be used in connection with the transportation of the mails and to a limited extent may be serviceable, yet I have no idea that any largely extended airplane service will ever be worth one tithe of the money that will be required to maintain it. The conditions of the enterprise limit its commercial feasibility.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MOON. As I understand the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], he is now willing to let the amount of $1,000,000, which the department desires, remain in the bill. He is willing to withdraw his amendment for $500,000. I think it would be a good idea for the gentleman from Virginia also to withdraw his amendment for $500,000 more, and let the amount remain in the bill as it is.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Well, if it is the sense of this committee, and the sense of the Committee on Post Office and Post Roads that this amount of $1,000,000 is as much as we should expend at this time in this connection, I would be willing under those circumstances to withdraw my amendment.

Mr. STEENERSON. I understand that the department never asked that the amount given by the committee be increased.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. So far as that is concerned, I am proposing that the House should increase this amount. As I have stated, this is one of the most fruitful and hopeful projects of development under the auspices of the Post Office Department which has come to my attention.

Mr. STEENERSON. The proposition of the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads was, as I understood it, the advisability of adhering to the committee's figures. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia that I am disposed to follow my distinguished colleague on the committee, the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Well, so far as I am concerned, I will complete the remarks that I had in mind in this connection.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Is the gentleman willing to limit this provision to the handling of rural mails, and not go into an experiment to show that motor trucks can successfully compete with railroad trains in carrying the mails? In order to make a good financial showing it is probably necessary that these motor-truck routes should run from one big city to another. If so, it is almost sure to parallel a railroad and duplicate what the railroad might do.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The experiment has been sufficiently tried out under practical conditions, to enable any open-minded investigator to conclude that it will be a success on a largely extended scale, indeed on a Nation-wide scale. I have examined some of the expense sheets in connection with this service, showing the expenses, and returns, and if these sheets may be relied upon the success of the experiment thus far has been simply wonderful. Having before us the main fact of these eminently successful trial routes, I see no reason why we should not extend this service, particularly in view of the liberal not to say extravagant amount which this bill provides for extensive experimentation in the air service, a field in which any ultimate outcome of commercial success is admittedly highly uncertain. The meager results which have been attained from experiments admittedly incomplete in the field of aerial mail transportation, do not justify the really gigantic sum which has been appropriated for further experimentation in this direction. Yet gentlemen who favored this fanciful scheme for handling the mails, begrudge any adequate sum for the development of a service which has successfully stood the rigid tests to which it has been subjected in the effort to ascertain its feasibility, and practical utility.

Mr. TILSON. Does not the gentleman see the distinction? In the case of the Air Service we must run the airplane as a part of our military program, in any event. We must keep the airplanes flying; but it is not necessary to keep the automobiles going.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I understand of course that now that the Army has a finger in the pie, my friend will support this fantastic project of experimenting with aeroplanes as a new instrumentality for transporting the mails, without regard to the likely chances of serious pecuniary loss that we confront in carrying out this enterprise. But this other experiment, as I have said, has been worked out, and the expense sheets show a most satisfactory and practical success in the operation of the service. For that reason I desire to see this enterprise which will be conducted on the solid ground, supported by such ample appropriations that it will affect with its benefits the people of the entire country. This enterprise enlists my support on the ground that it is feasible, practical, thoroughly worked out, beneficial alike to the people on the routes, and in the cities, and capable of practically indefinite expansion all the while paying its way in the process of extension.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] has withdrawn his amendment, but I want to make a few observations on this amendment anyway.

Mr. MOON. Can it not be understood, first, that both amendments are withdrawn, and then the gentleman from Illinois can proceed?

Mr. ROBBINS. I thought you agreed to $750,000 as to that item.

Mr. MOON. I understood that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] would withdraw his amendment, and that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] would withdraw his, and leave the amount as it is in the bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is not the proposition, as I understood it.

Mr. MOON. If that is not correct, the gentleman from Virginia is misinformed, and his amendment ought to be still pending.

Mr. STEENERSON. I said I understood that was the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee. I did not say that I would agree to it.

Mr. MOON. Will the gentleman agree to it?

Mr. STEENERSON. I am not prepared to do that.

Mr. MOON. I think we had better consider as pending the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. Both amendments could be withdrawn at the same time if desired.

Mr. MADDEN. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] will not prevail. I rather hope the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota will prevail, if it is still pending. I think I am authorized to say that I have had a talk with the Postmaster General in connection with this legislation, in the course of which he assured me—and he authorized me to say so if I chose to do it—that he is utterly opposed, to begin with, to any appropriation in this bill for the building of highways. That is already eliminated, so that that is not under discussion. He says that he has no purpose whatever to establish a comprehensive system of truck service. I have a great deal of admiration for the imagination of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Blakslee. He has just as much imagination as Mulberry Sellers ever had. He is one of the nicest fellows I ever knew, and personally I like him, and he has some good views, but he is overenthusiastic. I am afraid he is too optimistic about what the outcome of this system of service will be.

What I fear is if we establish the service on anything like the basis suggested it will be a good deal more of a pork barrel in the future than the river and harbor bill ever was, because everybody in Congress will want truck routes established in their district. Already, I think, appeals have been made for the establishment of truck lines where they ought not to be. I understand that the Posmaster General already has appointed a committee of experts to examine into the desirability of establishing this truck service, and that these men understand the Postal Service better than any others connected with the department. I understand that they are almost ready to report, and whatever their report may be I do not know, but I apprehend that it will not be very favorable to the establishment of these truck lines. There is no sense in having them. We ought not to be in the truck business; we ought not to be dealing in garden truck, for that is what this means. It seems to me that we are establishing automobile lines here, there, and everywhere, for the purpose of carrying products from the farm to the middlemen, and adding not to the economy of the consumer but to the profit of the men who sell to the consumer. We are doing it at the expense of the taxpayer. It is easy to figure out a large profit, but it is not so easy to prove that the profit figured out is there. As long as you have the Treasury of the United States behind any scheme that may be established from which to draw, of course, you can go on, but if you had to put this on a business basis, depending on its own earning power, without the right to draw against the Treasury of the United States for the deficiency, you would find out before 30 days that instead of making fabulous profits you were making fabulous losses. I dare anyone to undertake to prove that a profit has ever been made on any truck service that so far has been at work in the Post Office Department. You can not do it. Mr. Blakslee can do it, but, as I said, I have a good deal of admiration for Mr. Blakslee's imagination. If he only had the other ingredients of Col. Sellers that he never was able to find, the Post Office Department would be flying around the United States on wings, and you would never have to charge postage for any service rendered to the people. Mr. Blakslee has a scheme by which his imagination can work up into the clouds and from which profits rain into the coffers of the Treasury Department. If you would listen to Blakslee there would not be a highway in the United States that would not be rebuilt in the next six months out of the earnings in the truck service of the Post Office Department. And we would be unable to find men to build the roads these profits would build. We have over 2,000,000 miles of highways in the United States, but that would not satisfy Blakslee. He comes from Pennsylvania, where the air is rarified on account of the mountain scenery, and he imagines that everything is built on the basis of the mountains of Pennsylvania.

Why, Mr. Blakslee is one of those imaginary dreamers in the matter of post-office profits that nobody every heard of before. I do not say that in disparagement of Mr. Blakslee's ability. I like it, I like imagination; it takes a man with imagination to accomplish results, but he is going too far afield. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I usually find some ground on which my good friend from Illinois and I may stand together, but I can not agree with him on this proposition. This proposition is one that will bring very great benefits to the people of the country in the handling of their produce. It is one that will bring benefit to the merchant in the disposition of his goods and to the people of the country in the exchange of produce for cash, but I believe, too, it will reduce the cost of living to the masses of the people in the cities. I am not going into the argument which has been offered so ably and frequently in support of such propositions.

I want to observe the remarkable fact that when anything arises in the House for Government control, anything that promises direct and immediate benefit to the common people of the country, it obtains too much resistance on this floor. It is a remarkable fact that that is so, because the majority are from the country districts.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] said it has not been demonstrated that this is a profitable service. Who knows whether it is profitable or not? Not the gentleman from Illinois, not myself, not any other individual who has not been closely and intimately associated with the operation of this service. The Postmaster General ought to know, but the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General ought to know more about it than the Postmaster General does, because the Fourth Assistant has installed the service, and he shows in the report that it is not only a self-sustaining proposition but a money-making proposition. From the 1st of July to the 30th of September in the last fiscal year on 19 routes there was a profit of $18,889. If that goes through 250 routes which may possibly be established—and that is all that is going to be established—you will have a profit of $2,300,000 at least.

Now, whether there is a profit or not, if it was self-sustaining and gives to the country people an advantage to which they are entitled in moving the products, we ought not to hesitate to pass this provision.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that there has been no more important amendment proposed than the amendment for the experimental motor-truck service. I think Mr. Blakslee may be very enthusiastic, and yet I think he has reason to be congratulated on the success that he has made so far with this experimental truck service. This has been in operation for some time—more than a year, as I now recall—and he has demonstrated that it is a money-making part of the Postal Service and a great convenience to the people. These trucks go through the country, from one city to another, and gather up the produce that would probably not get to the market if it was not for this service. He has delivered it to the cities in quicker time than is ordinarily done and it has been sold to the consumer at a less price than the consumer has heretofore been compelled to pay. It seems to me when this service has been successful so far, that we ought not to cut down the appropriation, but rather that we ought to increase it so that the service be extended. I hope it will never be a pork barrel. It ought not to be. It ought to be established upon its merits and where it would be justified. I do believe we ought to continue it. If it is demonstrated that it is not a paying service, if it is not a benefit to the people, then it ought to be discontinued. So far the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General has demonstrated his ability to make it successful. If it is necessary to appropriate $1,500,000, $500,000 more than is already in the bill, we ought to do it. We ought not to cut down this appropriation at this time, but should give sufficient money to make this experiment, whether it be located in Illinois, or Pennsylvania, or Georgia, or any other State. I shall vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia so as to give this branch of the Postal Service a fair trial.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that this amendment to reduce the appropriation for the motor-truck service of the Post Office Department will not be adopted. On the contrary, the amount of $1,000,000 carried in the bill for this service should be doubled. No money expended by the Government at this time will bring more profitable returns than that used in expanding this method of direct communication between country and city.

It is a new service, but the initial appropriation of $300,000 made by Congress last year has produced results which warrant an extension of a chain of routes radiating from all the large cities of America to the farming communities within a radius of a hundred miles.

Experience with the routes now in operation demonstrate that this service is not only self-supporting but profitable to the Government. It costs $800 a month to operate the route between Washington and Philadelphia, and the gross earnings are $16,000 a month. Gen. Blakslee, of the Post Office Department, in his statement before the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, states that the gross earnings of the 19 motor-truck routes already established between July 1 and September 30 of this year were $292,024.95. On a yearly basis these 19 routes will produce revenues of more than a million dollars. Of course, the war-revenue tax on the mail matter and crediting to other branches of the service its share of the first-class mail matter carried would reduce this figure, but after making all allowances there is a substantial profit in the operation of each of these routes.

Now, these results have been obtained by individual dealing between the farmer in the country and the individual consumer or business firm in the city. When the disadvantages and difficulties of such dealing are taken into consideration, the showing made by these truck routes is but a faint idea of the possibilities of this service.

Daniel C. Roper, former First Assistant Postmaster General, in his book The United States Post Office states that the operation of the parcel post has proved "disappointing."

That is true, for in spite of the eagerness of the people to utilize the parcel-post facilities, there have been many difficulties, and even those who were most enthusiastic in the inauguration of the service five years ago to-day confess that those difficulties must be removed before the parcel-post idea in America can be acclaimed a real success.

But every one of those difficulties, so vitally affecting the success of this means of communication, arise from the lack of organization and cooperation between the consumers on one side and the producers on the other.

For instance, the expense of securing individual shipments of food products from the farmer to the city dweller is almost prohibitive. The expense of shipping a single dozen of eggs is so much greater in proportion than shipping a crate of eggs that it raises the price to a point which minimizes the value of the service.

Suppose a family in the city desires a dozen eggs a week and wishes to get them direct from the poultry yard in the country. It is necessary to buy a metal container, which costs $1. The postage is 7 cents on each dozen. Then letters must be written in ordering the eggs and in sending payment. Money orders require an additional fee. If the eggs are ordered from different producers, still more letters are necessary.

I believe it is a fair estimate to say that it costs 15 cents a dozen to buy eggs direct in this manner, which is entirely too high. The fact that this service has proved at all successful is due to the very earnest desire of many persons to secure fresh, wholesome products direct from the producer, for which they are willing to pay even the highest price.

But we should have this service of value to those who can not afford the highest price—to the average man both in the city and country.

How can this cost be lowered? Only by organization and combined action on the part of consumers and producers. Instead of individual, there must be collective dealing.

Suppose there were an organization of consumers in the city and of producers in the country, both acting as a unit, with a responsible agent for each association.

Thirty or more families desire a dozen eggs each week. The order goes in a single letter to the organization in the country. The standard 30-dozen crate, which costs 15 cents, is used. The postage on the entire crate is 65 cents. One letter carries the money order for payment. In this way eggs can be delivered direct at a transportation charge of 3 cents a dozen.

Fifteen cents a dozen by individual dealing; 3 cents a dozen by collective dealing. Those figures spell the difference between failure and success in this service.

But there is another great difficulty in the plan of individual dealing between producer and consumer. That is the inconvenience to the producer of handling many petty accounts. He must fill each individual container and ship it. He must keep his records and collect his bills from many customers, with the danger of loss in some of them. It is little wonder that many farmers, after having tried to deal direct with individual customers, have become discouraged and given it up. The inconvenience is too great and the farmers go back to the old methods of marketing.

But organized action does away with this difficulty entirely. The farmer is dealing through a responsible association with a responsible association. His eggs and other products are shipped in bulk and he is paid with one check instead of a score. He has no bad bills, for the collecting is made by the agent of the consumers when the products are delivered. It requires organized buying and selling to meet this difficulty, which has prevented the success of direct dealing.

Then there is a third difficulty with the system of individual dealing. The producers and consumers do not know each other. The man in the city does not know what farmers desire to sell their produce direct and the farmer does not know the city dweller who is longing for his products.

Since this motor-truck service was established some postmasters have published lists of the farmers along the routes who will sell produce direct. But after all a name means nothing to the consumer who desires mutually profitable relations, and little benefit has resulted from these lists.

Think of the difference when rural and city community are both organized. Responsible agents speak for each of them. The quantity of goods available and the prices are known and are sent to the city community. On one side the producers who have the commodities, on the other the consumers who desire them. Between them the motor transport service of the Post Office Department linking them up and uniting them in a profitable relationship.

This, then, is the problem of parcel post success. There must be organization both in city and country, at both ends of the line. Only when this is done can we expect success in the plan of getting the products of the farm direct to the table of the consumer.

Neighborhoods must be organized if this plan is to succeed. The unit of neighborhood in America is the public school district, and that is the logical basis for this marketing organization. The public-school building is located within convenient reach of the children of the neighborhood, and therefore of all the people as well.

This building belongs to all the people, not to a group. Whether all the children go to school in it or not, the fact remains that the building is built with public funds, to which all contribute. Every citizen shares with all the other citizens in the community of its ownership.

Every one of these buildings in America is capable of being used as the headquarters of the people of the neighborhood. They stand ready to hand to be used as stations of collection and distribution in the great movement to bring the consumers and producers together, through the agency of the Post Office Department, operated for public service.

Mr. Chairman, that the schoolhouse and the post office can be linked together in a successful effort of coordination is not a theory, it is a proven fact.

Here in Washington City the people of Park View district have organized their community in their schoolhouse. They have elected their officers, of whom the most important is the community secretary, Mr. J. G. McGrath, who is the responsible agent for the neighborhood in its marketing operations.

This organization has been in existence for two years and has been a splendid community center, where all the people come for recreation and for discussion of vital questions. It has made of Park View district a real neighborhood with a fraternity of feeling plainly evident. During the war the various war activities were presented at the community meetings and were entered upon with enthusiasm by the community. Each citizen gained through his membership in this all-inclusive organization the sense of "belonging" to America.

Three months ago the community secretary was appointed a postal-station agent and a complete post-office equipment was set up in the schoolhouse. This unprecedented arrangement, which should be the most natural combination of activities, has been a success from the first day. The people gladly avail themselves of the postal facilities in the schoolhouse and the receipts have increased rapidly.

Then came the question of using these facilities for the purpose of securing food products directly from the producer. The motor-truck service was utilized and orders were sent out to individual farmers. The result proved the advantages of buying direct, but there were difficulties which had to be overcome. It required the product of many farmers to supply the needs of the community, and a great deal of inconvenience was experienced in getting in touch with producers who desired to sell their produce in this manner.

Finally it was seen that the only solution is organization on the part of the producers. The shipments at the farm must be organized, and in the rural sections, too, the schoolhouse stands ready to be used for this purpose.

One of the motor-truck routes from Washington leads to Gettysburg, Pa. It traverses a good farming country for 80 miles and in no part of it parallels a railroad. In the past hundreds of tons of vegetables, fruit, and so forth, raised in this territory have been allowed to rot and waste simply because there was no connection with a market which offered profitable returns.

The route passes through Mount Joy Township, Adams County, Pa., which is on the edge of the historic battle field of Gettysburg. There only a few weeks ago was formed the first rural postal-school organization in the United States. The producers of the township, gathered in the Two Tavern schoolhouse, formed the Mount Joy Community Association. Mr. Rudisill, a former member of the State legislature, was elected president, and the public-school teacher was made the community secretary. This official is A. Nevin Sponsellor. His election as community secretary was by the people of the community, and by virtue of that election he has been made a postal agent of the motor transport service of the Post Office Department.

The motor truck stops each morning at the schoolhouse and picks up the crates of eggs, containers of butter, boxes of poultry, and other commodities collected there. These goods are delivered the same evening at the Park View schoolhouse in Washington and there distributed to the people of the community.

The list of prices is sent each week by the Mount Joy community secretary to the Park View community secretary. Orders are sent out and the goods shipped as desired. Payment is made by check weekly, and the community secretary at Mount Joy keeps the records of the shipments made by each farmer and makes payments accordingly.

It is the first direct communication between rural and urban communities by means of the motor transport service in American history. It is but the beginning, for already the Washington community is demanding more than the entire output of the township and other organizations are being formed to meet the demand.

Around that little town of Gettysburg 55 years ago was fought the greatest battle on American soil. For three days the red gods of war took mighty toll of blood and life. From that field the Confederacy reeled backward, facing a certain end. Sixty-six hundred men died there in fratricidal strife, brother slaying brother in a frenzy of wrath and hate.

It seems peculiarly appropriate that there, within sight of Cemetery Ridge and the Peach Orchard and the Wheat Field and the Round Top, should be organized the first community center in the linking up process of the Postal System and the public school, the community added to communication for a united, coordinated America.

There on the site of battle, where men went through blood and fire because of disunion and secession, began the movement for unity and cooperation. And the victory which is yet to be won and celebrated for this real fellowship and fraternity of America will be even more far-reaching than that which crowned the storm-swept crests of Gettysburg in those bloody days of sixty-three.

Here is the constitution adopted by the people of Mount Joy community assembled in the schoolhouse. It shows the many phases of activity possible to such organization of the citizenship and it will serve as a model for similar organizations elsewhere:

CONSTITUTION OF THE MOUNT JOY COMMUNITY ASSOCIATION.

We, the people of the United States residing in Mount Joy Township, Adams County, Pa., in order more perfectly to fulfill the obligations of our membership in humanity and of our citizenship in this Nation, this State, this county, and this township, and thus to secure the blessings of democracy to ourselves and our posterity, do constitute ourselves a community association, and, for our use and guidance, do ordain and establish this constitution:

ARTICLE I.—NAME.

The name of this organization is the Mount Joy Community Association.

ARTICLE II.—PURPOSE.

Our purpose in this association is orderly, all-sided, constructive conference upon public questions and practical cooperation in the common interest.

ARTICLE III.—MEMBERSHIP.

SECTION 1. Members: All citizens of the United States 21 years of age or over, both men and women, residing in Mount Joy Township are, by virtue of this national citizenship and this residence, members of this association, and have full and equal responsibility and right to attend all community meetings, to participate in all discussions, and, upon being registered or enrolled, to vote and otherwise share in the proper exercise of citizen authority in and through this association.

SEC. 2. Prospective members: All aliens 21 years of age or over, both men and women, residing in Mount Joy Township, who have declared their intention to become citizens are, by virtue of this declaration of intention and this residence, prospective members of this association, and as such may attend all community meetings and participate in all discussions, but may not vote, hold office, or otherwise share in the exercise of citizen authority in or through this association.

ARTICLE IV.—OFFICERS.

The officers of this association are president, vice president, and the community secretary.

ARTICLE V.—DUTIES OF OFFICERS.

SECTION 1. President: It is the duty of the president of this association to preside at all community meetings and to perform such other functions as are hereinafter prescribed.

SEC. 2. Vice president: It is the duty of the vice president of this association to preside at community meetings in the absence or at the request of the president.

SEC. 3. The community secretary: It is the duty of the community secretary to serve as the agent of the citizens of the United States residing in this township and constituting the membership of this association in officially communicating with and receiving official communications from national, State, and county representatives and administrators and in preparing for market and dispatching or ordering and receiving commodities for residents of this township as this association may direct; to serve as the clerk in connection with and at such community meetings as this association may direct to be called; inviting and arranging for the coming of such public officials, candidates for public office, or other speakers as the association may desire to hear; seeing that the school building is open and in readiness for each community meeting or other gathering arranged by or under the auspices of this association; being responsible to the board of school directors for assuring the observance of the board's regulations established to forward the rightful and prevent the improper use of the public-school property; keeping a correct roll of registered members and prospective members and a complete record of attendance, topics considered, principal speakers, and actions taken at each community meeting; to serve as custodian of all books, pamphlets, charts, pictures, and other informational or exhibit material belonging to, loaned to, or to be acquired by this association; cataloguing and arranging the same so as to facilitate its effective and proper use, and making available for signing such nominating, initiating, or other petitions, subscription rolls, lists of positions vacant, applications for employment, or other lists, forms, or files as the association may direct or the public need require to be compiled or kept; to serve as the executive of this association in arranging for such occasional or special programs, lectures, exhibits, entertainments, celebrations, festivals, and commemorations as this association may direct; in organizing and conducting the social and recreational activity of the youth and children of the township as this association may direct; and in managing whatever tax-maintained cooperative enterprise or enterprises or local branch of a national, State, or county enterprise or enterprises as may be established or authorized to be conducted in or in connection with this public-school building; to serve as supervisor of such dramatic, literary, or other special-group organizations, societies, clubs, or classes as may be formed under the auspices of this association or authorized to meet in this school building; and at all times and in every way to seek to assure a proper coordination and harmony between the instructional use of the public-school property for the children and its use by the older members of this community.

ARTICLE VI.—ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

The election of the officers of this association shall be by ballot. The officers elected at the time of organization shall serve until the annual community meeting, to be held in ———. Thereafter the term of each office shall be one year. Each officer shall serve until his successor shall have been duly installed. Any officer may be recalled at any regular community meeting upon a three-fourths vote of the members present, the association having determined by a two-thirds vote at a community meeting held at least two weeks before that the question of such officer's recall is to be voted on at such community meeting. In the event of the death, resignation, or recall of any officer, or in the event of failure on the part of the board of school directors to ratify the citizens' election of community secretary and to intrust to the person thus elected the care of the public-school property for its use outside of regular school hours, a special election shall be held upon arrangement with the board of school directors, due notice of such special election being given.

ARTICLE VII.—COMMITTEES.

There shall be six standing committees—the committee on food production and marketing, the committee on savings and investment, the committee on health and sanitation, the committee on recreation and the interests of youth, the committee on child welfare, and the executive committee. Special committees may be appointed from time to time as the association shall direct. The chairmen of all committees, except the executive, shall be named by the officers of the association, subject to the approval of the association. The chairman of each committee, except the executive, shall select the other members of his committee. The duties of the several committees, except the executive, shall be to cooperate with the community secretary in promoting understanding and effective action regarding the particular matters indicated by their respective titles, and to discharge such other functions as this association may direct. The officers of the association, together with the chairmen of the several committees, shall constitute the executive committee. The president of the association shall serve ex officio as chairman of the executive committee. The executive committee shall act as advisory council to the community secretary and discharge such other functions as the association may direct.

ARTICLE VIII.—MEETINGS.

A regular community meeting shall be held in the Two Taverns schoolhouse on Friday evening of each week, beginning at 8 o'clock. Special community meetings may be called at any time by the community secretary.

ARTICLE IX.—QUORUM.

Twenty members present at any regular community meeting and 40 members present at any special community meeting shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

ARTICLE X.—AMENDMENTS.

This constitution may be altered or amended by a two-thirds vote of the members present at any regular community meeting, the proposal to amend having been submitted in writing at a regular community meeting not less than two weeks prior to the meeting at which the proposed amendment is to be voted on.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

1. Call to order.
2. Reading of minutes of previous meeting.
3. Correction or approval of minutes of previous meeting.
4. Presentation of proclamations of the President of the United States or other official statements or communications from National, State, or county representatives or administrators.
5. Discussion and action regarding matters presented in official communications.
6. Reports of standing committees.
7. Reports of special committees.
8. Presentation of and discussion and action upon unfinished business.
9. Presentation of and discussion and action upon new business.
10. Address of evening or other special program.
11. Discussion and action upon matters presented in address of evening.
12. Adjournment.

(Music or other entertainment may, of course, precede and social activities follow this regular order of business.)

RULES OF PROCEDURE.

RULE 1. Parliamentary usage, as set forth in Robert's Rules of Order, and parliamentary courtesy shall be strictly observed in the conduct of all community meetings.

RULE 2. All participation in discussion, whether upon matters presented in official communications, unfinished or new business, or matters set forth in the address of the evening, shall relate directly to questions properly before the meeting at the time, and must have the character of orderly, all-sided, constructive conference. Otherwise it is out of order.

RULE 3. In all discussions speakers, except the speaker of the evening, shall be limited to five minutes each, with extension of time only by unanimous consent.

RULE 4. In all discussions no person may speak a second time until all others who wish to speak have spoken.

RULE 5. Before adjournment the speaker of the evening shall be given opportunity to sum up, answer questions, and close the discussion.

The order of business may be suspended or changed, and the rules of procedure may be altered, amended, or added to by a three-fourths vote of the members present at any regular or special community meeting.

More money paid to the producer, less money paid by the consumer; that is the record made by these initial organizations, the beginning of a movement which should soon be nation wide.

In Washington the prices of oysters have almost doubled in the past five years, while the price paid to the producer has remained stationary. For gathering the oysters, shucking, and so forth, the producer received about 75 cents a gallon. Those oysters were sold to the people of Washington at from 60 to 80 cents a quart.

A few months ago the Park View community association, of Washington, decided to establish direct connection with oyster farmers, using the motor transport service of the Post Office Department.

They engaged to buy the entire supply of Charles Connelly, of Britton Bay, at $1.50 a gallon. He agreed to furnish the containers and pay the postage.

Those oysters were delivered to the postal station at the Park View schoolhouse and were delivered to the people of the community at 40 cents a quart, which covers the entire cost of paper container, handling, wastage, and so forth. Of course, no profit was included, the public machinery of school and post office alone being used.

What has been the result? The first order was for 10 gallons a week. Within two months it had been made 35 gallons a week with the demand growing continuously. The producer having for the first time a sure and profitable market is developing a first-class oyster business. He is experimenting in an effort to produce the very best oysters possible. He is employing additional men at good wages and at steady work. The old uncertainty of delivery, the loss of all the oysters gathered for the day if the boat failed to arrive, which meant the total loss of food supplies, has given way to certainty. And the oysters gathered in the morning are served on the tables of Washington families that same evening.

Above all, the producer gets twice as much for his oysters as he ever received before and the consumer pays exactly half the price he was formerly compelled to pay.

If that is not an object lesson as to the mutual benefits of this community organization plus the post-office motor service, I do not know what could be.

When oysters can be handled to such advantage in this manner it goes without saying that many other food products can be handled still more advantageously. Eggs, butter, poultry, honey, apples, potatoes, and many other commodities can be easily transported by this motor-truck service. In fact, all of them have been successfully handled by the Park View organization.

For Thanksgiving the members of this community association purchased turkeys at 32 cents a pound when they were selling in the markets at 50 cents a pound.

Christmas trees which sold in the market for $1 added to the joy of the holiday in Park View homes just as successfully even though they only cost 25 cents. They had come direct from a schoolhouse community center in Maryland after having been cut in the woods by the schoolboys.

For Christmas in the Park View community an order was placed by Community Secretary McGrath, with Miss Love, community secretary of a newly organized rural neighborhood center in Maryland Springs, for 140 turkeys. Those turkey were brought to the schoolhouse by the producers and were shipped directly to the Washington schoolhouse on a post-office motor truck.

They were disposed of in less than an hour at 42 cents a pound. One thousand three hundred and sixty-eight pounds of turkeys, and they were carried out of the schoolhouse by men and women who have proven the value of this kind of collective action. These Washington City residents paid 42 cents a pound, an average of 15 cents a pound less than the price prevailing in the markets here.

But the turkey raisers in the country received 41 cents a pound, 6 cents a pound more than they were paid by the dealers in this city.

Such a demonstration shows the value of organized action. Six cents a pound more to the producer and 15 cents a pound less to the consumer ought to prove what this system of direct communication means when expanded to its possibilities. Give that kind of encouragement to the man who raises food products and it will increase production. It will prevent the loss of that which is raised. It will reduce the cost of living to the city dweller. It will bring both producers and consumers into closer contact, will develop better understanding between them, and make their business relations of mutual profit and benefit.

Almost every form of farm produce can be handled by this organized system. Park View School postal station has distributed chickens, turkeys, oysters, butter, eggs, potatoes, apples, cranberries, and other fruits. Mr. McGrath, community secretary, states that he is doing now a business of $200 a day and that his greatest difficulty is in securing the produce to meet the demand. Not a cent of profit is taken, it is carried on by public agencies in the schoolhouse by the post-office motor transport service and its advantages go wholly to the people themselves.

"Food—that is the future of freedom and peace." During the last two years the world's food and feeding problem was the trembling issue on which all the hopes of liberty for the world rested.

Now that the war is over, it is true that the task of producing and distributing the food which is necessary to the very life of every American holds its challenge just the same. The high cost of living is not a war product; it is a vital problem of peace.

People should live more cheaply in America than anywhere else on earth. We have unlimited resources; land enough to feed the world in abundance. We have not begun to crowd ourselves, for here there are only 33 persons to the square mile, while Belgium before the war supported 671 persons to the square mile. France had 191, England 379, and the other European nations were generally as thickly populated.

But in spite of marvelous advantages the prices of foodstuffs have been climbing steadily upward for years and have reached the point where many persons are unable to secure sufficient of these necessities to enable them to maintain proper physical conditions. The consumer is obliged to pay a vastly too large proportion of his day's work to secure these commodities of life.

I have heard men gravely declare that there is no answer to this flaming question. They state that prices of food must of necessity go higher and higher, and that hunger will always be the lot of some of the population of America.

I do not believe it. I will not believe that the Nation that can perfect the telephone and telegraph, the wireless, the flying machine, and a hundred other marvels of science, must halt helpless before this task. I will not believe that the America which would harness its energies into an invincible fighting machine in a single year's time must be forced to bow impotent before this problem.

The fact is that America has never tried to solve this problem in constructive fashion. While banking, transportation, industry have been highly organized, the mighty business of producing and distributing the food of the Nation has been left to blind chance. There has been no organized effort, only a medley of conflicting interests which injured producer and consumer alike.

Now let us try cooperation in the production and the distribution of food. The organization which has proved so effective in other lines will prove equally effective in this great work of feeding the people. The schoolhouses of America offer the logical centers for action, both in country and in city. Once the people realize the advantages, they will eagerly seize this opportunity for mutual benefit, as is proven by the many requests that have come from neighborhoods in the vicinity of Washington that schoolhouse organizations be formed.

And connecting these communities, like veins and arteries of the body, carrying the life-giving currents to every part, should be the motor-transport service of the Post Office Department. It is a public service of the people for the people and by the people.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that this motor transport service of the Post Office Department may be made as important an agency in peace as the motor transport service of the United States Army has been in war.

Over there in France the victories of Chateau Thierry and St. Mihiel were made possible because of those soldiers of transport and subsistence, who fought against a hundred obstacles, but who carried a burden of tonnage which is one of the marvels of the war. For every soldier in France it required 9 tons of supplies a year. These supplies were landed in great base depots in France and then were transported, mainly by motor trucks, to the front lines.

It was no accident that made those names in France stand for great deeds in American history. It was because the American machine that fed the fighting men was so well constructed that it met every need.

I saw great warehouses going up overnight. They were filled with supplies before they were roofed. Farms were turned into factories and swamps into teeming communities. We built a motor town in France almost as large as Detroit.

The roads were literally filled with trucks carrying supplies to the trenches. They ran up under the fire of the shells, and no braver feats were performed than those of the drivers who held the steering wheels and kept their trucks moving forward in momentary peril of dreadful death.

The service of supply it was called, and its scope and success over there gives us a sure faith that it can be made a great factor in the readjustment over here.

American soldiers were spread over 400 miles of communication. A million men were split up into units of from five hundred to a hundred thousand, and all had to be supplied. A 90-day reserve supply of food for the entire overseas force was necessary.

Every day tens of thousands of tons of supplies were landed at the ports. This was placed in base supply depots at the ports. Then it was taken to the intermediate supply depots and then farther up front to the advanced supply depots. Each one of these institutions was a city, with thousands of workers and every detail of a bustling, thriving community.

American soldiers were better fed than those of any other nation in this war. The meat ration was 20 ounces a day, the largest known army meat ration. There were vegetables, fruits, chocolate, coffee, and other components. All of these were collected, transported, and distributed by the wonderful organization of the service of supply.

The reserve rations, for use in emergency, such as breakdown in food supply in the rear, were brought up in motor trucks. Often a motor truck was used as a traveling commissary store and it brought its supplies up within gunshot of the enemy, but doing its service to the soldiers just the same.

I maintain that the same ability and genius which made possible the service of supply in France will make possible an even greater success of the service of supply in America.

Mr. Chairman, the motor transport service of the Army can be used in this new service of peace. Already this Congress has empowered the Secretary of War to turn over automobiles, trucks, and so forth, which may be of use to the Post Office Department. There are at least 50,000 trucks now in possession of the War Department which will admirably suit the purposes of this new service. The use of these for the transportation of commodities through territory not touched at present by any adequate means of communication will give employment to 50,000 soldiers who have been a part of the personnel of this war agency.

We are hearing much of the problems of demobilization and we are going forward largely in a planless way. Here is a practical way to guarantee to many thousands of returning soldiers useful employment, which will mean the welfare of the Nation. Here is a program of constructive development which will be of permanent benefit not only to the veterans but to all the people. In the midst of the parades and enthusiasm and red fire for the victorious soldiers of America we should show in practical fashion the real measure of public appreciation and gratitude.

The operation of this direct marketing plan between organized communities will show very soon, also, the importance of permanent road construction. A system of great trunk highways, crossing the continent east and west and north and south, can be built and paid for largely out of the receipts of this motor transport service of the Post Office Department. They would be post roads as intended by the Constitution, and would be Federal highways with connecting roads built by the States and local subdivisions.

No more important task could be undertaken by this Government now, and it would furnish constructive employment to thousands of those who are returning from overseas with experience in road construction in France and Italy and Belgium.

These roads, thus constructed, would bind the Nation together in a unity which would defy the barriers of sectionalism. They would result in better schools, for there is a direct relation between poor schools and poor roads. Children are kept from school by bad roads, and frequently the average small attendance is so greatly reduced that the efficiency of the one-room country school is materially affected. Good roads mean consolidated schools, with better educational facilities and with the pupils carried to and from the schoolhouse in motor trucks, which might also be a part of the post-office equipment and engaged at the same time in post-office service. When you link the post office and the schoolhouse together you have laid the foundation for real progress along many lines.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard much of Americanization and the vital necessity of making the melting pot function. No group effort and no piecemeal procedure can meet this problem of making Americans of those strangers who comes to our shores. The foreigner must be made a member of the Nation. He must be given the sense of belonging.

That means that the action must come from the community in which he lives. If there is to be no "Little Italy" or "Little Russia" or "Little Poland" or "Little Anything Else," there must be all-inclusive American communities where each resident feels a sense of partnership, of real fellowship.

Organizing the community in the school building, the property of all, will help weld the citizenship into one composite whole as nothing else could do. It will bring neighbors together for many varied purposes—educational, social, recreational, and so forth. And when people get together they find agreement, fellowship, and cooperation.

Making of that schoolhouse a station of the Postal Service, with one of those engaged in educational work as the responsible agent of the community and also an agent of the Post Office Department, means the linking up of the individual citizen with the Federal Government. It means that Government, instead of being paternal, is fraternal.

But it does still more than that. For the International Postal Union is the one organization that has swept aside all barriers of nationality and made of the entire world a neighborhood. Through it the most remote community in America is in direct communication with every community in the world.

So it is that the prosaic bread-and-butter question, which makes necessary the organization of producers and consumers and the establishment of communication between them, with no unjust and unnecessary toll levied, may well be the impelling force which will drive us to true democracy, which will be safe for us and for the world—a democracy that means not only universal liberty but universal organization, which will guarantee equal opportunity and equal justice to all.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I am going to support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS]. One of the problems that has confronted every man living on the farm at some distance from a market has been to get the products of his farm to the place where it is to be consumed. There is, perhaps, not a rural community in the United States where a great deal of food does not go to waste solely because they have no economical means of getting it to market. It would not matter how completely the farmers of one part of the country might organize unless they had an assured and daily transportation to carry their produce to the city. I do not believe this will help the man in the country half as much as it will help the man in the city. The problem has always been with the human family in thickly populated sections of the country to be able to get ample food supplies. That problem has not confronted the people of America so much in the past as it will in the future. As population continues to increase we have got to have a quick, easy access from the place of production to the place of consumption. When the place of consumption is easily, economically, and certainly reached the production always necessarily increases rapidly, because the demand is there. If you can supply the demand, the man in the country is willing to produce the stuff to satisfy the demand; but when he produces it and it is wasted or destroyed, that makes for inefficiency in the distribution of food products. The railroads have been of very great advantage. They have developed in this country great industries that never could have been developed but for the transportation from the point of production to the point of consumption. In many communities they are now running what is called the milk daily wagon, where the farmers themselves, without the assistance of the Government, have established milk routes, and they find when they get a creamery established in the community that it is extremely profitable. The number of cattle has been greatly increased, which not only increases the amount of milk supply, so much needed, but the meat supply also, because it makes raising cattle profitable. So if you will connect the gardens and the fields of the farmers with the consuming communities products will be increased rapidly, because it will pay the farmer to produce the food. I think it would be taking a backward step to cut the appropriation down. I think the people in the cities are the ones who will be much more benefited than the people in the country. I shall support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I would not support any amendment to cut down the appropriation in the bill, neither will I support the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia to increase the appropriation. I have no attack whatever to make on the motor-truck service as it has been inaugurated by the Post Office Department. It is, of course, more or less in the experimental stage. I think it has in it great possibilities if it is put in operation in those places where it is practicable and where it is feasible. but in my discussion with the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, who is one of its most enthusiastic advocates, and in the hearings that we have had on this proposition I have pointed out this fact as a reason for caution in dealing with a matter of this kind; that we are inaugurating a new transportation service in the Post Office Department, and as long as it is left to the wise judgment of the administrative officers to put it into operation where it is feasible and proper it is all right and will be operated as a success, but when it gets to the point that Congress will step in and, without hearings, without information, and without facts, vote large additional sums and force the Post Office Department to extend where it is not feasible and proper, it will then become a source of deficit rather than revenue. In other words, my contention is that this new form of service should not be extended beyond the bounds of reason based on the data and information in hand. Now, what information does the gentleman from Virginia or the gentleman from Mississippi give us throwing light as to whether there are any places where this $500,000 will be needed? I believe the gentleman from Virginia moved to increase it by that amount?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will ask the gentleman—he is a member of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, I believe—what information he gave of a definite character that we needed the gigantic sum for the aeroplane service called for in the bill?

Mr. BLACK. I will answer that question very frankly. I voted in the committee and stood for the proposition to only spend $300,000 for aircraft-mail service in the fiscal year 1920. I feel free to make that statement because it was my contention that the aerial-mail service was still more or less experimental and not too great a sum should be appropriated for its extension and operation until its feasibility and practicability had been more thoroughly established.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am not assailing the gentleman's attitude at all; I am asking what information of any definite character was given to this body that that gigantic sum was needed properly for the aeroplane service?

Mr. BLACK. Answering that with perfect frankness, not sufficient information, in my opinion. Now, the item we have under consideration the Post Office Department in its original estimate asked $300,000 for the service for the next fiscal year. The committee, after hearing the statement of Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Blakslee, saw fit—and I am not going to attack the action of the committee—to increase that to $1,000,000. And now come other gentlemen, without information to show where it can be put into successful operation, and seek to increase that $500,000 more. I submit, gentlemen, that it is a matter we ought not to act on without information and therefore should not adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. STEENERSON. If the gentleman will permit, is it not a fact, under last year's law, that, in addition to this money, the department could get free motor vehicles from the War Department?

Mr. BLACK. That is true. The present law provides that the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, deliver and turn over to the Postmaster General from time to time and without charge, for use in the Postal Service, such aeroplanes and automobiles as may prove to be or shall become unsuitable for the purposes of the War Department, but suitable for the Postal Service.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, my amendment seems to have led rather to an attack upon the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General (Mr. Blakslee) than to a discussion of the merits of motor routes as provided for in the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. I hope the gentleman did not take what I said as an attack upon the Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. When you refer to an official in charge of a great department of the Government, and presumably a hard-headed, efficient, practical man of affairs, as a dreamer, and put him, and the men who agree with him as to the utility of this enterprise in the class of Col. Mulberry Sellers, what is that but an attack upon his capacity as a public official? If it is not an attack upon him, what is it? Should a man of the Sellers type hold a responsible Government position? Your remarks centainly present this official as an incapable member of the working force of the Post Office Department. Dreamers, visionaries, enthusiasts of the Mulberry Sellers type, are not likely to afford an efficient, or satisfactory administration of the large responsibilities that attach to the position of Fourth Assistant Postmaster General. I have noted, as the gentleman from Tennessee has noted, that whenever any proposition that is presented in this body that has nothing to commend it, save that it will be helpful to the plain people, such a project is sure to be viciously assailed as a pork barrel, or as an airy fantastic dream. There is nothing of the glamorous about this project. It does not touch the imagination, like the project for carrying the mails by hurrying flocks of fast-flying aeroplanes. It is a prosaic, humdrum, every-day working proposition that has nothing in its favor save that it will develop the communities which it will serve with its branching routes, and serve alike to their advantage the farmers on the routes, and the working population of the cities. Of course it is a dream. Of course it smacks of the pork barrel to its opponents. It is too absurd to be formulated, or supported save by dreamers. But this country, and humanity owes much to the alleged dreamers: They are generally the pioneers in new projects of universal utility. For years the dreamers dreamed of a parcel-post law. I recall the arduous road traveled by the dreamers and enthusiasts who struggled and fought to make a place for that enterprise in our post-office system. Other dreamers, visionaries, and enthusiasts dreamed of a comprehensive road development in continental United States with the help of Federal aid extended by an appropriate Federal statute. The project was vehemently assailed. Like this project of Mr. Blakslee it was denounced as a pork-barrel scheme that would put all other pork-barrel enterprises to the blush. This apprehension was expressed in terms of picturesque invective.

Yet none of these dreadful apprehensions have been realized, and in view of the great expansion of road development that has taken place, and is now in progress since the passage of the Federal road act, I doubt if there is a Member of this body who would now expunge this measure from the statute books, if he had the power to do so, or who would not admit, unless he is a reactionary of the most hopeless type, that his gloomy anticipations have not been realized. If the man who devised, developed, and patiently, and thoroughly laid out these motor routes, is a dreamer, and the men who regard them as hopeful enterprises, promising large returns of public benefits, are dreamers, what shall we say of the men who pin their faith to the aeroplane as a practical instrumentality for the commercial carrying of the mails, and are willing to risk millions in that enterprise? Certainly as a practical man I can not see that these two propositions rest upon any equality of merit, or hopefulness. The truck enterprise has been thoroughly tried out, and its value determined. If anyone desires to ascertain the results of this experiment he can call at the office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, and by scrutinizing the returns, and expenses of the enterprise, satisfy himself that this is not the airy fabric of a dream but a practical experiment under severe tests which has fully justified the hopes of its friends.

If the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General is a dreamer as to this enterprise, there are others to be remitted to that class. The chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads seems to be a dreamer, since a few minutes ago he gave vigorous testimony to the feasibility, practicability and fruitful possibilities of this enterprise. I am not afraid to put this project of rural development upon a sure foundation basis of development, or unwilling to expend in experimentation on this line, if indeed the development of this project can now be fairly styled experimentation, a sum far greater than that which has been voted for experiments in mail carrying by fast-flying machines in the uncertain realm of the air, nor do I apprehend that appropriations to enlarge this project of universal utility will ever be the subject of successful attack.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am perfectly willing, so far as I am concerned, to take all the chances of mischief that it is suggested will follow upon the adequate development of this service. The figures on file at the Post Office Department very sufficiently establish both the merits and the potentialities of this child of the brain of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. With pleasure.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman says he wants to put it at least on an equal footing with the aeroplane experiment.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. To do that, having in mind the value of the machines directed to be turned over by the War Department, and the amount of the appropriation, we ought to appropriate in this connection about $7,000,000.

Mr. BLACK. I want to call this fact to the gentleman's attention. The aeroplane appropriation, as we passed it, carries $500,000. This carries a million, and the Post Office Department will get the Army trucks from the War Department, just as they will get the aeroplanes, and you will have $2 for this where you would have $1 for the other.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman has not fully apprehended the effect of the Garrett amendment. According to the best estimate I can make, of the value of the planes, and engines directed to be delivered to the Post Office Department, the effect of the Garrett amendment will be to turn over to that department material that must be worth $5,000,000 or $6,000,000. We do not propose to turn over any such value in motor trucks to this service.

Mr. BLACK. We have the authority now.

Mr. SAUNDERS or Virginia. We have directed the War Department to turn over these planes and engines to the Post Office Department. The War Department will have no discretion in the matter. Our mandate is peremptory, and we have nominated the material to be delivered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I regret I have not had the benefit of the discussion on this amendment, which, I understand, is the difference between $1,500,000 and $500,000. I should be very glad to see that part of the paragraph stricken out and not give either the $500,000 or $1,500,000.

Let us stop and think a minute. We are scattering jurisdiction to this department and that department and the other department. This, as I understand it now, is to repair motor trucks, and for the purchase, manufacture, exchange, and expenses incidental to conveyance and the marketing of produce and commodities. That is broad enough, I take it, to cover the construction of roads.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If the gentleman will pardon me, because of the apprehension on the part of some gentlemen that it might be possible to do that under this amendment, that portion relating to roads has been stricken out.

Mr. CANNON. I know; but you leave language there that I believe would be held, when it came to be passed on by the comptroller, to include the improvement of roads.

Now, let us stop and see where we are. There has been under the highway act money appropriated, and it is available for two years, to the extent of $75,000,000, to aid in the construction of roads.

Mr. MADDEN. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. CANNON. I will.

Mr. MADDEN. The road question is out of this.

Mr. CANNON. The road question is out of it, but you leave language in here that any comptroller who passed upon it would hold would apply to the construction of roads. Now, when you get good roads the farmer will take care of himself. We have gotten railroads. I hope that they would not become largely increased in the expense of their operation a little later on by legislation. God knows, I want to see us get back instead of going forward and having the Federal Government running the whole machine, because then you come to inefficiency, with great expense and many cooks.

Now, I have a letter here from the Agricultural Department touching the construction of highways, $75,000,000 all told. It is an interesting letter, but I have not time to read it in my five minutes. I speak in the highest respect of our former colleague, Postmaster General Burleson, but he is running to the extent of his ability, at railroad speed, toward the Government doing everything.

Now, there is upon us here during this Congress and the one to follow after many questions concerning the unscrambling of these eggs. We put it in expressly as to highways, but you strike highways out, and it would have to be construed under "repair of equipment, supervision, and maintenance, and expenses incidental to conveyance and marketing of produce and commodities." Now, I represent an agricultural district, one of the best in the United States. My State of Illinois has just voted, on a referendum, $60,000,000 for the purpose of improving the roads—those black lands. My own county voted $1,500,000 to improve roads. We have the spirit. The time has come when we can afford to do it. And here is the legislation calling for $75,000,000 altogether. And if one State does not take it in two years, it can be reapportioned to the States that do take it. Let us keep this thing as near as we can under one jurisdiction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I do not agree with the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. This branch of the Post Office Department has gone through its experimental stage and has demonstrated it is to be not only self-sustaining but a great boon to both the people who live in the urban communities and to the producers of farm products.

The gentleman from Illinois has advanced no argument here why the farmers of this country should not have the Government, through its post-office facilities, go out through the country and gather up butter and eggs and vegetables of all kinds and bring them into town. What good would a million dozen eggs left out in the country be if the people in the cities who want them could not get them? What if you have potatoes, Irish and sweet potatoes, carrots, corn, away out in the country when the people in the towns, who are hungry for something to eat, can not get them?

If you please, the Government, through the Post Office Department, has demonstrated that it can send these motor trucks out into these rural communities and upon the payment of the bare parcel post on them bring all the farm products into the town and transport them into the cities where the people can use them, without one cent of cost to the Government. If the gentleman from Illinois will inquire of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Blakslee, he will learn that these trucks have made enormous profits in the populous settlements of this country. Of course he will not introduce this service in places where they could not find any farm products or bring anything into town to satisfy the hunger of the people. It must be assumed that the Post Office Department will exercise common sense and judgment and find these communities where the motor trucks will do the most good and where the service will be self-sustaining and of advantage to the man out in the country who has farm products for sale, as well as the man in the city who must eat.

The gentleman from Illinois must think that a man can have 500 hens running around in his front yard in the city and that he can raise farm products in town. [Laughter.] That is a mistake. This produce must all come from the country. The farmers make it to sell to people in the cities. Of course, the man in town must pay the profits of all these middle men that have had the benefits derived from the old system all these years. In Washington City it takes a rich man to get enough to eat. You can not live and pay the high prices that are exacted here, because all these middle men must get their rake-off before this produce gets on the consumer's table.

The department has gone into that and realizes the necessity for relief and has demonstrated its plan to be a success; and now the department asks this Congress to put up the money in order that it may go out into different branches all over this Republic and do the splendid work that it has done in these communities where it has tried out the system as an experiment. Yet the gentleman from Illinois finds fault with that. He complains that out of this money highways might be built somewhere. That feature is stricken out of the bill. I would not care if it were allowed to remain. I want the people out in the country to get good roads. I can not see why the gentleman from Illinois should object to the man who has produce to bring into town having a good road to travel over. The improvement of roads is one of the best things in this country that has ever been started, and I for one will be glad to see the improvement of roads extended all over this country. [Applause.] Yet the gentleman from Illinois is afraid the Comptroller of the Treasury might construe this item to warrant the officials of the Post Office Department in going out and building roads wherever they please. He complains that they will have to sustain this equipment. Does he object to the improvement of the equipment and having the motor trucks kept in good repair—the motor trucks which are necessary to haul this produce? Of course, the motor trucks would go down if you did not furnish money in this bill to keep them in repair and supply them with axle grease and lubricating oil and all other things that are necessary to keep up the equipment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] offers an amendment to strike out "$1,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$500,000," and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] offers a substitute by striking out "$1,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,500,000." The question is on agreeing to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. NORTON. A division!

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 30.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Now, does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] desire to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. STEENERSON. I am willing to withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For travel and miscellaneous expenses in the Postal Service, office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, $1,000.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. TREADWAY. I do so for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee the courtesy to kindly allow me to ask him a question with reference to the paragraph on lines 5 to 7, which have already been read. I understand the star-route contracts are for a four-year period. I simply wish to ask him whether or not there is any provision whereby an increase of the rates over those stated in the contracts made four years ago can be made, in view of the additional cost of maintenance to those who have taken contracts at the prices then prevailing for marketable goods at that time?

Mr. MOON. The act making appropriations for the department for 1918 provided that the Postmaster General may readjust all these star-route contracts on the basis of equity and justice, regardless of the original contract, and may continue the service at whatever sum may be reasonable or may relieve him of the contract entire.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is the law now?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. And it would apply to such a condition as that to which I refer?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. I have in mind several cases where contractors are actually losing money on account of the increased cost of their equipment, horses, and feed.

Mr. MOON. I think that was the main inducement for the passage of that law.

Mr. TREADWAY. At that time?

Mr. MOON. Yes; at that time.

Mr. TREADWAY. I thank the gentleman for his courtesy.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I make this pro forma amendment, Mr. Chairman, with a view of asking the chairman of the committee [Mr. MOON] a question. I would like to ask the distinguished chairman whether or not he has any report from the Post Office Department in relation to the action taken under section 4 of the act of July 2, 1918, authorizing the Postmaster General to adjust the equities under certain contracts where in the performance of these contracts great losses have accrued to the contractors?

Mr. MOON. No; there is no report made to the committee, and none properly due to the committee under the law on that subject. My information is that the Postmaster General, in exercising the discretionary power that he has in that matter, has made an adjustment of a number of those matters, but there are some that have not been adjusted.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I would like to follow that with another question. I am apprised that there are one or two, perhaps more, contracts in which the losses are so great that the department declines to adjust them. In one instance the loss has been as much as 125 per cent, and the ground of nonaction is that the loss is too great to adjust. I submit that the greater the injustice, the greater the loss, the greater is the reason for adjustment.

Mr. MOON. That is not an inquiry for me to answer; it is a matter of administration under the Postmaster General.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I wanted to get the view of the chairman upon it.

Mr. ROUSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Certainly.

Mr. ROUSE. I will state that I know of one single case where the contractor for screen-wagon service in Cincinnati has that kind of a contract, and it has not been adjusted, but they are working on a basis of 80 per cent.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Has not the Postmaster General designated the Federal Trade Commission, or some official from that body, to ascertain the losses incident to the performance of these contracts?

Mr. ROUSE. I am not advised on that matter, but I know that there are constantly received at the Post Office Department appeals asking that these contracts be adjusted.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am advised that the Federal Trade Commission has in one contract found the losses to be 125 per cent, and yet the Post Office Department has declined to afford any remedy. The contractor is not released from the performance of his contract, but must continue in its performance, thus driving him into bankruptcy.

Mr. NORTON. Has the Post Office Department any authority to revoke or cancel these contracts?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Under the provision I have just cited it would seem that he has such authority. I refer to the act of July, 1918.

Mr. ROBBINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will.

Mr. ROBBINS. I have a pressing case in my district, and when this fourth section of the act of July, 1918, was up I called the attention of the committee to it, and I think I asked the chairman if it was not the intention to adjust such contracts. The contractor in my district has filed a claim and wanted the contract adjusted; he is day after day losing money, his bondsmen are responsible, and he has protested, but can get no relief. The section is being evaded or overlooked. I am anxious to have light on the subject, and I am very much interested in the interrogation of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. Chairman, examine the part of this bill beginning on page 26, line 2, and note that line 22 provides for the compensation of rural carriers. A day's work of the rural carrier, so far as travel is concerned, is 24 miles and the time is six days per week. For such service the carrier receives $1,440, and he is allowed $24 per year for each mile or major fraction over 24 miles that he is compelled to travel, and the compensation is reduced where the mileage is less by a graded scale until where the route is 4 miles and less than 6 miles the compensation is only $576 per year. This compensation is inadequate, although it was increased by the last act of Congress. In rural districts where the country is hilly and the roads, many of them, almost impassable during the winter season the carriers are put to a greater expense to keep up the service.

In Westmoreland and Butler Counties, composing the twenty-second congressional district of Pennsylvania, that I have the honor to represent in Congress, many of the carriers, in order to meet the requirements of the service, now that parcel post has grown so heavy, are required to keep two horses and wagons, and some of them use motor cars and wagons, and others use motor cars alone; but nearly all of these are required to keep both kinds of transportation—horses and wagons for winter and motor cars for summer.

When this matter was examined into by the last Congress, a hearing was given the rural carriers, and it was shown by the report of 30 carriers, which I filed from my district, that the actual necessary expense in keeping up the vehicles was from $67.50 per month down to $30 per month, so greatly had the cost of horse feed, horseshoeing, and upkeep of vehicles, and cost of gasoline, tires, and upkeep of automobiles increased during the last year. The majority of the carriers were compelled to pay out on an average of $60 per month for transportation alone. This left them but from $50 to $60 per month upon which to live and keep their families. The result has been that in my district many vacancies in the service have occurred, caused by resignations, because the carriers could no longer support their families and continue in the service.

Formerly these carriers made a large amount of money by carrying packages and making small purchases in the stores for their constituency. This, now, is taken away by the Parcel Post Service, these packages being sent more cheaply by postage.

These carriers applied for an advance in this compensation at this Congress and filed their claim with the committee, in which it was set forth, "We respectfully ask your committee for increase of 30 per cent on the basic pay for the next year and the same gradation of pay above the standard that is provided by law for less than the standard." Yet this appeal was ignored by the committee. They have granted an increase to the city carriers, where the pay of $1,500 per year is allowed, and they are furnished with automobile or horse and wagon by the Government; but the rural carriers are compelled to furnish their own automobile or their own horse and wagon, pay entirely for its upkeep, and carry the mail for a maximum of $1,440 per year for 24 miles per day travel.

This is unfair. The compensation is inadequate and ought to be increased, and I shall vote for the amendment pending to increase this pay, although the amendment pending does not go as far as I would go, because I would favor the increase of 30 per cent which the carriers ask.

There is another matter, which is covered by the next paragraph of the bill, namely, the investigation of conditions arising from contracts on the star-route service and the adjustment of the compensation therefor.

Under the act of July 2, 1918, the Postmaster General was authorized to adjust these contracts and give relief under the following provision of the law:

SEC. 4. That the Postmaster General is authorized to investigate conditions arising from contracts in the star route, screen wagon, and other vehicle service entered into prior to June 30, 1917, and from contracts for furnishing envelopes, blanks and blank books, and the Official Postal Guide, for contracts entered into prior to June 30, 1917, with a view to determining whether any adjustment should be made in the compensation and to adjust the same for materials or services hereafter to be furnished or rendered in cases where the facts disclose the necessity for such adjustment, or, in his discretion, with the consent of the contractor and his bondsmen, the Postmaster General may cancel such contracts.

Yet it seems to be impossible to obtain from the Postmaster General an examination into and adjustment of the compensation of star-route carriers, who, because of the increased cost of transportation and living, are losing money in carrying out their contracts.

I have in my district a star route extending from Mount Pleasant to Donegal, Pa., and serving several intermediate offices. This contractor took this contract for a period of four years beginning in 1916, before the great advance in cost of the necessary articles that he is compelled to use in carrying out his contract. He has been losing money every day for more than a year and a half last past. He has demonstrated to the Post Office Department that the cost of horses and wagons and the upkeep thereof and the increased burden of the Parcel Post Service have made it impossible for him to complete his contract. He is, however, under bond, and the Government insists upon him carrying out the contract and losing money continuously and seems to be unwilling to grant him the relief that the law provides. The Government of the United States should not be an unfair employer. It ought not to extort, under changed conditions, compliance with a contract when it makes a bankrupt of the party with whom the contract is made.

To meet that very condition the above law was enacted, and Congress in good faith has given the Postmaster General power to adjust unusual cases, such as the one I have cited, and yet the Post Office Department seems unwilling to grant the relief it is legally authorized to extend to this unfortunate man. Mr. Chairman, I submit that these two wrongs ought to be corrected.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Chairman, I concur in the suggestion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but I wish to couple with that suggestion the observation, perhaps a repetition of what I said a moment ago, that the greater the inequity, the greater the losses, the more the reason for the department to take action. It appears here that the reason for nonaction is just the converse of that contention, namely, that the losses are so great that the department should not take action.

Mr. AYRES. We have given the Postmaster General the authority under the act of July 2, 1918. What further can Congress do?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Of course, something further could be done; it is possible to provide mandatory legislation, but I am simply bringing the subject to the attention of the committee that they may see what the legislation has accomplished.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I simply wish to say to the gentleman from Virginia that when the Post Office Committee reported this legislation for the relief of contractors losing money on account of the war, we assumed that the larger the loss the greater the need of readjustment.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Precisely; the greater the loss the greater the reason that remedy should be afforded.

Mr. MOON. I want to say that the power conferred in the act on the Postmaster General was discretionary, and it does not lie in the mouth of anybody in Congress to say that that discretion has been improperly exercised, unless the facts are presented upon which that might be determined. The gentleman, in his opinion, may think it has been improperly exercised, but the Postmaster General may, on the other hand, think he has exercised his discretion properly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Suppose the designated agent from the Federal Trade Commission has reported a loss of 125 per cent in one contract, and the contractor requests a readjustment, does not the gentleman think that that would be an instance for the exercise of discretionary power?

Mr. MOON. If we have no statement of facts accompanying it, it would be a mere conclusion and not worthy of consideration. If all the facts involved show the loss has occurred and that the matter requires readjustment, I think the Postmaster General would be in error in not exercising the discretion.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That on and after July 1, 1919, clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service shall be divided into six grades, as follows: First grade, salary $1,000; second grade, salary $1,100; third grade, salary $1,200; fourth grade, salary $1,300; fifth grade, salary $1,400; sixth grade, salary $1,500: Provided, That clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service shall be promoted successively after one year's satisfactory service in each grade to the next higher grade until they reach the sixth grade. All promotions shall be made at the beginning of the quarter following one year's satisfactory service in the grade: Provided further, That clerks in first and second class post offices and letter carriers in the City Delivery Service who have served satisfactorily for one year in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, respectively, under the act approved July 2, 1918, shall be promoted to the next higher grade: Provided further, That the salaries of railway postal clerks shall be graded as follows: Grade 1, at $1,100; grade 2, at $1,200; grade 3, at $1,300; grade 4, at $1,400; grade 5, at $1,500; grade 6, at $1,600; grade 7, at $1,700; grade 8, at $1,800; grade 9, at $1,900; and grade 10, at $2,000.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman wherein this changes existing law.

Mr. MADDEN. It does not; it only makes it permanent law.

Mr. MOON. That is all; it is exactly the same as the previous statute, except that we make this permanent.

Mr. CANNON. There is no increase in the salary; it simply makes it permanent law?

Mr. MOON. That is all.

Mr. CANNON. And there is no other change beyond——

Mr. MOON. There will be when we come to the next page.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Postmaster General shall classify and fix the salaries of railway postal clerks, under such regulations as he may prescribe, in the grades provided by law; and for the purpose of organization and establishing maximum grades to which promotions may be made successively, as hereinafter provided, he shall classify railway post offices, terminal railway post offices, and transfer offices with reference to their character and importance in three classes, with salary grades as follows: Class A, $1,100 to $1,400; class B, $1,100 to $1,500; class C, $1,100 to $1,700. He may assign to the offices of division superintendents and chief clerks such railway postal clerks as may be necessary and fix their salaries within the grades provided by law without regard to the classification of railway post offices.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, line 3, strike out "$1,400" and insert "$1,500."

Mr. MADDEN. And in line 7 strike out "$1,500" and insert "$1,600."

The Clerk read as follows:

And in line 7 strike out "$1,500" and insert "$1,600."

The CHARIMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 25, in line 7, by striking out "$1,700" and inserting "$1,800."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 25, line 7, strike out "$1,700" and insert "$1,800."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the classes of the railway mail clerks within which the classes A, B, and C are grouped have been fixed in the classification laws, and the idea was, and is, by the amendments suggested by me, to permit of an automatic promotion of $100 in each grade. Without the amendments I suggested they would not be able to get the automatic promotions within those classes. It has always been understood that there was $100 difference between each of the grades, and for the men in class A, running from $1,100 to $1,500, that will give them an automatic promotion of $100 now. For those from $1,100 to $1,600 in class B it makes a difference of $100 there; and if class C remains where it is, it makes exactly $100 difference between class B and class C, as there is between class A and class B. I do not see any reason in the world why the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] should offer the amendment that he has offered, or, having offered it, why the committee should adopt it, because it makes a disparity between the classes which ought not to exist. This is a matter that has been given consideration by the members of the Post Office Committee—a matter in connection with which consultations have been had both with the postal authorities and the men in the Railway Mail Service—and I may say that the amendments that I offered, which have been adopted, are not only satisfactory to the postal authorities, but they are also satisfactory to the man who speaks for the railway mail clerks, and he has, in words that could not be misunderstood, expressed satisfaction with the action that was proposed to be taken and which has been taken.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It was simply to keep it in the same ratio as you have it now.

Mr. MADDEN. That is a mistake. There ought not to be $200 difference between them. There ought to be $100 difference.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. You have $200 now, between $1,500 and $1,700.

Mr. MADDEN. But we have three classes—$1,500, $1,600, and $1,700—$100 difference between each class.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will state to the gentleman that the matter was called to my attention by the Railway Mail Clerks' Association.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. What are these various classes—class A from $1,100 to $1,500?

Mr. MADDEN. These are classes that have been in existence in the Railway Mail Service for years. For example, class A men do the work on the light routes, class B the work on trains that run on heavier routes, and class C includes the men who work on very heavy routes.

Mr. NORTON. They begin to work at the same rate as class A?

Mr. MADDEN. They begin to work at the same rate, but as long as they are in the class they can go to a certain point only, and after they are transferred to another class they get a new compensation.

Mr. NORTON. They go in a higher grade.

Mr. MADDEN. That is it.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I approve of the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], and while this is not a committee amendment the committee have informally considered it and have approved it, so far as a majority of them is concerned. All of them could not be consulted. It is also approved by the Post Office Department and it is approved by the railway mail clerks to be benefited by the legislation.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON. Yes.

Mr. STEENERSON. I did not catch what the gentleman said about the Post Office Committee's action.

Mr. MOON. I said the Post Office Committee had not acted on it.

Mr. STEENERSON. The bill as printed represents the action of the Post Office Committee.

Mr. MOON. The bill as printed is the action of the Post Office Committee; but I am speaking of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. STEENERSON. When was that considered?

Mr. MOON. It has not been considered by the Post Office Committee. A majority of the committee have indicated informally, without acting upon it, that they were favorable to the amendment.

Mr. STEENERSON. Including the chairman? The chairman is in favor of it?

Mr. MOON. I think so. I hardly ever set up my judgment against the majority of the committee, against the Post Office Department, and against the people who are to be benefited by the legislation.

Mr. STEENERSON. I wanted to be sure, because I did not know anything about any action.

Mr. MOON. The chairman did not call anyone into consultation about it. He simply received that information from the members.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will this result in any discrimination as to the amount of increase of other employees?

Mr. MOON. I think not in the least.

Mr. STEENERSON. The suggestion has been made that it might make a larger increase for these men than the increase that we have given to the other employees.

Mr. MOON. I think not.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to explain the reason for the Madden amendment by perhaps mentioning one matter that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who offered it, did not mention. Under the plan of increase that we have in section 2 of the bill the post-office clerks and letter carriers will be automatically promoted one grade each year from the grade they are now in to $1,500. Under the grouping of the railway mail clerks group A would be from $1,100 to $1,400 as written in the bill, and the gentleman from Minnesota, if he will give heed, can readily see that those in group A could never go as high in their promotions as letter carriers or postal clerks, because they would be restricted to $1,400.

Mr. STEENERSON. They are performing similar service to the post-office clerks.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; and we think it equitable to enlarge that group $100, making it $1,100 to $1,500, and to enlarge the second group from $1,100 to $1,600, and leave the third group as it is now, at $1,100 to $1,700.

Mr. STEENERSON. Otherwise the clerks in these terminals covered by this proposition would receive higher pay as clerks than the regular clerks.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; the gentleman is correct. Group A is restricted in section 2 from $1,100 to $1,400 and ought to be enlarged another grade.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is simply correcting an error of the committee?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; it really would not be doing justice to the railway mail clerks if we did not make the change so as to harmonize with the other provisions of the bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. But the gentleman opposes the amendment of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BLACK. I do not favor the amendment of the gentleman from New York. I think the amendment which we have just adopted is sufficient to adjust the equities of the case.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I just want to make one statement—that this matter was called to my attention by the representative of the Mail Clerks' Association, and they are not at all satisfied, as was stated on the floor. They desire to have the increase of grade C kept in the present ratio; that is, the difference between grade B and C. That is all the information I have on this, and I submit it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the committee has already adopted the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. The question now is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clerks in class A shall be promoted successively to grade 3, clerks in class B shall be promoted successively to grade 4, and clerks in class C shall be promoted successively to grade 5, at the beginning of the quarter following the expiration of a year's satisfactory service in the next lower grade. Promotions above these grades within the maximum grades of the classification may be made in the discretion of the Postmaster General for meritorious service. No promotion shall be made except upon evidence satisfactory to the Post Office Department of the efficiency and faithfulness of the employee during the preceding year: Provided further, That clerks assigned as clerks in charge of crews consisting of more than one clerk shall be clerks of grades 6 to 10, inclusive, and may be promoted one grade only after three years' satisfactory and faithful service in such capacity: Provided further, That on and after July 1, 1919, the compensation of each rural letter carrier for serving a rural route of 24 miles and over, six days in the week, shall be $1,440 and $24 per mile for each mile or major fraction thereof over 24 miles per annum, payable monthly; on routes 22 miles and less than 24 miles, $1,382; on routes 20 miles and less than 22 miles, $1,296; on routes 18 miles and less than 20 miles, $1,152; on routes 16 miles and less than 18 miles, $1,008; on routes 14 miles and less than 16 miles, $864; on routes 12 miles and less than 14 miles, $806; on routes 10 miles and less than 12 miles, $748; on routes 8 miles and less than 10 miles, $691; on routes 6 miles and less than 8 miles, $635; on routes 4 miles and less than 6 miles, $576. A rural letter carrier serving one triweekly route shall be paid on the basis for a route one-half the length of the route served by him, and a carrier serving two triweekly routes shall be paid on the basis for a route one-half of the combined length of the two routes: Provided further, That hereafter postmasters of the fourth class shall receive the same compensation as now provided by law, except that they shall receive 100 per cent of the cancellations of the first $100 or less per quarter: Provided, further, That if the compensation does not exceed $75 for any one quarter, fourth-class postmasters shall be allowed an increase of 20 per cent of the compensation allowed under existing law: Provided further, That hereafter the increased compensation provided in section 2 of the act approved July 2, 1918, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes, shall remain the same for employees other than those mentioned herein.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 26, line 2, strike out, after the words "Provided further," down to and including the figures "$576," in line 17, and insert the following: "That on and after July 1, 1919, the compensation of each rural letter carrier for serving a rural route of 24 miles and over six days in a week shall be $1,500 and $24 per mile for each mile or major fraction thereof over 24 miles per annum, payable monthly; on routes 22 miles and less than 24 miles, $1,440; on routes 20 miles and less than 22 miles, $1,350; on routes 18 miles and less than 20 miles, $1,200; on routes 16 miles and less than 18 miles, $1,070; on routes 14 miles and less than 16 miles, $900; on routes 12 miles and less than 14 miles, $840; on routes 14 miles and less than 12 miles, $780; on routes 8 miles and less than 10 miles, $720; on routes 6 miles and less than 8 miles, $660; on routes 4 miles and less than 6 miles, $600.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment. I just make the point of order and I will let the Chair rule on it. This is new legislation on an appropriation bill, and the fact that each section of this bill was put in the order by agreement does not authorize, in my judgment, any new legislation or any change in the salary law. That increase was put on in accordance with the existing salaries already provided by law and the amendment proposed would be a change of the salary law.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, the purpose and effect of the amendment is simply to provide for a small increase in the compensation for rural letter carriers over that reported in the bill, and as far as I am concerned I am willing to submit the question of the point of order to the Chair. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], the chairman of the committee, has not given any reason why my amendment is not in order under the rules of the House, and I am willing to leave it with the Chair to decide.

Mr. MOON. I suggest the law as it now exists fixes these salaries. This amendment proposes to change it in this appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if there is any statutory law fixing the salary of rural letter carriers?

Mr. MOON. I think there is.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it makes no difference if there are 40 statutes fixing the salary of letter carriers, because what is proposed in the bill is to fix the salary of letter carriers and made in order by unanimous consent of the House. It would be subject to the point of order if it had not been by unanimous consent. This fixes the salary after the 30th of June next and is made in order. Now, the amendment changing the rate of salary is, of course, germane and clearly in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair agrees with the gentleman from Illinois, and the Chair was asking the chairman of the committee a question for information, because the Chair does not pretend to know all the postal laws. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment for the purpose of equalizing the compensation of city letter carriers and rural letter carriers.

The basic pay of city letter carriers is $1,200 per year for eight hours per day, and pro rata pay for all overtime.

The basic pay of rural letter carriers is $1,200 per year for daily service on routes of 24 miles, with half the pro rata pay for overmileage.

The allowance for mounted city letter carriers covers the entire cost of equipment maintenance, and amounts in some cases, for horse-drawn vehicles, to $700, and for motor vehicles, $1,500. (First Assistant Postmaster General Koons has stated that the cost would in some instances be increased 100 per cent this year.)

The allowance for equipment maintenance for rural carriers is nothing.

Under the Post Office appropriation bill, as reported by the Post Office Committee, city letter carriers are given an increase of $300 per year.

Under the same bill rural carriers are given an increase of $240 per year.

Under the bill a mounted city letter carrier will receive:

Salary	$1,500
Equipment allowance (possible)	1,500
Total	3,000
Under the same bill a rural letter carrier will receive a total of	1,440
Difference in favor of the city carrier	1,560

For some reason—I do not know why—the last Post Office appropriation bill reported by the committee made provision for an increase of compensation for city letter carriers amounting, on the average, to 20 per cent, the same bill making provision for an increase of compensation for rural letter carriers of 15 per cent. I offered an amendment making it 20 per cent, which was adopted and concurred in by the Senate. The same thing has occurred again. The bill now before the House provides for the classification of city letter carriers and fixing their compensation on an average of 25 per cent more than it was before the war.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the increases we have in this bill as to letter carriers, postal clerks, and railway mail clerks are identical with what we have in the bill passed in June, 1918, and at the same time the gentleman offered his motion to increase the salary of the rural carriers to 20 per cent.

Mr. ALMON. It is evident to anyone who will examine this bill that the statement which I have just made is correct. I think the increase of compensation provided for city letter carriers is just and proper, and I favor it, but I am opposed to the discrimination provided for in this bill. I have always thought if there was any difference in compensation in these two classes of postal employees it should be in favor of the rural letter carrier, for the reason that he is required to furnish his own equipment for the carrying of the mails, the cost of which in some cases is one-half the salary paid the carrier. The cost of living and equipment is as great as it was a year ago, if not greater.

This bill provides for a large increase in the appropriation to cover the expenses of equipment furnished by the Government to mounted city letter carriers. The chairman of the committee, in support of that increase, said that it was shown by the statement of the First Assistant Postmaster General that the Government had to pay in some cases as much as 100 per cent more for its equipment for mounted city letter carriers than four years ago, one reason being the increased cost of labor and gasoline, and another reason was in some cases there had been an increase of 100 per cent in mail matter over several years ago. For the same reason there should be an increase of compensation given the rural letter carrier.

I know of rural letter carriers who have been required to purchase additional equipment and keep as many as three horses to carry the mail on routes where one horse and a light vehicle were sufficient several years ago. And after paying the present high price for corn, hay, and oats and the upkeep of his equipment there is but little left of his salary with which to support himself and family. I have always believed that the rural letter carrier should be paid more than the city carrier, for the reason he is required to furnish and maintain his equipment.

Considerable has been said about the permanent feature of the salaries fixed by this bill by some of the Members. They seem to overlook the fact that section 3 of this bill makes provision for the appointment of a commission to investigate and report to the next Congress on the subject of equalizing and readjusting the salaries of the postal employees. If this is done, I trust that the commission will call attention to the unjust discrimination against rural letter carriers, if this bill should be passed as reported by the committee, and recommend that the next Congress readjust the salaries in such a manner as to be fair to the rural carriers.

Mr. ROUSE. I would like to ask the gentleman if he knows how much this would increase the appropriation?

Mr. ALMON. I have not made the calculation, but understand it would be about $2,000,000 a year.

Mr. ROUSE. It would be about $2,500,000.

Mr. ALMON. Let it be that. We should do the right thing regardless of what it will cost.

Mr. ESCH. Can the gentleman inform the House how many resignations there were of rural letter carriers last year?

Mr. ALMON. I don't know, but am informed that it amounted to about 18 per cent of the carriers.

Mr. ESCH. My impression is, judging from my own district, there must be a very large number.

Mr. ALMON. There have been more resignations of rural letter carriers in the district which I represent since their salaries were increased 20 per cent than before this was done, on account of the increased cost of living and equipment and because the carriers claim they can make more in other lines of business.

I hope that the House will adopt my amendment and correct the proposed very unjust discrimination against these faithful and underpaid postal employees engaged in carrying the mails to the people in the rural districts of this country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] is recognized.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I know that the House is always very strongly in sympathy with the raising of salaries of rural carriers. I feel that way myself. I do not know why, but for some reason they have felt pretty close to me. I suppose they are pretty good men in a district. We are all alike in matters of that sort.

But we must have some consideration for the Treasury in matters of this kind. We have provided in this bill for a commission that will look into the whole question of salaries, and that commission will classify and rearrange the whole system throughout the department affecting its officials. Until that is done I do not believe there ought to be any increase in the salaries over those carried in the present bill.

Now, we carry in this bill exactly the same provision on the question of city clerks and carriers and city post offices and railway mail clerks and rural carriers as was carried in the last bill. We carry the 10 or 15 per cent provision in another section of the bill for other employees of the department.

You will observe, if you will think for a moment, that in the statute that was passed there was a discrimination which was unfair to the other employees of the department, because those employees did not get the percentage of raise that the carriers got, or that the rural carriers got, and the rural carriers got the best raise of all. The average raise of the other clerks did not amount to 15 per cent, but this House raised the pay 20 per cent additional to the rural carriers on the bill which was approved last year and became part of the law.

Now, we are seeking to make that permanent. That is all we are giving them; exactly the 20 per cent which they had before; and that is going to add $10,150,000 to this bill—even the provision that we have got here now. This is to make it permanent.

It seems to me we should go a little slow in handling the public money. Nobody is demanding a raise except the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON]. The representatives of the rural letter carriers express themselves as being entirely satisfied with the present salaries. I have had no request as chairman of this committee from any rural carriers in the United States to raise their salaries. They are all satisfied to have the present raise made permanent and to take their chances before the commission.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will read page 116 of the hearings before his committee he will notice that a statement was filed by Mr. W. D. Brown, attorney for the National Rural Letter Carriers' Association, in which he says:

I respectfully ask your committee for an increase of 30 per cent on the basic pay for the next year and the same gradation of pay for mileage above the standard, as is provided by law for less than the standard. A little later I will submit statistics in support of my request.

Mr. MOON. He puts that in the record. But the gentleman should understand that he is not the only representative of these people. He has no authority, so far as I know, to make that request. However, I do not want to discuss that.

Mr. ROBBINS. He says he asks for an increase of 30 per cent on the basic pay of this year, so that there is a request for an increase.

Mr. MOON. That is what they are going to ask under this commission when it is created, as I am informed. No contest was made before our committee or the suggestion pressed. Everybody, including Mr. Brown, appeared to be satisfied with this provision. But, as I said, I do not care to go into a discussion of that matter. There is no demand from the individual carriers anywhere, except a few, that has come to this committee for an increase. I know they want a slight increase in the final readjustment, as Mr. Brown stated, in these salaries, but it is not a very large one. It is a small one. It is one that ought to come to them, but it ought to come on the basis of the readjustment of the other salaries. We have made the provision in the last bill permanent law, and I think that is all we ought to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That a commission consisting of five members of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the United States Senate and five members of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the chairmen of the respective committees, is hereby authorized to investigate the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service with a view to the reclassification and readjustment of such salaries on an equitable basis; and said commission shall make a report with recommendation to Congress at the first day of the next regular session. The expense of such inquiry shall be paid from the unexpended balance of any appropriation for the Postal Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. How much of an expense is it expected that this commission will cause?

Mr. MOON. I do not know. There has been no estimate of it and no discussion of it, so far as I know. I take it that this commission ought to sit entirely in the city of Washington, where they can get all the facts that are necessary to make their report. These expenses are usually about $15,000 or $20,000, I believe, but I see no reason why this should be as much as would be incurred by a commission sitting outside of the city.

Mr. MANN. Is it expected that the commission will have any traveling expenses throughout the country?

Mr. MOON. We did not contemplate any. We did not know of any.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer an amendment as section 3½ for the time being.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MOON. Is that an appropriation?

Mr. MADDEN. No. It is to authorize the Post Office Department to purchase supplies from the Army and other departments. I would like to have it read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as section 3½ a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 3½. That the Postmaster General and other responsible officials, in expending appropriations contained in this act, so far as possible, shall purchase materials, supplies, and equipment, when needed and funds are available, from the various services of the Government possessing materials and supplies and equipment no longer required because of the cessation of war activities. It shall be the duty of the Postmaster General and other officials before purchasing any of the articles described herein to ascertain from the other services of the Government whether they have articles of the character described that are serviceable, and articles purchased from other sources of the Government, if the same have not been used, shall be paid for at a reasonable price, not to exceed the actual cost, and if the same have been used, at a reasonable price based upon length of usage. The various services of the Government are authorized to sell such articles to the Postal Service under the conditions specified, and the proceeds of such sales shall be covered into the Treasury as a miscellaneous receipt."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROUSE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the amendment he offered yesterday.

Mr. MADDEN. We can go back to that. I would like to ask unanimous consent to go back to page 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to return to page 10.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, that is for the purpose of restoring two or three lines that are left out. I believe we had better finish the bill and go back to it.

Mr. MADDEN. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That if the revenues of the Post Office Department shall be insufficient to meet the appropriations made by this act, a sum equal to such deficiency of the revenue of said department is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply said deficiencies in the revenues for the Post Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1920, and the sum needed may be advanced to the Post Office Department upon requisition of the Postmaster General.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the section. After the figure "4," in section 4, I want to insert before the word "that" the following: "That there shall be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not heretofore appropriated a sum equal to the sum that will be necessary to pay the increased salaries allowed in this bill."

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman reduced his amendment to writing?

Mr. MOON. I have not, but the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] will.

The CHAIRMAN. While that is being done we will take up the request of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent to return to page 10.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. After the word "pay," on line 13, I move to amend by inserting the following, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 13, after the word "pay," at the end of the line, insert the following: "Provided, That there may also be employed at first-class post offices foremen and stenographers at a salary of $1,300 or more per annum; in all, $55,000,000.

Mr. MADDEN. That was in the bill before, and we struck it out, but it ought not to have been stricken out.

Mr. STEENERSON. "Thirteen hundred dollars or more?"

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; that is the way it read in the bill.

Mr. STEENERSON. Not less than $1,300.

Mr. MADDEN. No; at a salary of $1,300 or more.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offered an amendment with the view that it was possible that the last section which has been read does not carry language of appropriation for the amount of the increased salaries. But I take it, in view of the language employed there providing for a deficiency to be paid out of the Treasury for all appropriations, that it will not be necessary to offer the amendment, and I therefore withdraw it.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will say that in my opinion it is entirely unnecessary.

Mr. MANN. It is covered by the language in the first paragraph of the bill.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the rural-carrier proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it has been my privilege for a number of years to serve as a member of the Post Office Committee under the distinguished chairman, Mr. MOON. I want to say that I have never occupied a service in all the history of my experience that has been so satisfactory as the service I have had with him. [Applause.] He has been clean, courteous, painstaking, and fair in everything he had to do, and this being the close, substantially, of the gentleman's chairmanship, I think it is only fair for me to say to him and to you what I think of the service he has rendered.

No man has ever occupied a distinguished position with greater conspicuity than the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] has occupied in the chairmanship of this committee. [Applause.]

The country owes him a debt of gratitude for the painstaking care and conduct of this great service. I am proud to testify not only to my confidence in him but to his ability, to his fairness, and his character as a man, and to say that if I have the good fortune in the future to be placed as satisfactorily in my work in the House as I have in my service under JOHN MOON, the chairman of this committee, I shall be very happy indeed. [Applause.]

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I take great pleasure in uniting with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] in this encomium upon our chairman. I began service with the gentleman from Tennessee 16 years ago, and although he is a man of positive views, and I have disagreed with him many times most radically, we have in the main agreed. Where we have disagreed we have disagreed in the most reasonable and fair way. Our disagreements have never left any rankling in our hearts, and when the dispute was over I always found the gentleman from Tennessee the very acme of good nature and companionship, so that I can heartily second every word that the gentleman from Illinois has said. [Applause.]

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I hardly think I am entitled to all the compliments my two friends, the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Minnesota, have paid me, and yet I hope with becoming grace I accept them with much pleasure. It always does us good to know that our friends think well of us, and even if they do not think so well of us, in public they always say they do. [Laughter.] I am to be with them, I hope, again on this committee. There is no reason why the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota and the distinguished gentleman from Illinois should not occupy positions at the head of the table in the next Congress. At the foot of the table I will render them all the earnest service I shall be capable of giving. I thank them for what they have said. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise, and that the Chairman be directed to report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriation for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. AYRES. I desire to offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. AYRES. I am not.

The SPEAKER. If any gentleman opposed to the bill wants to make a motion to recommit, the Chair will recognize him. Otherwise the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kansas. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

I move to recommit the bill to the committee, with instructions to report the same back forthwith with an amendment striking out the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], which amendment reads as follows:

"After the word 'aeroplanes,' in the first line, strike out '$59,825,000' and insert in lieu thereof '$59,625,000'; after the word 'exceeding,' in the second proviso, strike out '$500,000' and insert '$300,000' in lieu thereof; and at the end of the amendment, after the words 'aeroplane service,' strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the following: 'And that no part of said sums shall be expended for the maintenance or operation of the aeroplanes above directed to be delivered to the Postmaster General by the Secretary of War, but such machines shall be operated and maintained by the personnel of the Air Service of the Army, under the control and direction of the Postmaster General.'"

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion to recommit offered is not in order. I believe the Speaker has ruled on several occasions that where an amendment has been agreed to by the House, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, it was not then in order to move to recommit to strike out a part of the amendment which had just been agreed to. Of course the gentleman could have reached this proposition by offering an amendment to the amendment when it came before the House, but that was not done.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's contention is correct. The motion to recommit is not in order. If the thing could be done which the gentleman from Kansas is trying to do, discussion of the bill in Committee of the Whole would be almost useless.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, can not the object of the gentleman from Kansas be reached by asking for a separate vote on his amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is too late. All of the amendments have been agreed to, and the bill has gone to a third reading. Anybody who examines the question can easily tell the reason for the ruling. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed and lay that motion on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. LINTHICUM for four days on account of important business.

CHARLOTTE STERLING (H. REPT. NO. 873).

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 471.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House, to Charlotte Sterling, clerk to the late John A. Sterling, a Representative from the State of Illinois at the time of his death, October 17, 1918, the sum of $166.66, being an amount equal to one month's salary of a clerk of a Representative in Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee). The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

E. NIEDNER (H. REPT. NO. 872).

Mr. SANFORD. Also the following, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 467.

To pay E. Niedner, clerk to the late Jacob E. Meeker, a Representative in Congress, $166.66.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to E. Niedner, clerk to Jacob E. Meeker, a Representative from the State of Missouri at the time of his death, October 16, 1918, the sum of $166.66, being an amount equal to one month's salary of a clerk of a Representative in Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MARY B. JONES (H. REPT. NO. 871).

Mr. SANFORD. Also the following, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 450.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Mary B. Jones, daughter of Thomas D. Jones, late an employee in the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months of his compensation as such employee, and an additional amount not exceeding $250 to defray burial expenses of said Thomas D. Jones.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

W. RAY LOOMIS (H. REPT. NO. 874).

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Speaker, I also offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 436.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House is hereby directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House, until otherwise provided for, extra compensation to W. Ray Loomis, assistant superintendent of the document room of the House, for extra work performed in compiling and editing the Weekly Compendium and Monthly Compendium, at the rate of $125 per month from and after January 31, 1918, the date when the preparation of said compilations began.

With the following committee amendments:

Line 2, strike out the words "until otherwise provided for" and insert "during sessions of the Sixty-fifth Congress."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Speaker, this resolution requires some explanation and perhaps some consideration. As a general rule, I am opposed to paying extra compensation to persons who are regularly carried on the rolls of the House, but in this particular instance I favor making an exception to that rule and passing this resolution. W. Ray Loomis is an employee in the document room, receiving, I think, $2,500 a year. He undertook at the date mentioned in the resolution the publication of a monthly compendium and a weekly compendium. He has done unquestionably a vast amount of work and he has done it well. He has received from about 240 Members of Congress encouragement in doing this work and has received their approval. In a word, I desire to tell you the contents and the purpose of this compendium. It contains a subject index of all public laws and joint resolutions receiving action during the Congress, a list of all resolutions introduced seeking investigation, a list of laws and public resolutions enacted during the Congress, a synopsis of the riders that appear in the different appropriation bills, and a history of the omnibus pension status, and a numerical status of all bills and resolutions and other transactions of Congress that are not so easily classified. I have made some investigation among the different Members of Congress who have used this publication, and I find that those who use it universally commend it.

Mr. MADDEN. Did the gentleman say how many used it?

Mr. SANFORD. Two hundred and forty Members of Congress have certified in writing that they have used it, and they have been helped greatly by it.

Mr. MADDEN. I would not give 50 cents for it.

Mr. SANFORD. There are Members of Congress, on the other hand, who take the position the gentleman from Illinois takes, who do not find it useful, but it does seem to me from the examination I have given it and the use I have made of it and my secretary has made of it that it does serve a purpose that is not duplicated in any way by the daily calendar or the synopsis that appears in the RECORD.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANFORD. I will.

Mr. BLACK. Speaking of the 250 Members who have approved the publication of this compendium, is it not true that the author of it has written Members of Congress asking their judgment of his work?

Mr. SANFORD. I have no doubt the author of this work, like authors of a great many other literary publications, has sought commendation for his efforts. I dare say, however, that a Member of Congress has not given that approval without some consideration.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANFORD. I will.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. If this work is any different in its nature from the regular calendar, why should it not be prepared just as the calendar is prepared; why should we leave it to private initiative?

Mr. SANFORD. That question can not be answered. I do not know why Congress does not provide to have everything done that ought to be done, but the fact remains there is a great deal of precedent in the House for encouraging these men who on their own initiative find a field for their efforts and work diligently in that field. It can be said for this man that he has certainly worked with a great degree of assiduity, and his publication does show that it has been carefully and conscientiously done and that Congress has been using it. Of course, I have no interest in having this man paid; in fact, my prejudice would be against having him paid; but on a full examination of the facts it seems to me the man merits the compensation which he asks.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. When does the man do this work?

Mr. SANFORD. I have asked very carefully, and he says he does it outside of the regular hours of his employment in the Document Room.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANFORD. I do.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will say that I have on three different occasions saved several hours of time in looking up matters. I know in one instance I got the data which I knew from previous experience took me half a day to get.

Mr. SANFORD. I have had that same experience, and I have against my prejudice become a convert to this resolution. I have had a great many conversations with this fellow and looked over his work, and I can not resist his claim for compensation for that reason.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Is it not possible to refer to this compendium and ascertain the status of any bill that has been acted upon in committee and in process of enactment?

Mr. SANFORD. Not only that but also to find its number, when it has become the law, and by this publication it seems that a man without much experience in Congress can readily find out what he wants to know about the status of legislation. I know of no other way that a man who is not very familiar with proceedings here can find his way about.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. SANFORD. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not oppose the passage of the resolution. I yield due deference to the gentleman who did the work but question very much whether all the work he has done has been performed outside the hours of his usual employment. This weekly compendium is quite a bulky affair, weekly and monthly. I do not pretend to pass judgment upon it. I have been away very much of the time when it was being issued. It is not used in my office. I have examined it and could find nothing in it that I could not find in the regular index to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The index to the RECORD is issued every two weeks. This is issued every week. This does not cover private bills. Usually the most difficulty which Members have in looking up matter in the RECORD is as to private bills. It may be, however, useful, and if useful it should be provided for in the regular way. However, I have no objection where a man has performed the service to having him paid extra compensation, although it raises his compensation, I think, to $4,000 a year. The last Republican House had a man employed who kept track of every bill that was introduced and notified the introducer of the bill whenever any move was made on the bill, both in the House and the Senate. When the bill was referred, when the bill was reported, when the bill was acted on in the House, when the bill was sent to the Senate and referred and reported by the Senate committee, when acted on by the Senate, when enrolled and sent to the President, the introducer of the bill received a notice telling him what action had been taken, which was quite useful. I remember with what enthusiasm for economy the Democratic side of the House abolished that place, said that hereafter we do not propose to waste the people's money [laughter on the Republican side] for these extravagant things. Let Members keep track of the legislation that is going on; they ought to know what is doing in the House from day to day, and along comes a very good man over in the Document Room receiving, I think, a salary of $2,500 a year, and, recognizing the extent of the ignorance of Congress, proceeds to instruct them by getting out practically a duplicate of what is now issued by other employees of the House in the form of the index to the RECORD. Well, I do not know how he got it published, but it was published. The work evidences a great deal of hard labor on the part of this gentleman. There is no doubt about that. And if Members of the House make use of it—as they say they do, and I do not dispute that—then, of course, fairness would require that he be paid and that his place be provided for in the regular way, not by giving him increased compensation for doing something which he says he does out of regular hours and which we know can not be done out of regular hours entirely. Give him pay for that instead of double pay for performing one service and drawing pay for another.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee). The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the resolution as amended.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and the resolution was agreed to.

CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to nominate and move the election of Mr. PHELAN, of Massachusetts, to be chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Glass. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina nominates Mr. PHELAN to the chairmanship of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and moves his election.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order to-morrow to consider bills on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that it shall be in order to-morrow to consider bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the gentleman if this is to be bills unobjected to or are we to commence with the Private Calendar and take up each bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I understood from the gentleman in private conversation that the desire was to substitute to-morrow for Friday.

Mr. KITCHIN. It would be regularly in order on Friday.

Mr. MANN. The Private Calendar would be in order on Friday?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr MANN. And the gentleman desires to substitute to-morrow, as I understood, with the intention that by agreement we would adjourn over until Monday?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; and when we finish to-morrow's work, which is when we adjourn to-morrow, I shall ask unanimous consent to adjourn over until Friday.

Mr. MANN. Let us have it all in one request.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will ask that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the business in order under the rules on Friday next shall be in order to-morrow, and when the House adjourns to-morrow it shall stand adjourned until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon. Is there objection?

Mr. TILSON. Reserving the right to object, may I ask one further question? Ordinarily the claims alternate, with war claims and pension claims sandwiched in between Friday after Friday. Now, what special committee will have the floor to-morrow?

Mr. KITCHIN. Private claims on the Private Calendar.

Mr. TILSON. There are a number of other bills besides claims.

Mr. KITCHIN. Those that are on the Private Calendar, some from the Indian Affairs Committee, some from War Claims, and some of what we call private claims, from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TILSON. On one Friday claims are in order and on the next Friday pensions, and the next Friday war claims and the next Friday pensions again. Which will be considered to-morrow?

Mr. KITCHIN. It is for all as they appear on the Private Calendar.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman if he has come to any determination about the Christmas recess?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think I have stated, certainly once or possibly twice, that when we adjourn Tuesday I shall ask unanimous consent to adjourn over until Friday, with the understanding that on Friday we will do no work, but adjourn over until the following Monday.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman expects to have a session on both Monday and Tuesday of next week?

Mr. MANN. Probably there will no business.

Mr. KITCHIN. This coming Monday and Tuesday?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. I understand the rivers and harbors bill will be in. I saw the chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] about it, and he says he will report the river and harbor bill to-morrow and they will take that up on Monday and Tuesday.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the next appropriation bill——

Mr. KITCHIN. Will be the legislative bill, we hope.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought the foreign affairs bill would be first in order.

Mr. KITCHIN. Whichever is ready first.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not believe the legislative bill will be ready until the week after the holidays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN]?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There is a bill upon the calendar, but I do not think upon the Private Calendar, yet in one sense it is private, which relates to an incorporation to dispense a very urgent and imperative charity for the relief of suffering people in the Near East. If I could get unanimous consent I would like to bring it up to-morrow.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think the gentleman could ask unanimous consent to-morrow morning for that.

Mr. MANN. I think he could do it. I do not know what the bill is.

Mr. KITCHIN. It is to incorporate a charitable institution. I can say that the gentleman can ask unanimous consent to-morrow before we take up private claims.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not want to take up the time of the House. If it should take up the time of the House I would not want to do it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. Both requests were included in one, Mr. Speaker, as I understand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title:

H. R. 13261. An act providing for the transportation from the District of Columbia of governmental employees whose services no longer are required.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 187. Joint resolution providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than Member of Congress.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 19, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Department of Agriculture for the general expenses of the Forest Service, fiscal year 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1602); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Department of Commerce, transmitting report of the board of visitors to the Bureau of Standards (H. Doc. No. 1603); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, transmitting traveling expenses incident to the detail of employees from the office of one surveyor general to another during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1604); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. RAKER, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 249) to authorize the Secretary having jurisdiction of the same to set aside certain public lands to be used as national sanitariums by fraternal or benevolent organizations, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 869), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13353) to extend the provisions of the homestead laws touching credit for period of enlistment to the soldiers, nurses, and officers of the Army and the seamen, marines, nurses, and officers of the Navy and the Marine Corps of the United States who have served or will have served with the Mexican border operations or during the war with Germany, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 870), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. HOUSTON, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4440) for the relief of the heirs of Mrs. Susan A. Nicholas, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 864), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ZIHLMAN: A bill (H. R. 13426) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to make certain donations of ordnance and cannons to designated cities; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 13427) granting the consent of Congress to the county of Allegheny, Pa., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Monongahela River at or near the borough of Wilson, in the county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. RAKER: A bill (H. R. 13428) for the protection and improvement of the Lassen Volcanic National Park, Cal., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 13429) granting the consent of Congress to the county of Allegheny, Pa., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near McKees Rocks Borough, in the county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HUSTED: A bill (H. R. 13430) to amend section 1766 of the Revised Statutes relating to officer in arrears; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 13431) granting the consent of Congress to the county of Allegheny, Pa., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Monongahela River at or near the borough of Wilson, in the county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. RIORDAN: A bill (H. R. 13432) providing for a survey of Great Kills, Staten Island, N. Y.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. STEELE: A bill (H. R. 13433) to promote interstate trade or commerce, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. GANDY: A bill (H. R. 13440) transferring jurisdiction and control over Battle Mountain Sanitarium of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers from the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to the Secretary of War for use for Army hospital purposes for the period covered by the exigencies growing out of the present war; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DARROW: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 371) expressing the sense of Congress on the punishment of the late Emperor of Germany and everyone associated with him in violation of the law of nations and the committing of brutal atrocities in the late war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BLAND of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 13434) granting a pension to Adeline Bomgardner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13435) granting an increase of pension to William R. Roark; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13436) granting an increase of pension to Burnetta Dayton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13437) granting an increase of pension to Frank B. Gillespie; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 13438) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Crandall; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MORGAN: A bill (H. R. 13439) granting a pension to Henry S. Palmer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Petition of president and faculty of Duquesne University, Pittsburgh, Pa., urging the independence of Ireland; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. DALE of New York: Resolutions by transportation bureau of the Denver Civic and Commercial Association, favoring the return of the railroads to the management of their respective owners at earliest date practicable; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. DOOLING: Resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of citizens of New York City, held at Corpus Christi Hall, November 26, 1918, relating to Irish freedom and self-determination; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. ESCH: Resolutions of the Oshkosh Rotary Club, pledging their support to the principle of universal obligatory military training for all young men before voting age; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Resolutions of Rockford (Ill.) Affiliated Council, No. 169, of the North American Union, favoring Senate bill 3475, concerning certification of death of soldiers; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KAHN: Resolution of San Francisco Sales Managers' Association, urging the appointment by Congress of a business-planning commission; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolution by members of local board No. 151, New York City, urging passage of legislation recognizing the various draft boards for their past services; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LUNDEEN: Petition of Minnehaha Lodge, No. 827, I. A. of M., of Minneapolis, Minn., requesting permanent Government control and eventual ownership of the railroads of the United States; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Electrical Workers' Local No. 528, of Minneapolis shops, Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, asking that the railroads remain under Government control; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. RAKER: Resolution urging the passage of Senate bill 4967, by faculty of State Normal School of San Jose, Cal.; to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. SCHALL: Resolution by Dr. S. N. Deinard, Rabbi Silbers, Rabbi Matt, Dr. Marcus, and M. Zipperman, and sundry other Jewish citizens of Minneapolis, Minn., urging intervention on behalf of the Jews in Poland and Galicia; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 19, 1918.

(Legislative day of Sunday, December 15, 1918.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock noon on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, S. Dak.	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Smith, Md.
Beckham	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Kellogg	Page	Smoot
Culberson	Kenyon	Penrose	Spencer
Curtis	Kirby	Phelan	Sutherland
Dillingham	La Follette	Pittman	Thomas
Fletcher	Lenroot	Poindexter	Townsend
Gay	Lodge	Pollock	Trammell
Gerry	McCumber	Pomerene	Underwood
Gronna	McKellar	Ransdell	Vardaman
Hale	McLean	Shafroth	Watson
Harding	McNary	Sheppard	Weeks
Hardwick	Martin, Ky.	Sherman
Henderson	Martin, Va.	Simmons
Johnson, Cal.	Moses	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is absent on official business.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I wish to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] on account of illness.

Mr. McKELLAR. The senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is absent owing to illness.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My colleague the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] is absent on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13261) providing for the transportation from the District of Columbia of governmental employees whose services no longer are required.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 13261. An act providing for the transportation from the District of Columbia of governmental employees whose services no longer are required; and

S. J. Res. 187. Joint resolution providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than Member of Congress.

SHIPS OF WAR SURRENDERED TO THE ALLIES.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I know this is a recess and there is no opportunity for morning business, but I have a Senate resolution of inquiry which I should like to have read to appear in the RECORD. I shall call it up at the proper time when we have routine business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 390), as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be directed to inform the Senate whether the report that the peace delegates of the United States at Paris are advocating the destruction of the ships of war surrendered to the allies and to the United States is correct; and, if so, by what authority the delegates to the peace conference are demanding the destruction of enemy property in part surrendered to the United States.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, on November 21, 1918, I submitted a resolution (S. Res. 351) approving the organization of a league of nations to prevent wars and enforce justice, which was ordered to lie on the table. I move that the resolution be taken from the table and be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2614) to amend sections 2139 and 2140 of the Revised Statutes and the acts amendatory thereof, and for other purposes, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 5209) granting an increase of pension to David W. Herriman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MOSES:

A bill (S. 5210) to donate a gun or howitzer to the town of Claremont, in the State of New Hampshire; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 5211) granting an increase of pension to Henry S. Silsby (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LENROOT:

A bill (S. 5212) for the relief of Philip S. Everest; to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask unanimous consent to submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. I simply wish to say that it relates to the compensation of clerks and assistants to Senators, which we have had up several times before, and on which I hope to have favorable action by the committee hereafter. I move that the amendment be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

SALARIES OF FEDERAL JUDGES.

Mr. GORE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12001) to amend an act entitled "An act to revise, codify, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. KELLOGG submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AERIAL MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I must object to further routine business to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. May I offer a matter that I wish referred to the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will be glad to yield to the Senator if he will just send it to the desk.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; it will take but a moment. I submit a communication from Capt. B. B. Lipsner, lately received, relating to the aerial mail service. I think it ought to go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so referred.

THE REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. When we recessed on yesterday, it was with the understanding that we should take up this morning the section relating to the repeal of the zone system. I understand the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] is ready to proceed with it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 276 the committee proposes to add a new section, to be known as section 1402, in the following words:

SEC. 1402. (a) That section 1103 of the revenue act of 1917 is hereby repealed.

(b) Section 1101 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1101. That on and after July 1, 1919, the rates of postage on publications entered as second-class matter (including sample copies to the extent of 10 per cent of the weight of copies mailed to subscribers during the calendar year) when sent by the publisher thereof from the post office of publication or other post office, or when sent by a news agent to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news agents for the purpose of sale, shall be 1 cent per pound or fraction thereof for delivery within the first and second zones applicable to fourth-class matter, and 1½ cents per pound or fraction thereof for delivery within any other zone."

(c) This section shall take effect July 1, 1919.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I hope to have the attention of Senators present, because I am not endeavoring to make a speech, but to present certain facts in behalf of the Post Office Department. Senators who are about to vote on this question undoubtedly will want to do so with the fullest information possible on the merits of the matter upon which they are about to vote. For that reason I express the hope that the Senate may give me its attention, and in return I promise to be as brief and compact in my statement of the matter as possible.

Under date of December 13, 1918, the Post Office Department sends me this memorandum respecting the proposed committee amendment:

The rates proposed in the revenue bill for second-class matter would abolish the present zone rates and make the flat rate of 1 cent a pound for the first zone of 150 miles; beyond that it would be 1½ cents per pound. This would make the old second-class rate apply to the first 150 miles and the increase beyond that but one-half cent per pound. This would possibly increase the revenue over the old rate—

That is, the old law before the war—

approximately $4,000,000 annually, not as much additional revenue as will be derived from the present law during the first year.

The Senate will recall, let me say parenthetically, that in the first war-revenue bill we increased these rates through a period of years, climaxing, my recollection is, at the end of the third fiscal year.

If the amendment proposed in the revenue bill now before the Senate is finally made law, the second-class publications will be handled at an annual loss of approximately $68,000,000. It was estimated that the zone rates now in effect would ultimately have increased the revenue on second-class matter about $18,000,000 or $20,000,000. Even at those rates in effect the loss would have been at least $50,000,000 over the cost of transportation handling. The proposed rates will not pay the handling costs in any instance, let alone the transportation and other charges.

Mr. President, it is therefore evident to the Senate, unless Senators are prepared to dispute the statements of fact made by the Post Office Department, that second-class mail matter was being handled at the time this war began at an annual loss of approximately $70,000,000. The figures have varied, I think, all the way from $68,000,000 to $73,000,000.

When we passed the last war-revenue bill it was finally voted into that bill that there should be an increase on the zone system, applicable to the advertising sections alone of newspapers and magazines, which the department now says it estimates at the period when the greatest increase would be applicable to reduce that loss, the deficit of handling this sort of matter from $18,000,000 to $20,000,000 per annum by that amount.

Now, the Senate Committee on Finance proposes, before this law can have but a few months' trial, to substitute for it a proposition which will not possibly increase the postal revenues from this class of matter more than $4,000,000, and which will still leave the Government handling publications of that character and mail matter of that class at an annual loss of approximately $60,000,000.

Mr. President, I think the most complete and comprehensive statement of the facts that was ever made with reference to this much-disputed matter was made on the 1st day of May, 1918, before the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads by the present able and efficient First Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Koons. The Publishers' Association, supporting Senator MCKELLAR's proposition, had appeared before that committee. They had been given an extended and exhaustive hearing. At the conclusion of their hearing Mr. Koons, representing the Government, appearing for the Post Office Department, presented what I regard as the most compact and complete statement of the facts with reference to this matter that has ever appeared in print.

The old law affecting second-class mail rates, or establishing them, which the Senate committee proposes to restore with a slight increase, almost inappreciable, of $4,000,000, was passed in 1885. Mr. Koons, on that question, presenting the view of the department, made this short statement of fact to which I wish to invite the attention of the Senate. He said:

The matter of increased rates of postage on second-class matter has been pending for a great many years. The present low flat rate was enacted in 1885. It has been investigated by at least one commission and on numerous occasions by the department. Increased rates have been recommended by practically every Postmaster General for the last 12 or 15 years.

The act that goes into effect on the 1st of July, as you know, is a part of the revenue bill. The department's attitude on the legislation was stated yesterday by Senator HARDWICK, and is a matter of public record. The Congress has passed this legislation. The department is not in favor of any change or suspension of the law at this time.

The bill as passed, as you know, provides a separate rate for reading matter and advertising matter.

Proceeding with the statement before the committee, Mr. Koons said——

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator what he is reading from?

Mr. HARDWICK. I am reading from the hearings before the Post Office Committee, May 1, 1918, the statement of the First Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Koons.

Continuing his statement before the committee, Mr. Koons observed that the existing law—that is, the so-called zone system for advertising matter—had been framed by the department, by the Postmaster General, and by that officer of the Government presented to the conferees on the first war-revenue bill, by them adopted, and by them reported to both Houses of Congress, which finally assented thereto.

He continues:

The present low flat rate of 1 cent a pound has been in effect for many years, and that rate was fixed for the purpose of the dissemination of news and educational matter. It was the desire of the department that this flat rate be continued. At the time the present law was passed the advertising matter constituted about 5 per cent of the publications, and the flat rate will continue on publications that do not exceed this amount.

That was in 1885 that the per cent of advertising matter, taking the country as a whole and these publications as a whole, both magazines and newspapers, amounted to 5 per cent of the total contents of their respective publications.

Mr. Koons appears there to go on to demonstrate from the facts on file in his office that the percentage of advertising matter carried in the publications of the country, both in magazines and newspapers, has increased to such an extent that to-day it is at least 50 per cent or probably more.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, there was so much confusion in the Chamber at the time the Senator from Georgia made his statement as to the provisions of the old law that I am going to ask him to repeat it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Very well. The provisions of the old law——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I refer to the provisions of the law which was passed in 1917.

Mr. HARDWICK. The provisions of the old law, which imposed the present flat rate of 1 cent a pound—the purpose of which was to encourage the dissemination of educational matter throughout the country—should be continued on all reading matter, but that on advertising matter—and that is very easy to determine with a foot rule—the department would exact a slight increase, graduated through a scale to a climax at the end of the third fiscal year, from which increase the department estimates that from $18,000,000 to $20,000,000 of this $70,000,000 deficit on this class of postal matter would be saved to the Government and to the Public Treasury at the end of the three-year period and annually thereafter.

Mr. Koons, in proceeding with this proposition, took the Saturday Evening Post, Harper's Weekly, and a great many of the leading magazines throughout the country. He showed the development of the advertising proportion of their matter in each of these publications, beginning at a very low rate in 1885—an average of 5 per cent throughout the country—of advertising as compared to the total space in these publications, which has increased until it has reached an average of 50 per cent throughout the country.

I pause here, Senators, to show you the kind of matter which we are handling as mail. Now, here [exhibiting] is a recent issue of the Iron Age. Its weight is 5⅛ pounds. It is almost entirely advertising. Any Senator who desires to do so can examine it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Georgia who is the publisher of the Iron Age?

Mr. HARDWICK. I shall have to examine the publication in order to answer the Senator. I suppose it is published by a company, as most of these magazines are.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. Penton is the publisher, is he not?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. He may be at the head of the company.

Mr. POMERENE. I may say that Mr. Penton is one of the most earnest advocates of the increase of postage on second-class mail matter.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, it is very much to his credit; and I am glad to hear the Senator from Ohio make that statement.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator will find, in the discussion which occurred on this question probably a year ago, that I introduced a letter from Mr. Penton urging the increase.

Mr. HARDWICK. I am very glad to hear the Senator say that, and it reflects very great credit on Mr. Penton.

Mr. POMERENE. I may also say that Mr. Penton not only has control of the publication to which the Senator from Georgia has called attention but he also has control of three or four or perhaps five other similar publications.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes. I presume the Senator from Ohio knows the facts; and I again say that it is very much to the credit of this gentleman that he does not want to continue that indefensible graft which we are responsible for, if we continue the policy at the expense of the taxpayers and Treasury of this country.

I want to read to the Senate briefly an analysis made by the Post Office Department in reference to this particular magazine, the Iron Age.

Mr. KELLOGG. From what issue is the Senator from Georgia reading?

Mr. HARDWICK. I am reading from a statement of the department as to the issue of January 3, 1918. What I shall now read is not found in the hearings. The Iron Age is a weekly publication. The analysis is as follows:

Weight per copy—pounds	5¼
Circulation (weekly) (about)	14,000
Estimates based on 90 per cent by mail (about)	12,600
Pounds mailed this issue (about)	64,000
Postage at 1 cent per pound paid on same	640
If sent by express, charges, with war tax, would have been from 11 to 54 cents per copy.
At minimum of 11 cents per copy	$1,386
Advertising rate per page—

That is what the publisher or the publishing company got for advertising—

This issue	$42
Number pages advertising this issue	692
Total number pages this issue	848

So out of 848 pages, 692 were advertising—

Percentage of advertising—per cent	81
Advertising revenue this issue	$29,000

The Post Office Department lost nearly $4,000 in the distribution of this one issue.

Mr. President, I next take up one of the trade journals, which is called the Hardware Age. The department sends me an analysis of a single copy of that publication. I am not going to bore the Senate by putting in a great number of these, but I am going to take two, merely to show that the one that I have offered is not exceptional. The analysis as to this issue of the Hardware Age of February 7, 1918, is as follows:

Hardware Age, annual spring buying number, issue of Feb. 7, 1918.

Weight per copy—pounds	2½
Circulation (weekly) (about)	18,000
Estimates based on 90 per cent by mail (about)	16,200
Pounds mailed this issue (about)	40,500
Postage at 1 cent per pound (present rate) (about)	$405
If sent by express, charges, with war tax, would have been from 11 cents to 36 cents per copy.
At minimum of 11 cents per copy (about)	$1,782
Advertising rate per page this issue	$56
Number pages advertising this issue	309
Total number pages this issue	420
Percentage of advertising this issue—per cent	73
Advertising revenue	$17,304

The Post Office Department lost nearly $2,500 in the distribution of this one issue.

I have had sent to me by the Post Office Department a great number of other exhibits of the same kind and type, demonstrating, as they do, a condition that ought to be intolerable to any man who knows the facts accurately, and representing a condition which I do not believe any Senator of the United States will vote to perpetuate and continue if he knows the truth about the matter.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I desire to ask whether or not there is any postage on the reading matter in these magazines over and above what there was under the old law?

Mr. HARDWICK. Not one penny is added. The original policy established by this Government was that, in order to encourage the dissemination of information among the masses of the people, which is necessary if democratic institutions are to be maintained and perpetuated, we would give practically a nominal rate for the diffusion among the people of that sort of information, and the law which the committee is now seeking to repeal left that policy absolutely unchanged and unaltered.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is a rate of 1 cent per pound?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir; a rate of 1 cent a pound.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Now, I should like to ask the Senator whether the Government sustains a loss on the shipment of this second-class matter even at 1 cent a pound on the reading matter?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes. I have already told the Senate that the loss by reason of that fact is $70,000,000 a year.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Can the Senator estimate how much the loss is per pound?

Mr. HARDWICK. I can state to the Senator that the estimate of the Hughes Commission—and the department approved of it—was that it cost the Government 8 cents and a fraction per pound to handle and transport this second-class mail matter, taken as a whole. Therefore when we charged a cent a pound we lost over 7 cents a pound on every pound we handled. I will give the Senator from Colorado the exact figures, if he would like to have them, though I have stated them substantially.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to have the exact figures.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is incomprehensible to my mind——

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if the committee purposes entirely repealing the law to which he has referred and going back to the old system?

Mr. HARDWICK. Almost that. The committee proposes that after——

Mr. MYERS. I should like to know what it does propose.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator will find it in the bill on page 276.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It establishes a rate of one and a half cents a pound after the second zone.

Mr. HARDWICK. After the second zone—which is 150 miles, according to my understanding—they propose to charge a cent and a half a pound instead of 1 cent, and a cent per pound even on such stuff as this [exhibiting] in the first zone.

Mr. MYERS. Then it is without limit after they get out of the first zone?

Mr. HARDWICK. After they pass the first two zones there will be charged a cent and a half, without any further charge for advertising matter or anything else.

Mr. SHAFROTH. And leaving a loss of six and a half cents on each pound shipped by the Government?

Mr. HARDWICK. Involving a loss of six and a half cents on each pound shipped by the Government, amounting, the Postmaster General says, to $60,000,000 out of the pockets of the taxpayers and the Public Treasury of this country.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, is it not also true that the owners of these periodicals, as to the short hauls, instead of taking advantage of the mails or of the mail routes use the express companies, because they find it cheaper? So they put the long haul upon the Government and deprive it of the profitable short haul by taking advantage of the express companies.

Mr. HARDWICK. Undoubtedly; but we have no right to expect anything else. That is just good business on their part.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course; and I am not complaining about it.

Mr. HARDWICK. But I understand the fact is as the Senator states it.

Mr. THOMAS. And it is something that ought to be considered in connection with this proposition.

Mr. HARDWICK. The Senator is quite right; that does not add to the beauties of the situation, considered from the standpoint of the taxpayer and the Public Treasury. But it seems to me that we have not any right as sensible men to expect that they as sensible business men will do anything else except that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator another question, namely, whether this cheap rate of postage, in the case of magazines particularly, has had a tendency to increase the advertising matter in the magazines and to make it more profitable to the magazines themselves?

Mr. HARDWICK. I think it has, of course; I think the Senator's question answers itself. Under this principle of the Government which we put into the law for the education of the people, a great commercial business has been built, which has been sustained and fostered and strengthened and enriched out of the Public Treasury and at the expense of the Nation. It is not only true, let me say to the Senator, with reference to the magazines, but it is true with reference to every newspaper in this country, daily and weekly alike.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Has the Post Office Department made any estimate as to the increase in advertisements and increase in their profits occasioned by the low rates?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir; I have made some reference to that, and, if the Senator will give me his attention, he will find that I am going to cover that pretty well, I think.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Very well.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Koons continues—

We have been able to find a few of the publications in the Public Library. The Saturday Evening Post, for instance, on July 11, 1885, carried a total number of columns of 64. It carried 3.7 columns of advertising. In the issue of April 14, 1917, the total number of columns of that publication was 528, with 324 columns of advertising, or 61 per cent of advertising. It has increased from 5.8 in 1885 to 61 per cent of advertising.

Harpers Magazine apparently carried no advertising, so far as we are able to ascertain, in the early days. In the issue of January, 1885—it carried 48 columns (of advertising) out of a total of 328. In the issue of April, 1917, out of a total of 574 columns it carried 238 columns of advertising; or had increased from nothing to 41.49 per cent.

When the law establishing the 1-cent rate was originally put into effect—

That statement is true with reference to a great number of other publications.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Nearly all of them.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes. And let me say, Mr. President, that it is not only true with reference to the magazines, from which we all seem to be willing to require to render full and exact justice to the Public Treasury and to the people of the United States, but it is true with reference to the newspapers, that most of us want to favor and exempt in this matter. I will demonstrate that, too, before I finish.

I desire now, Mr. President, to ask permission to incorporate in my remarks, without wearying the patience of the Senate to read them, the tables to which I have referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The tables referred to are as follows:

Proportion of advertising to reading matter in certain publications of the dates indicated.

SATURDAY EVENING POST, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Date of issue.	Total columns contents.	Advertising columns.	Advertising.	Date of issue.	Total columns contents.	Advertising columns.	Advertising.
			Per ct.				Per ct.
Aug. 1, 1874	48	1½	3.12	July 22, 1876	48	4.4	9.16
Oct. 17, 1874	48	1½	3.12	Jan. 3, 1885	64	5.4	8.44
Dec. 26, 1874	48	0.7	1.50	May 2, 1885	64	3.2	5.00
Jan. 1, 1876	48	8.1	17.00	July 11, 1885	64	3.7	5.80
May 6, 1876	48	7.5	15.62	Apr. 14, 1917	528	234.0	41.00

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, NEW YORK, N. Y.

June, 1850	290	None.	None.	January, 1875	302	None.	None.
July, 1850	290	None.	None.	June, 1875	320	None.	None.
August, 1850	296	None.	None.	October, 1875	302	None.	None.
September, 1850	288	None.	None.	January, 1885	328	48	14.63
October, 1850	286	None.	None.	May, 1885	320	52	16.25
November, 1850	280	None.	None.	October, 1885	370	44	11.89
December, 1850	288	None.	None.	April, 1917	574	238	41.49

NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW, NEW YORK, N. Y.

January, 1850	264	None.	None.	July, 1875	244	3	1.23
April, 1850	276	None.	None.	October, 1875	268	23	8.61
July, 1850	272	None.	None.	January, 1885[1]	116	18	15.51
October, 1850	264	None.	None.	May, 1885[1]	108	10	9.34
January, 1875	252	7	2.78	October, 1885[1]	114	6	5.31
April, 1875	280	7	2.70	April, 1917[1]	178	16	8.99

[1] Monthly.

AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST, NEW YORK, N. Y.

January, 1850	62	4½	7.26	October, 1875	120	29½	24.58
March, 1850	64	7½	11.19	January, 1885	144	45	31.25
October, 1850	64	5½	8.85	March, 1885	150	57	38.75
January, 1875	132	35½	26.89	October, 1885	150	58½	38.00
March, 1875	120	33½	28.05	May 12, 1917	80	32	40.00

Mr. HARDWICK. After giving these tables, Mr. Koons concludes with this proposition:

This shows—

That is, the tables referred to—that since the present law—

That is, the 1-cent law of 1885—

was passed a new feature has entered into the business of these publications, and that is the feature of advertising. They have commercialized to a large extent the second-class matter.

Mr. Koons was next asked to give to the committee the prices that these users of the second-class mail privilege get for their advertising, and he gives us a table showing what they get per page and per column. Take, for instance, the Saturday Evening Post. The price for advertising in that publication is $5,000 a page and $1,250 a column. The different publications receive varying amounts, but I am not going to weary the patience of the Senate by reading this table. I am going to ask, Mr. President, in a general way, permission to include each of the tables to which I shall refer during the course of these remarks without other than the general permission from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table last referred to by Mr. HARDWICK is as follows:

Prices for advertising.

	Page.	Column.
Christian Herald	$900.00	$255.00
Saturday Evening Post	5,000.00	1,250.00
Collier's Weekly	3,000.00	750.00
The Youth's Companion	1,600.00	475.00
Literary Digest	1,280.00	435.00
Harper's Magazine	225.00	112.50
American Magazine	1,200.00	429.00
Delineator	3,500.00	1,000.00
Everybody's	700.00	250.00
Farm Journal	2,205.00	750.00
Good Housekeeping	1,000.00	357.50
Ladies' Home Journal	6,000.00	1,600.00
Cosmopolitan	1,750.00	643.50
McCall's	2,160.00	804.00
McClure's	1,445.00	425.00
Metropolitan	1,400.00	350.00
Modern Priscilla	1,680.00	420.00
Review of Reviews	300.00	150.00
Scribner's	250.00	125.00
Successful Farming	1,800.00	600.00
Woman's Home Companion	3,800.00	1,000.00
World's Work	224.00	112.00
Iron Age	72.00	(?) 35.00
Engineering News-Record	(?) 48.00	(?) 24.00

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does the $5,000 referred to by the Senator relate to the rate for advertising in one issue only or for a year or for a month?

Mr. HARDWICK. The rate for each issue.

Mr. SHAFROTH. For one issue?

Mr. HARDWICK. For one issue—$5,000 a page and $1,250 a column. If any Senator wishes to ask about any particular one of these publications, I have the information here for him, and I think I am prepared to give it, but he will find these tables in the RECORD if he will read them after they are printed.

The fact is, Mr. President, that these men have grown rich out of commercializing the Governmental principle of sending through the mail reading matter at a nominal rate among the people in order to maintain democratic institutions in a free country. The position of the Post Office Department, and my position here to-day, speaking for them and in my representative capacity, is that we ought to make these men, every one of them, pay to the extent to which they have commercialized this principle. It is all right to continue to let them educate our people, if by courtesy in some cases we still choose to term it "education," by sending out publications among them; but it is all wrong to let them commercialize the proposition to the extent of more than 50 per cent and to send out their advertising in books like this [exhibiting] at a cost of thousands of dollars to the Government for each issue of each one of these publications.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. I have before me the letter of Mr. John A. Penton, of the Penton Publishing Co., written to me on June 7, 1917.

Mr. HARDWICK. I should be glad to have the Senator read it, if he cares to do so.

Mr. POMERENE. I will send it to the desk and ask to have it read.

Mr. HARDWICK. Is it a very long letter?

Mr. POMERENE. It is about a third of a column.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not object to the Senator having it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 27, 1917, at page 6362.]

THE PENTON PUBLISHING CO.,
Cleveland, June 7, 1917.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: We desire to make a protest against the suggestion to increase, particularly at this time, the cost of letter postage to the people of the United States. A burden of more than $60,000,000 a year would be imposed upon them if Congress puts into effect the proposal to advance the rate of the ordinary letter from 2 to 3 cents and of the postal card from 1 to 2 cents. This is seriously contemplated despite the fact that over $70,000,000 is given annually as a subsidy to the publishers of America in the form of a rate of 1 cent a pound for carrying their publications when it costs perhaps 7 or more cents a pound to perform this service.

Receiving the benefit of this service there are actually, for instance, monthly publications weighing as little as 75 to the pound. In other words, one of these periodicals must be carried and delivered through the mails for six and one-fourth years for 1 cent.

A subsidy such as this is outrageous. In our judgment it would be entirely justifiable for our Government to pay a bounty to build up our merchant marine, which involves international competition; but in our domestic business Government aid is unwarranted, and those accepting it do, in a sense either consciously or unconsciously, make of themselves objects of charity. Congress has no jurisdiction over foreign ships, which, under normal conditions, are the recipients of Government aid of one kind or another, but it might well overcome the handicap resting against American ships by some character of Federal assistance. Congress has, however, complete jurisdiction over all domestic enterprises, including publications.

The daily, weekly, and monthly periodicals of the United States have in a majority of cases carried on an incessant campaign against every real and imaginary form of special privilege for many years. At the same time they are themselves the greatest, most insistent, irrepressible, and unyielding seekers for Government aid in this or any other Nation. There is no more excuse, economic, educational, or sentimental, for this unrestrained expenditure of public funds than there would be were the Federal Treasury to subsidize our railroads, street cars, lighting systems, department or corner grocery stores.

To hand over $70,000,000 annually to the publishers simply because they demand it is to yield to a "hold-up" of the most brazen kind. It is an example of Government extravagance which every Senator and Representative must know is indefensible.

To do this and then attempt to further penalize the business interests of America, who are the large buyers of postage stamps, while our first-class postage already shows a profit of upward of $80,000,000 a year, is but little short of a crime.

To say the least, it is immoral, and our company does not desire to be the beneficiary of a system that is as much of a reflection upon those who receive it as it is upon those who give it.

Yours, sincerely,

JOHN A. PENTON, President.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I can only say that I congratulate the Senator from Ohio on the possession of so honest and so fair-minded a constituent. Although this man himself is a beneficiary, and a large one, as I have shown, of this very system, he has the honesty to repudiate it; and I wish there were more like him, not only among the magazine publishers, but among the daily and weekly publishers of this country.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I may say—perhaps I did say a moment ago—that he is a publisher of four or five trade journals.

Mr. HARDWICK. Four or five magazines of this character, I understood the Senator to say.

Mr. President, a moment ago the Senator from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] propounded a question that I am coming to in detail next. He said the proposition is that we shall charge 1 cent a pound for the first 150 miles, and a cent and a half a pound for all hauls longer than that for this class of mail. What does it cost us to give the service? Reading from page 60 of the hearings, the Post Office Department, speaking through Mr. Koons, gave the committee, and through it the Senate, this information. He was asked the same question by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], and his reply was:

Now, for the first, second, and third zone rates the average cost would be 5.44 cents a pound. That includes transportation, handling, and overhead charges. That is the first 300 miles. For the fourth zone, which is from 300 to 600 miles, 6.35 cents; in the fifth zone, which is from 600 to 1,000 miles, 7.76 cents; in the sixth zone, 1,000 to 1,400 miles, 9.18 cents; in the seventh zone, from 1,400 miles to 1,800 miles, 11 cents; and in the eighth zone, 1,800 miles and over, 12.62 cents.

Averaging for the country as a whole, and following the conclusions reached by the Hughes commission, which some years ago gave this very matter an exhaustive and careful investigation, the cost was stated to be for the country as a whole, 8$\frac{5}{10}$ cents a pound.

The contention was made before the committee that a great part of this deficit came from magazines and trade journals of the character I have exhibited to the committee. The department, replying to that question through Mr. Koons, said this:

The estimated total expense for the daily and weekly papers was 53 per cent of the entire expense * * * for handling all second-class matter.

So that no Senator need delude himself with the idea that the loss comes principally from such publications as this, because 53 per cent of all—$53 out of every $100—comes from the newspapers themselves, which any man who reads them knows contain a large and an increasingly larger percentage of advertising matter in their columns, dailies and weeklies alike. The other 47 per cent of second-class matter, Mr. Koons said, was composed of magazines. The weight of the dailies and weeklies, based on an estimate made in 1912, was 400,000,000 pounds, and the total weight of all second-class mail matter was 704,000,000 pounds; so you see that his 53 per cent estimate is not excessive.

The contention was made by the publishers of certain small dailies, as I will term them for comparative purposes, published in cities the size of Nashville and Memphis and Atlanta and Savannah and cities of that type throughout the country, that they caused very little of this deficit; and a very distinguished and able gentleman, who was the owner and publisher of one of these papers at Nashville, undertook to make an elaborate argument before the committee to sustain that contention, on which contention, let me say, the McKellar proposition rests solely and exclusively. Mr. Koons's reply to him was to show the difference that that same gentleman made to his own subscribers when his paper, the Nashville Banner, was delivered by carrier in the one instance or by mail in the other; and he put in evidence before the committee the subscription rates charged on his paper under the two systems.

Now, here are the subscription rates for the daily and Sunday Banner by carrier in Nashville and the surrounding towns and by mail outside of Tennessee and Alabama and southern Kentucky:

By carrier, first, for one month they charge 65 cents. If delivered by mail, 45 cents for one month.

Three months, $1.95 if by carrier; $1.35 if by mail.

Six months, $3.75 by carrier and $2.60 by mail.

One year, $7.50 if delivered by carrier and $5 if delivered by mail.

So you can see how much this privilege is worth to daily newspapers of that kind and character.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. Were those subscription rates under the law of 1917?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; this was the difference under the old law, before the law of 1917 came into effect. It must be remembered that the law of 1917 did not go into effect until July 1 of the present year.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator is aware that in delivering to a subscriber by mail in almost all cases the delivery is not made to his house, but is made to the post office in the town in bulk, whereas the newspaper in delivering to the subscriber by carrier delivers it by special messenger, practically, to his house; so that the cost of delivery in delivering by carrier is very much larger than it is in delivering at the post office in bulk, where the subscriber comes and gets his paper.

Mr. HARDWICK. Exactly; or where it is sent to him by the Government servants, either by the rural carrier or by the city carrier.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In the case of rural delivery, it is delivered along the route; but most of the subscribers to daily papers are residents of towns, and the papers are delivered in mail bags to the post office, and the subscriber comes to the post office and gets his paper.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; very rarely.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am calling the attention of the Senator to the fact that the cost of delivery in one case is not comparable with the cost of delivery in the other.

Mr. HARDWICK. And I am replying by calling the Senator's attention to the fact that this privilege is worth a good deal to the publisher of that class of paper. That is right. They are sent to the post office. The Government then, at its own expense—and that is why this charge is all proper against the papers—sends them out, either by rural carrier or by city carrier, in most cases, to the residence. The papers in cities like Atlanta and Savannah are always delivered through the mail by letter carrier.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the answer to that is this: If you take the town of Atlanta, Atlanta has its own daily papers.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And people in Atlanta do not subscribe to a paper published in another city; but, on the other hand, the people living in a small town of, say, 500 or a thousand population, which has no delivery from the post office, are the ones who subscribe to daily papers; and if you take a town of, say, a couple of thousand population in Georgia, distant perhaps 100 miles from Atlanta, the people in that town taking a daily paper from Atlanta will go to the post office themselves and get it.

Mr. HARDWICK. They prefer that. They do not mind that. They like to go to the post office to see their neighbors and gossip about local affairs.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am impressing upon the Senator that his comparison of the daily rates when the paper is delivered to the individual home and the rates by mail when the subscriber goes to the post office and gets the paper is not a fair one.

Mr. HARDWICK. Well, I do not agree with the Senator; that is all. The Senator is not impressing it on me very much. He is not impressing me. I do not think so. Of course, the Senator is entitled to his opinion, but that is not mine.

Mr. Koons continues:

It will be observed that where delivery is made by the publisher, he charges $2.50 more per annum than where it is made by mail. This additional charge of $2.50, of course, covers the delivery cost only to the publisher. Based on the weight of the publication, this would be an average cost of approximately 3 cents a pound for delivery service only, which the publisher charges the subscriber. These subscription rates also demonstrate that it is possible to charge two rates for subscriptions, or, in other words, to zone the rates as it will be observed that within a certain zone the subscription price is $5 per annum, and in a more distinct zone it is $7.50 per annum.

I next invite the attention of the Senate to the statement furnished it by the Post Office Department concerning the average haul, taking the country as a whole, of these various classes of publications that avail themselves of the second-class mailing privilege:

Average haul of different classes of publications, as shown by the department's testimony before the Hughes Commission.

	Average haul, miles.
Daily newspapers:
Subscribers' copies	255.41
Sample copies	315.25
Subscribers' copies and sample copies combined	255.75
Weekly and other than daily newspapers:
Subscribers' copies	489.89
Sample copies	495.99
Subscribers' copies and sample copies combined	490.13
Scientific periodicals:
Subscribers' copies	793.82
Sample copies	790.21
Subscribers' copies and sample copies combined	793.62
Educational periodicals:
Subscribers' copies	641.91
Sample copies	706.29
Subscribers' copies and sample copies combined	644.27
Religious periodicals:
Subscribers' copies	598.38
Sample copies	666.47
Subscribers' copies and sample copies combined	599.27
Trade journal periodicals:
Subscribers' copies	704.86
Sample copies	736.02
Subscribers' copies and sample copies combined	707.11
Agricultural periodicals:
Subscribers' copies	520.83
Sample copies	576.51
Subscribers' copies and sample copies combined	525.49
Magazines:
Subscribers' copies	907.64
Sample copies	1,027.02
Subscribers' copies and sample copies combined	920.79

That is 920 miles for the magazine as against about 255 miles for the daily newspaper, and about 490 for the weekly newspaper; but it must be remembered that both the daily and the weekly newspaper have a greater volume of business and a larger number of copies to handle than the magazines, and that fact has to be taken under consideration.

I next invite the attention of the Senate to the loss involved—the loss to the Government, to the Public Treasury, and to the people of the United States—by this transaction.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does the Senator mean the loss between the bill of 1917 and the proposed committee bill?

Mr. HARDWICK. I am going to take up, first, if the Senator pleases—the Senator's question is very pertinent, because I have not yet made it exactly plain—first, what the loss is under the old act, the act of 1885; second, how much of that loss we would have recouped under the existing law, the zone system included in the war-revenue bill of 1917; and, third, how much of that loss we would recoup if we substituted the McKellar proposition for the existing law or for the committee amendment.

Mr. KELLOGG. As I understand, the law of 1917 provided that the zone system should go into effect July 1, 1918.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. And the Senator will give us an estimate of the difference in revenue between that law, if it is allowed to remain as it is, and the proposed changes in second-class mail rates?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir; between that bill and the rates that the committee proposes, and the rates that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] proposes. I am going to do it in all three instances.

Mr. KELLOGG. And the present amendment of the committee does reduce the charges for second-class mail, as I understand.

Mr. HARDWICK. It reduces the loss from it, the Senator means?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; $4,000,000, and I will tell you frankly——

Mr. KELLOGG. The committee amendment is a reduction over the one of last year?

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, yes; it is a reduction to the publishers.

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; that is what I mean.

Mr. HARDWICK. It leaves the Treasury about where it was before. The $4,000,000 is not worth the expense and trouble of collecting it, and the change is not worth making, because then we will be met with the claim that we have already started a reform in this matter, and reduced it, and the subject ought not to be reopened again.

Mr. KELLOGG. The reason why I ask the Senator is this: I am not on the Finance Committee, but I have been told by some members of the Finance Committee that the committee amendment would increase the revenues of the Government, and increase the charges to the newspapers over the existing law of last year.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me read it again, because the Senator evidently did not hear what the Post Office Department said about it.

Mr. KELLOGG. I heard what the Senator read.

Mr. HARDWICK (reading)—

This would possibly increase over the old rate—

That is, the law of 1885—

approximately $4,000,000 annually.

The Senator has that figure fixed in his mind. He says:

It was estimated that the zone rates now in effect would ultimately have increased the revenue on second-class mail matter about $18,000,000 to $20,000,000.

In other words, the Post Office Department makes a statement that under the law contained now in the revenue act of 1917, which only took effect July 1, after the three-year period of increase is through and a maximum has been reached, an increase in the revenue from second-class matter of from $18,000,000 to $20,000,000 would result.

Mr. SMOOT. At the end of three years.

Mr. HARDWICK. Of course, the proposition would be a small increase—five or six million dollars the first year, ten or twelve million dollars the second year, eighteen or twenty million dollars the third year.

Mr. KELLOGG. Then, as I understand the Senator, it is claimed that in three years the increase of the revenue of the Government would be about eighteen or twenty million dollars.

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes, sir.

Mr. KELLOGG. But under the committee amendment only $4,000,000.

Mr. HARDWICK. Only $4,000,000. That is the fact. The department estimates that if the amendment proposed in the revenue bill now before the Senate becomes a law, second-class publications will be continued to be handled at an annual loss of approximately $68,000,000. The department contends also—it has estimated and does estimate—that the zone rates now in effect—that is, the existing law enacted in the revenue bill—would have ultimately raised the revenues by a sum of from eighteen to twenty million dollars; that is, when we arrive at the end of the three-year-period increases and reach the climax of increases, it was the figure that was to be annually raised thereafter.

Mr. President, it is utterly impossible to defend or justify the policy that this Government has maintained since these publications have been so largely commercialized. Just as this honest publisher out in Ohio said, it is a graft that no man who understands the truth can justify. I can not believe that the Senators of the United States for any motive, political or otherwise, with the truth staring them in the face and the facts known to them and their own Government appealing to them in the interest of the taxpayers and the Public Treasury, will continue to perpetuate this thing.

The truth is, Mr. President, that the increase carried in the revenue act of 1917 is from $18,000,000 to $20,000,000, but the period of gradual increase through a three-year period, in order to give these men time to adjust their business to it, is the most reasonable, and extraordinarily reasonable, increase in a matter of this kind that I ever heard suggested. We did not get near out of them what we ought to have gotten in the way of an increase. If the Government is losing $70,000,000, in round numbers, in this matter to carry publications, magazines, newspapers, and what not throughout this country that are one-half commercial and one-half advertising matter, instead of educational matter, it ought to recoup itself to the extent of $35,000,000 a year at least, instead of $18,000,000 or $20,000,000. Yet if we follow the recommendations of the Senate committee, instead of reducing the deficit from $70,000,000 to, say, $50,000,000 or fifty-odd million dollars, by taking back $18,000,000 or $20,000,000 of losses, as we have done in the existing law, we will only add a measly, trifling $4,000,000 to the revenues of the Government. If we were to adopt the proposition proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], the effect would be simply this, that we would reduce the losses from the old standard by about $8,000,000 or, it may be, $10,000,000, at the outside, and practically exempt from contributing their share to it all papers in towns of the size of Nashville, Macon, Atlanta, and Savannah. That is the real meaning of his proposition. I do not say he so intended it, but it is the effect of it. It is a middle ground. In other words, by the existing law we cut down the $70,000,000 deficit about $20,000,000—$18,000,000 at least—and under the proposal of the Senate committee suggested by the Senator from Utah we would reduce it $4,000,000 only. Under the proposition of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] we would reduce it $10,000,000 at the outside.

It is very difficult, Mr. President, to make an argument of this sort to a Senate as busy as this one. I do not propose—because I am not trying to make any speech—to waste any further effort on it. I feel that I have discharged my duty by the Senate and by the Post Office Department and by the Government when I have done what I have in reference to the matter. I think Senators either know or can know the truth about this thing, and I am sure if they take the trouble to know they will not come in here and blindly vote for the committee amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] has given the Senate the benefit of his information upon this very important subject. That it is one of far-reaching importance has always been recognized, and particularly by the members of the Finance Committee, before which it has been very thoroughly discussed on at least one side of it on two occasions, one being during the pendency of the act of 1907 before the committee, and the other during the past summer and fall when the committee was considering the pending bill.

Mr. President, I have not the slightest desire to inflict any injustice or be the cause of any injury to the newspapers and periodicals of the country. If I thought that the present law in any wise unnecessarily placed a burden upon the shoulders of the publishers of the various magazines, newspapers, and journals, I should be among the last to insist upon its retention on the statute book.

I have not given this subject the same consideration that it has received at the hands of the Post Office Committee, where it properly belongs, but I have had occasion to look into it to some extent, and I have come to the conclusion, rightly or wrongly, that the old second-class postal rate has built up a system of periodicals and has operated to I will not say prohibit but very largely interfere with the circulation of local periodicals in the country to a degree which perhaps is not generally understood.

In correspondence with one of the representatives of the press during the past two or three months, my statement that the Government under the old system, as under the present system, was carrying and distributing second-class matter at a loss was challenged. It was very spiritedly challenged, with the result that I wrote a letter to the Post Office authorities and received from the Attorney General a statement the effect of which was substantially that to which the Senator from Georgia has already called attention.

I am, therefore, Mr. President, forced to the conclusion that we are giving the mail facilities of the Government of the United States to a certain class of its citizens at an enormous annual loss, while, on the other hand, we are unduly burdening other classes of mail matter from which a revenue and a large revenue has for many years been derived.

One of the most significant facts regarding the manner in which this evil has been taken advantage of is disclosed by the growth of the volume of second-class mail, which in 1880 was only 60,000,000 pounds, but which in 1907 was 1,202,000,000 pounds, an increase which is so enormous as to be almost incredible, but which is sustained by the statistics and records of the Post Office Department. Of course, it may be said that the growth of the country is commensurate with the growth of periodicals, and that in some degree is true, but the growth of the country, while very large, has certainly not kept pace with the growth of second-class mail matter.

In the very nature of things, Mr. President, it does but stand to reason that a system of postal rates which virtually carries one pound 2,000 miles at the same rate, or substantially so, at which it carries a half ounce is a losing proposition, or one which imposes an undue burden upon the lighter class of matter, and that is only saying that there would be a similar imposition in the other direction. The need for such a regulation if it existed, whatever the cost to the Government, could be justified by its existence; but the need, if there ever was a need, has in my judgment long ago disappeared.

Nowadays, Mr. President, the purpose of the average daily, weekly, and monthly periodicals is advertisements. Formerly these periodicals were circulated for educational purposes, for the dissemination of information, and for the amusement as well as the edification of the general public. We know that the press has been commercialized, however, along with practically everything else in this country, until the time has come when newspapers and periodicals are not so much distinguished for the substance of the reading matter which they carry as for the great bulk of advertising matter which through circulation they are able to command.

Mr. President, I am credibly informed, and I think there is no doubt about the fact, that under the old second-class postal system a great many periodicals were organized and instituted, and then proceeded to build up circulation by virtually giving it as a gratuity, sometimes for a comparatively small amount, frequently through combinations of different periodicals for practically nothing, the object being to establish a large circulation list, which, of course, is the best of all assets for advertising purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I wish to ask the Senator if he means by the old system the system which was in operation before the law of 1917 went into effect?

Mr. THOMAS. That is exactly what I mean; and I believe that practice is equally feasible now because of the very slight increase. My attention has been called to a number of trade journals which have gone out into the highways and byways of the country and have offered irresistible inducements for subscriptions at prices far below the actual cost of the publication—sometimes below the cost of the paper used in the publication—and, of course, for the obvious purpose of approaching advertisers with a very large subscription list, which is not only valuable in securing advertisements but also in fixing the rate for which the advertisement shall be carried. That has resulted in an undue multiplication of trade journals. We have a number of technical journals on agriculture, mechanics, coal, mining of all kinds, ostensibly devoted to these lines of industry, but really prompted to come into being and inspired by the tremendous profits that can be realized from advertisements, and that is the reason for such a multiplication. I do not think that is good for the various pursuits which are particularly represented by these journals. I think half a dozen, or, if you please, one in every large community and State, ably managed and capably run, filled with information of a valuable and educational character, making the matter of advertisement entirely secondary to its value as an educational institution, is worth to the country and to the community a half dozen journals of similar character in the same community bent upon the obtaining of advertisements.

The daily and weekly newspapers have, I will not say, followed suit. They may, perhaps, have set the example. Take any of the great papers of the country and compare them with what they were 30, 35, or 40 years ago. In those days the managing editors of the great metropolitan papers of the country—New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, St. Louis, San Francisco—were leaders and directors of public thought and opinion. Who can name to-day, outside of the press gallery, of course, the managing editor of a single New York paper? Who knows who is the managing editor of a San Francisco paper, a Chicago or St. Louis paper, a Philadelphia paper; aye, the papers in Washington here? The reason is not far to seek. Journalism has become a specialized and commercialized industry and depends not upon its readers except in so far as the readers can be made available for advertising purposes.

Take the magazines. I have heard a good deal about the educational work which the magazines of the country must perform and which they can not perform if they are compelled to pay decent rates of postage. There was a time when most of the magazine literature of the country was educational in a high degree. I can recall a few years ago when it was the only medium of genuine public instruction, when it was really independent, and when it sought not so much to secure advertisements as to convey to people an actual knowledge of existing conditions, whether for good or for evil. They, too, yielded to the general impulse and fell into the general current, so that they were known more by the extent of their advertisements than by the reading matter which they contained, and to-day I do not know of a single magazine of the new birth, if I may coin the expression, by which I mean magazines other than the Century, Scribner's, the Atlantic, and Harper's Monthly, in which you can find anything whatever that is worth reading.

Then think of the crops, Mr. President, of cheap magazine literature containing stories, some interesting, some questionable, some decidedly off color, but accompanied always in the beginning and in the end of the books with vast quantities of advertising matter, carried to the minds of those who are fond of that kind of so-called literature. They are the things which the advertiser wants to call to their attention for the purpose of increasing business.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, if the conclusions of the Senator from Colorado are correct—and I am inclined to think they are—this proposed amendment would affect every small weekly newspaper in the country and also every small daily.

Mr. THOMAS. I am coming to that, if the Senator from South Dakota will permit me.

Take the Sunday editions of the leading papers in every city having a daily newspaper in the United States, some of them having circulation all over the country. They generally consist of some 25, 75, and even 80 pages, including their comic supplement; and those comic supplements, Mr. President, are not only a disgrace to modern journalism, but they are a reflection upon the intelligence of the American public. Perhaps as high as 75 per cent of these papers contain advertising matter. Some of them contain some very interesting educational articles, but those could easily be condensed into a very small supplement. I am not complaining about the newspapers because, after all, in my judgment, the people get the class of newspapers they want and are willing to pay for, and the apology for the yellow newspaper is a yellow public in nine cases out of ten.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Speaking of the educational advantage of magazines, I desire to ask when it is realized that we pay $70,000,000 per year bonus for those educational papers, would it not be better if the Government is going to do that, is going to afford that kind of education for the public, that the Government should publish its own educational magazines whereby the public could get something that would be really worth while?

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator's suggestion, Mr. President, is absolutely unanswerable. That is true, but I do not think the Government, if it desired to publish magazines, would publish such magazines, for example, as Adventure, the Black Cat, the Red Dog, and Stories of the Sea, and all that stuff and nonsense which to-day forms, I am sorry to say, a great, if not the greatest, element of reading matter of the public.

Some time ago, Mr. President, a gentleman whose little pamphlet on the subject I shall ask to have incorporated in the RECORD a little later, and who is the head of an association whose purpose is to secure, if possible, 1-cent first-class postage, called attention to the fact that the patronage of the public libraries was constantly decreasing with regard to books of real substantial educational value, while it was increasing very perceptibly as regards the trashy literature comprising what are called "the best sellers," and their imitations—and, of course, the imitations are very numerous—all of which has evidently as its origin the circulation of cheap, weedy literature, which no man who has anything to do at all would waste his time by devoting himself to.

Why is this so? Because these things can be scattered over the country at the public expense, and all subscription lists, once secured, become an asset for advertising. Fortunes of enormous amounts are made by a great many of these publishers, perhaps by the majority of them. I am not finding fault particularly with that, for it is merely a phase of human nature. If I were in the publishing business I should like nothing better than to start a magazine of some kind, and then go out and get as many subscriptions as possible all over the country and utilize them for the purpose of making money and for securing advertisements.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] asked me a question with regard to the effect of these conditions upon the local periodicals and journals. When this subject was up last year the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] placed in the RECORD a letter which he had received from one of his constituents, the editor and proprietor of a newspaper at Devils Lake, I think, in his State. I hope that Senator will, before this subject is disposed of, again call attention to the substance of that communication, for it is the best thing upon the subject I have seen. This gentleman's name is Bloom; he used to live in my State, and I know him very well. His letter was a reply to an organization in the East committed to the repeal of the present law, and asking him to carry in his paper the literature of the organization in behalf of the repeal of the zone system. His answer was that he was in favor not only of the zone system but of an increase of rates, because, independently of the subject as considered from a national standpoint and from the standpoint of subsidy, of its effect upon local journalism. This gentleman, and others similarly situated, can not compete or if they do can only compete under adverse circumstances with Chicago papers enjoying the largess of the Government to such a degree as to enable them to lay down their issues every day at prices with which local competition is practically impossible.

Mr. President, if the so-called rural journalists of the country could only wake up to existing conditions, they would, in my judgment, be practically a unit in insisting upon the extension of these zone systems and the increase of the postage which the Government now exacts. There is a great loss at present, but this was the best that could be done under the circumstances, owing to the tremendous opposition of the beneficiaries of the system, and the average legislator, while he fears an organization or a union, is mortally afraid of a newspaper, because the newspaper has something to say pretty much every day, and to a gentleman of tender conscience and timid impulses such a thing, to use a common expression, is apt to get upon the nerves. It is because the daily press of the country and the periodical press of the country are the beneficiaries of this system that it is impossible to do away with the abuse and impossible to offer much remedy for it, and I think impossible to go any further than the present bill proposes.

One of the gentlemen who appeared before our committee sought to illustrate the injury of the present system upon periodicals by citing the case of the Sunset Magazine, which is printed at San Francisco, Cal. His wail was that, owing to the zone system, the Sunset Magazine had been able very largely to build up and increase its circulation by offering special inducements within the zones contained in the place of publication and those immediately adjoining. Mr. President, to my mind that was the strongest, or at least one of the strongest, possible argument in favor of its continuation, for it indicates that without it the publication in San Francisco, the publication in Denver, the publication in South Dakota, the publication in Kansas City, or in Texas, because of the partnership of the Government with the huge publications of the eastern houses, find their limitations prescribed for them, and, apart from the immediate wants of the particular locality, they are unable to spread the benefits of their particular publication, however desirable it might be to do so.

Mr. President, I refer now to another consideration. I called the attention of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] to the fact that, so far as the short haul is concerned, the only haul upon which the Government can make any money at all on second-class matter, these periodicals use the express companies because they can get cheaper rates, with the result that the Government loses the profit which it might derive from the short haul and at the same time loses the difference between the cost and its charges upon the long haul. It gets left in both directions. I am not complaining about this, because any publisher, following the dictates of common business horse sense, will of course use the cheaper method of transportation wherever it is possible; but certainly, Mr. President, it is inconsistent for these people to come before the Congress of the United States and ask for the perpetuation of this subsidy when admittedly they only use it when it redounds to their financial benefit.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, when the transportation rate is less than 1 cent, or when the periodical is transported such a short distance that the rate is less than 1 cent, the publisher uses the freight rate.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. And the Government gets no advantage of the short haul.

Mr. THOMAS. None whatever; it is obsolete for all practical purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is absolutely obsolete within a certain zone of the home office of a newspaper publication, but when it goes beyond the 1-cent rate they use the Government facilities and get the advantage.

Mr. THOMAS. Precisely; and that is good business. The newspapers must not be blamed for that; it is the conditions which cause it, Mr. President; and so long as they exist so long will they be availed of.

We have added four or five million dollars, I think—and four or five million dollars only—to the burden to those who patronize the second-class mail facilities of the Government, but for the purpose of raising revenue to meet war expenditures we increased the postage on first-class mail matter for long distances by 50 per cent, and we increased the postage rate on first-class mail matter for short distances, such as postal cards, 100 per cent, although for some time prior to the commencement of the war first-class postage was paying the Government a profit of from seventy-five to eighty million dollars. By a stroke of the pen, Mr. President, we inflicted upon the people of the United States who patronize the mails by the use of first-class matter an additional burden of from sixty-five to seventy million dollars. If we are going to show favors, if we are going to extend privileges through the operation of governmental machinery, why should we not extend it to those who are already paying too much instead of increasing their burdens and barely touching the others?

Mr. President, if this subject could be stripped of its political aspects, I do not believe that the cent-a-pound proposal would get half a dozen votes in this body. If the matter could be regarded from the standpoint of what is fair and just and right to the taxpaying public of the United States, I do not think that any publishing organization would have the audacity to come here and insist upon the perpetuation of a system which subsidizes a class by imposing an added burden of millions upon the taxpayers of the United States.

Mr. President, I shall conclude by asking that there be inserted at the end of my remarks the little pamphlet which I hold in my hand, entitled "Justification of Zone-System Advances," by Mr. Charles William Burrows, of Cleveland, Ohio.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

JUSTIFICATION OF ZONE-SYSTEM ADVANCES IN POSTAGE RATES OF ADVERTISING MATTER IN PERIODICALS ENACTED IN FIRST SESSION OF SIXTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

[A précis specially prepared for Members of Congress by Mr. Charles William Burrows, president National One Cent Letter Postage Association, 1219–20 Guardian Building, Cleveland Ohio, January, 1918.]

INTRODUCTION.

Many articles have appeared recently denouncing zone advances in mail rates on the advertising pages only of periodicals.

Most are clearly misleading as to what has been done, while insistently urging its undoing. An understanding, therefore, of what advances have been made and why is highly desirable.

Congress will scarcely undo the sole piece of constructive postal legislation looking toward right enacted in a generation. Magazines should not dare to ask that their "special privilege," a fraction only of which has been cut off, should be restored, while "everybody" else loyally consents to be "taxed till it hurts."

Most such articles deplore "a fine on reading"; are piteous about "sectionalism," prate about "perfidy," and misrepresent generally until they forcibly remind us of Macaulay's cogent statement that "the doctrine of universal gravitation would still be disputed if a financial interest were arrayed against it."

Every contention may be convincingly answered. Those mammoth issues which harp so nobly upon "special privilege" never turn the light inward.

Let us hope that publishers may in time see a light in connection with their industry, which, conducted like all others for profit, is the only one by law freed from paying cost of distribution of those advertising pages which are its merchandise. These latter, too, are simply circulars stitched together, and should pay third-class rates, or 8 cents a pound instead of 1.

IMPERATIVE NECESSITY FOR RECENT ADVANCES IN SECOND-CLASS MAIL RATES.

Many emphatic arguments exist for advances in the almost free second-class rates, but one of the strongest is that higher rates will diminish the ever-increasing loss it occasions.

The volume of second-class mail—
In 1880 was only 60,000,600 pounds; loss about $4,000,000.
In 1890 was 204,000,000 pounds; loss about $12,000,000.
In 1900 was 450,000,000 pounds; loss about $27,000,000.
In 1910 was 873,000,000 pounds; loss about $52,000,000.
In 1917 was 1,202,000,000 pounds; loss over $70,000,000.

And 2,000,000,000 pounds, with accompanying loss of $125,000,000, was in sight within 10 years had advances not been made. This loss, which is due to the utterly insufficient rate periodicals pay, is a serious menace to the department's finances.

Second class practically doubles in volume each decade and consequent loss increases as rapidly.

Even though a surplus exists for the past year, the deficit created by second class is no less enormous, simply large profits upon letter mail permit the showing. Had each class paid its way the entire profit created by first class would have been revealed as surplus instead of a comparatively meager sum. It would have been $90,000,000 instead of only $9,000,000.

Giving service to second class, which (disregarding parcel post) is about two-thirds of the paid-for mail, for less than $11,500,000, while total expense runs $300,000,000, and requiring first class, in volume one-fifth as much and costing less, to pay $190,000,000 revenue (at pre-war rates) for service costing half that is an evident grave injustice.

Letter mail has produced $1,350,000,000 revenue in the last 10 years, while costing less than $750,000,000. On the contrary, periodicals at the almost free rate of 1 cent a pound (one-seventh cost) have within the same 10 years produced only $85,000,000 revenue, though costing about $800,000,000.

Moreover, this utterly inadequate revenue from over a billion pounds a year of periodical mail has resulted in cramped service everywhere, and here is found the main source of complaint about poor work.

In these days of war conservation in all ways, Congress absolutely can not sit quietly by and see 1,000,000,000 pounds of periodical mail grow to 2,000,000,000 within very few years. Publishers must begin to stand, not all, but a fairer part of cost of distributing their merchandise.

Fair play by all means, but no more $70,000,000 subsidy. No mischief; no check to healthy growth; tenderness even in lopping off part of the subsidy. With this in mind, Congress did not make the law operative until July, 1918, and then the first advance is small, while all will not be effective until 1921. "Reading" matter, moreover, is exempted from zone advances, which apply solely to advertising and then only if in excess of 5 per cent.

IS A ZONE SYSTEM OF ADVANCES "UNFAIR"?

Publishers often assert that postage rates for periodicals based on a zone system are "unfair." It will be seen by a little thought, however, that a step toward rather than away from "fairness" has been made.

Remember that the zone system applies solely upon high-priced advertising pages, simply circulars stitched together, which should go at third-class rate of 8 cents a pound instead of 1.

Also any reasoning about a "flat" rate based upon its being accorded to letter mail is fallacious. Handling of letters is a monopoly. You are not at liberty to send them in any way other than through the post office. Also as the rate is high, Government gets mostly profitable hauls. The revenue from billions of such letters not only takes care of loss incurred in handling the comparatively few which get long haul and delivery in sparsely settled regions, but also provides large net profit.

With second class this is all different. The pound rate it pays, only 1 cent, is a mere fraction of cost, and its carriage neither is a monopoly nor can well be made one, so publishers give long runs and single-copy deliveries to Government and short runs and bulk lots, on which the department might make a profit, to express companies. So Government gets all losing and no profitable business. Any "flat" rate on second-class mail will be "unfair" to the department, which will get little revenue from hundreds of millions of pounds of such mail. To users of letter mail, whose excessive rate produces revenue to care for loss occasioned by inadequate charge on second class, it is also "unfair."

There are, however, several kinds of second-class mail.

That which is hauled 2,000 miles and given copy distribution may easily cost 50 or more cents a pound, though paying but 1. Packages of daily papers, however, sent in bulk to near-by newsdealers may cost little more than they pay.

Can anyone think it "fair" to make the rate for these two kinds of service the same?

Moreover, lack of candor on the publishers' part is evident when we find them characterizing as "unfair" a zone basis for handling hundreds of millions of pounds of printed advertising, their merchandise, and yet remember that a few years ago they, one and all, clamored for a zone system for parcels of other merchandise.

From the service efficiency standpoint there is also to be found a strong argument against a "flat" rate for second class.

Of first class there are over 45 pieces in an average pound; of second class under 5 (4.72). Due to greater uniformity in size and lighter piece weight, a "sorter" can "throw" a tray of several thousand letters in "takes" of 20 quicker than he can "plant" one-tenth as many pieces of second class, many of which are of such awkward shape that they can not be "thrown" at all. Others are so heavy that it would damage other mail and equipment to "throw" them. They must be "placed" in bag or pigeonhole.

The above is another reason why a "flat" rate is economical for letters but not for second-class mail.

WHY A POUND-RATE LAW WAS ENACTED AND SOME OF ITS EFFECTS.

One publisher contends (Leslie's, Nov. 24, 1917, p. 174) that enactment of a pound-rate law was "voluntary," and that change was made, not for the benefit of publishers but of subscribers.

Passing a pound-rate law was forced by necessity. Postage on periodicals had been paid quarterly in advance by subscriber in driblet sums, running 7, 11, etc., cents. No track could be kept of these thousands of trifling amounts without prohibitive expense. It was difficult to keep accounts straight, and some made little effort to do so. Investigation became necessary and showed that of every 100 errors perhaps 90 were against Government.

So passage of a law collecting postage "at source" was enacted. Publishers protested against charges high enough to cover cost. The founder of one great magazine worked strenuously for low rates; and as the amount involved was small, they were granted.

To sum up, contrary to Leslie's statement, the law was distinctly passed not to benefit either publisher or subscriber but to diminish opportunity for fraud, and evidence exists that publishers had much to do with making the rate low when on June 23, 1874, the law was enacted. Rates were then, however, higher than now, being 3 cents a pound for magazine and 2 for newspapers.

The operation of this law entirely changed our periodical literature. The old literary magazine like Atlantic, North American Review, Century, Harper's, etc., had paid expenses, both of production and distribution, as does the book, through price charged. They contained a literary product of high class. They made for plain living and deep thinking.

The fruit of this enactment was a "subsidized" periodical getting distribution at practically a franking rate. Then was born a new kind of magazine, edited from the business office to carry advertising, only circulars stitched together, or third-class matter, which should pay 8 cents instead of 1.

Tempted by this nearly free distribution, an average of more than 10 new periodicals a day have secured second-class privileges for every day (Sundays and holidays inclusive) of the past 15 years.

Of the product thus evolved, the opinion held by one editor is shown in quotation from Howe's Monthly, Atchison, Kans., here presented:

"Best sellers in magazines vie with each other in vulgarity. They outrival each other as to which can be boldest without being barred from the mail. Stories dealing with sex problems, having unmarried mothers and women of the demimonde as heroines fill them. The country is overrun with publications issued to secure advertising under the benign protection of the second-class rate."

Without altogether agreeing with the editor, nevertheless the "weedy" literary matter of some, combined with the high-priced advertising that constitutes their bulk, make it evident that Government has distributed this load at heavy loss for years enough. It is time to call a halt.

At this time, when Government seeks to check all abuse, periodical publishing, organized for profit, as are other industries, should be abundantly satisfied to be advanced from one-seventh to one-third cost only instead of having to pay full costs of distribution. They should be grateful that a $70,000,000 subsidy is reduced one-third instead of abolished entirely.

As periodicals deliberately close their pages to articles opposing the second-class privilege, and as they are not only its beneficiaries but also constitute virtually the sole publicity machinery of the land, it is easily seen why this inquiry has persisted.

SECTIONALISM.

A recent article in Saturday Evening Post stated that zone advances for second-class mail would "denationalize" the press and introduce "sectionalism."

It further stated that we would not permit seaboard States to levy duties on trans-Mississippi wheat or bacon nor tolerate any sectional tariff.

To answer their contention, it is obvious that when merchandise is sent to different parts of the country and goes "prepaid," whether it be bacon, boots, books, or wheat, the freight will vary with distance and total cost will, therefore, vary, which variation, through price being figured on article delivered, sometimes shows indirectly.

It has never been argued, however, that for a packer to charge more for sending bacon 1,000 miles than 100 would "sectionalize" the United States. No more will slight differences in postage "denationalize" the country just because the merchandise, instead of being bacon, happens to be paper in shape of circulars stitched together, the advertising pages of periodicals.

As well might we attempt distribution of the fruits of the earth, the products of the manufacturer, the wares of the merchant at a "flat" rate as to extend this favor to over 1,000,000,000 pounds of periodicals, the merchandise of fewer than 30,000 publishers, whose output moreover is susceptible of such excessively rapid increase in volume.

When we reflect that this particular issue of the Post contained over 50 pages of advertising, costing $5,000 a page and upward, and that it carried, therefore, more than $250,000 of advertising, yet paid for its postage only about $15,000 for service that cost over $80,000 for the portion mailed, and that this is repeated weekly, we well understand why the Post opposes any advance, even though to but one-third cost and on the advertising only.

That the Post, which, it is reported, carried last year more than $20,000,000 of advertising, can not take care of added expense of this sort, is not believable. Doubtless in preparation for just this situation it has by increasing proportion of advertising and in other ways apparently increased its advertising receipts heavily since war began.

HIGH-PRICED PAPER ADVANCES.

Publishers contend that there have been such advances in price of paper that the present is an inauspicious time for postage increase.

To give this contention weight, specific assertion is made that for a series of 86 journals, whose combined profits amounted to but $1,197,000, extra cost of paper for one year will amount to $3,034,000.

Answer to this is simple. These publishers prove too much. If all these increases are more than publishers can stand, they will be driven out of business anyway, and postal advances will matter little. If, however, by drastic readjustment they can meet conditions, then it will be comparatively easy to absorb the postal expense.

The argument is a specious one, but let us remember that in 1911 and in 1914 many publishers, at a time when print paper was about the lowest known, bitterly opposed advances, that in 1914 being a "flat" one of only 1 cent a pound.

Furthermore, since enactment of postal advance in October, 1917, magazine publishers are quite generally making lower subscription rates, which all shows that enlarged circulations with consequent higher advertising rates are what they want. They would give away "circulation" if Government permitted. This is indicated by a report that one prominent magazine recently sold to an agency 200,000 "circulation" at 27 cents per subscription. Its nominal yearly rate is $1.50. The object is, of course, apparent—to get the largest possible output.

Another instance: One E. T. Meredith, of Des Moines, Iowa, publisher of Successful Farming, while vigorously denouncing all advances in postage rates, "zone" or "flat," has, we are informed, offered seven years' subscription to his journal (a large affair with lots of advertising) for $1, a rate that probably does not pay half cost of paper.

These low prices for periodicals stimulate wasted consumption. The story goes that one man subscribed for three magazines with aggregate list prices of $3 because he could get them for $2. When they began to arrive, however, he found that the first was one he didn't want, the second his wife didn't want, the third neither wanted.

WILL ADVANCES KILL THE READING HABIT?

One contention of publishers is that our boys and girls will be shut out from forming the "reading habit" at time of life when most essential.

In writer's opinion, the contrary effect will result. Taking away from a school girl opportunity to eat half a pound of chocolates daily will probably turn here to nutritious bread, meat, and potatoes, which should mainly constitute her diet.

Similarly, feeding youthful imaginations with Magazine of Mystery, Stories of Adventure, Police Gazette, scores like them and hundreds of the "popular-but-weedy" variety tends, through oversupply of "literary sweetmeats," to destroy opportunity to benefit the mind by reading the best in essay, history, poetry, travel, and "belles-lettres" generally.

Due almost solely to its inadequate postal rate, second class, as shown previously, has increased from forty million pounds in 1875 to twelve hundred million pounds in 1917. This means that several billion more copies of popular magazines are issued than formerly, and each extra hundred million magazines crowds out ten million books.

The result is that while America publishes more periodicals than all nations of the globe united and half as many again, she has lost her position as a book producer save of "best sellers" in erotic fiction. Fast power presses that print periodicals have displaced for young and old the cultural training that good books alone can give.

Our literary decadance has been deplored by many thinkers. While we formerly held high rank as publishing good books in all lines, to-day (under normal conditions) book publishing in Switzerland, the Scandinavian and Teutonic nations, France, and Great Britain runs from six to eight times as many per capita as with us. Japan publishes four times as many; Roumania, thrice; Russia, of whose population 79 per cent is an ignorant peasantry that can neither read nor write, publishes for the remainder many more books than we; while Spain issues as many books per capita as we.

The "weeds of literature" that too many trashy periodicals are, have been too much for the book.

This lack of "cultural" value in the reading most available results in impoverished development of the young intellect.

Further detrimental influence is seen in an economic direction. In the farm-journal line, overproduction has been excessive, so much so that we are malling over 600,000,000 farm journals per annum to our 6,000,000 farmers. Many of these are "islands" of reading surrounded by "oceans" of advertising, prepared often thoughtlessly, always hastily, so publication date may not be delayed.

Under the influence of such "reading," American farmers produce, working on soil of unsurpassed fertility, from one-quarter to one-half as much of a given crop per acre as their European brothers, who get carefully prepared manuals, not weak journals loaded with advertising.

One representative of a conservative old farm journal told the writer that he would gladly see competition diminished. He asserted that in the effort to get circulation, a journal with yearly subscription rate of $1 had to give 95 cents to the canvasser who secured the order. It was further necessary to give the farmer a premium represented as worth price of subscription, though it actually cost about 35 cents. This building circulation by premiums has caused wasteful overproduction in this field. The department, in fact, was finally obliged to investigate. The report of the Third Assistant Postmaster General (1911, p. 39) shows that one such agricultural publication with 143,000 circulation had 122,000 premium induced. Another, with circulation of 53,000 had 41,000 so secured. A third, with nearly 500,000 per issue, had only 60,000 subscriptions not obtained by means of this extraneous inducement.

Another illuminating fact as to this "special privilege" is seen in the financial field. Investigation shows that something like 86 banking periodicals are issued to supply a need which a prominent bank official stated would be better filled by 6. The extra ones were just "legpullers" for advertising.

And the situation in nearly all lines is similar.

MISCELLANEOUS POINTS.

Appointing commissions.

Many publishers contend that before advance in postage is made a congressional commission should sit, make scientific research, weighings, not for a month only, but for a year, and that the department should get down to "brass-tack" information and establish a bureau to examine the situation scientifically.

The answer to this is that six different commissions have investigated the question in the past 20 years at a direct expense of over $300,000 and an indirect one many times as large. The uniform decision of all is that the 1 cent a pound paid is a mere fraction of cost of service.

While there is some dispute as to exact cost, none exists as to the general conclusion. No person of sound mind, however, can require the "findings" of any commission to decide this question himself. With an expense account (parcel post disregarded) of $300,000,000 per annum, and two-thirds of the mail, second class, paying only $11,500,000 of revenue, one conclusion only is possible, namely, that it pays nowhere near enough. Of course, the deficit is cared for by requiring one-fifth as much first class to pay $190,000,000 revenue.

No acute perception is needed to see why another commission is desired. It would inject delay into the situation.

No commission need make microscopic measurement of a superdreadnaught to decide whether that mammoth construction can be installed in an apartment-house kitchenette. Some things are self-evident. This for one and the second-class mail situation for another.

How much does second-class mail feed first class?

Another plea of publishers is that second-class gives rise to much first-class mail, originated in responding to advertisements. Now, if second-class mail originates first class in large amount anywhere, it is upon rural routes. The city man who desires an advertised article goes to a shop for it. The country resident is the one who must write a letter ordering it.

In spite of some such mail this is not the case to a profitable extent, for only about $8,000,000 worth originated on all rural routes last year, while loss on second class was over $70,000,000. Credit answers to advertisements with half of this, and even give it credit for as much more from large cities, and the situation is little changed.

The gross exaggeration of this claim is further shown below. Recently an advertiser in a certain number of the Saturday Evening Post addressed a letter to all other advertisers in the same issue asking how many replies each had gotten. Responses showed about 20,000; figure all as letters at 2 cents each and a revenue of $400 from that source appears.

Of the 118 who advertised 83 replied and 35 did not, but allow that half only replied, instead of four-fifths, and that the other half would furnish another 20,000 replies, the profit would have been only $400. But loss on distribution of this issue was about $70,000.

WHAT POSTMASTER GENERAL ALBERT SIDNEY BURLESON SAYS ABOUT SECOND-CLASS MAIL RATES.

[From his report for fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, p. 60, F. F.]

Regarding advances in second-class mail rates enacted in the war-revenue act the report says in part:

Advanced rates on second class were to partly reimburse the department for enormous loss in handling this class.

Difference between revenue and admitted cost is so great that publishers could no longer expect to defer remedial legislation.

When it became apparent that some increase in rates must be enacted the Postmaster General conferred with many publishers, but at no time was he able to suggest a method acceptable to all.

Advertising, a new element, amounts to as much as 60, 70, or even 80 per cent of the issue. It is but just that this matter pay more.

The department was at all times scrupulously fair to publishers in presenting its statistics.

Realizing that they had adjusted business to the low rate, Congress showed greatest care in framing the law.

While the new rate on first-class mail went into operation within 30 days, the first slight advance in second-class rates will not be effective until July 1, 1918. Additional increases are distributed over a three-year period, giving ample time for readjustment.

Continuance of the low flat rate on reading is a complete answer to criticism that the zone system applied to advertising matter will build up sectionalism. No greater limitation than before was put on dissemination of information, but the law wisely made a distinction between reading and advertising.

Advertising matter is in all respects third-class matter, except in method of circulation, so a higher rate is rightly fixed upon it, this rate varying with cost, which varies with distance. It properly goes under a zone system, as do parcels.

Even on short hauls the exceedingly low "flat" rate is inadequate to pay the expense of handling and transportation.

If a publication contains less than 5 per cent of advertising it is exempt. The rates which apply to reading matter are lower than those that have been recommended by any investigation commission, and even the highest rate on advertising is lower than this same material would cost distributed as circulars—that is, as third-class mail—and also much less than cost of handling. The department will still incur heavy loss from second class.

Some publishers claim that they can not pay a higher rate of postage. That legitimate business can not readjust itself to normal costs is an argument without merit.

This is not believed true of any legitimate business, even publishing.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, just for a few moments I wish to restate some of the propositions which arise annually, and sometimes oftener, in regard to this question. Every year, and sometimes several times a year, the publishers come before Congress seeking to perpetuate this subsidy. The question is, Shall we change the plan that we adopted last year; and, if so, how shall it be changed?

Mr. President, I am unalterably in favor of a zone system for second-class mail matter. It is the only fair, just, and equitable method of handling it.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McLEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, this is a very important matter, and I think we ought to have more Senators present. I therefore suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, S. Dak.	Martin, Va.	Simmons
Beckham	Jones, N. Mex.	Moses	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Jones, Wash.	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Curtis	Kellogg	New	Smoot
Dillingham	Kendrick	Nugent	Spencer
Fernald	Kenyon	Page	Sterling
France	King	Penrose	Sutherland
Gay	Knox	Poindexter	Thomas
Gerry	La Follette	Pollock	Townsend
Gronna	McCumber	Saulsbury	Trammell
Hale	McLean	Shafroth	Underwood
Henderson	McNary	Sheppard	Warren
Hitchcock	Martin, Ky.	Sherman	Wolcott

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN], and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], are necessarily detained on important public business.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce again the absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], on account of illness. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] on account of illness.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the old flat rate of 1 cent per pound on second-class mail matter prior to July 1, 1918, had been in force for nearly or about 30 years. During that time, of course, the amount of second-class postal matter going through the mails has increased in a very remarkable degree.

In 1880, about the time the flat rate was first established, there were only 60,000,000 pounds of second-class matter going through the mails, and the Government at that time lost only $4,000,000 a year in carrying it. In the year 1885 the amount had increased up to 204,000,000 pounds, and the loss of the Government was $12,000,000. In 1890 the amount had increased to 450,000,000 pounds, and the loss to the Government was $27,000,000. In 1900 it was 873,000,000 pounds, and the loss had increased to $52,000,000. In 1917, when the law was changed, the amount of second-class mail matter going through the mails had increased to 1,202,000,000 pounds, and the loss to the Government in transporting it had increased to $70,000,000 per year. It is estimated that if this growth had continued in the same way that it had been going on since 1880 there would be a loss of $125,000,000 to the Government each year for carrying second-class postal matter through the mails.

These potent facts of loss to the Government, by reason of the Congress granting a subsidy to a class of publishers, had made such a great impression upon the Congress and upon the country that in October of last year the system was changed from a flat rate to what is known as the zone rate; and I want to read for just a moment the law as it was passed in 1917 to remedy this very patent monstrosity in the matter of carrying this portion of our mails.

In 1917—on October 3, as I recall—the Congress passed this law on the subject:

In the case of the portion of such publication devoted to advertisements—

I need not read the preceding part, because this will give the entire system—

the rates per pound or fraction thereof for delivery within the several zones applicable to fourth-class matter shall be as follows (but where the space devoted to advertisements does not exceed 5 per cent of the total space, the rate of postage shall be the same as if the whole of such publication was devoted to matter other than advertisements): (1) On and after July 1, 1918, and until July 1, 1919, for the first and second zones, 1¼ cents; for the third zone, 1½ cents; for the fourth zone, 2 cents; for the fifth zone, 2½ cents; for the sixth zone, 2¾ cents; for the seventh zone, 3 cents; for the eighth zone, 3¼ cents; (2) on and after July 1, 1919, and until July 1, 1920, for the first and second zones, 1½ cents; for the third zone, 2 cents; for the fourth zone, 3 cents; for the fifth zone, 3½ cents; for the sixth zone, 4 cents; for the seventh zone, 5 cents; for the eighth zone, 5½ cents; (3) on and after July 1, 1920, and until July 1, 1921, for the first and second zones, 1¾ cents; for the third zone, 2½ cents; for the fourth zone, 4 cents; for the fifth zone, 4¾ cents; for the sixth zone, 5½ cents; for the seventh zone, 7 cents; for the eighth zone, 7¾ cents; (4) on and after July 1, 1921, for the first and second zones, 2 cents; for the third zone, 3 cents; for the fourth zone, 5 cents; for the fifth zone, 6 cents; for the sixth zone, 7 cents; for the seventh zone, 9 cents; for the eighth zone, 10 cents.

That is the law as Congress established it a little more than a year ago. That is the law that we are called upon to-day to change in this bill; and that proposed change is found in section 1101, on page 277, of the pending bill. That section reads as follows, and I want to have it go into the RECORD so that Senators may have it in a form that they can look at:

SEC. 1101. That on and after July 1, 1919, the rates of postage on publications entered as second-class matter (including sample copies to the extent of 10 per cent of the weight of copies mailed to subscribers during the calendar year) when sent by the publisher thereof from the post office of publication or other post office, or when sent by a news agent to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news agents for the purpose of sale, shall be 1 cent per pound or fraction thereof for delivery within the first and second zones applicable to fourth-class matter, and 1½ cents per pound or fraction thereof for delivery within any other zone.

It is seen that the change which is made is substantially going back to the old flat-rate system. The only change in the old flat-rate system provided in the pending amendment is this, that in the first two zones of 200 miles, 50 miles for the first zone and 150 miles for the second zone, there is a flat rate of 1 cent a pound, and in all zones beyond that 1½ cents a pound. The amount of increased revenue from that provision will be very small. It has not been estimated, as I find, by the committee. Certainly we have had no report on it. The question for the Senate to decide is whether we are going back to the old flat-rate system, as provided in this committee amendment. Are we going back to the subsidy system, or are we going back and instead of paying $70,000,000 paying perhaps $66,000,000 a year in subsidies to the publishers on account of rebates in rates on the magazines largely?

I want to be frank with the Senate in this matter. I am inclined to believe that the provision of 1 cent a pound within a radius of 200 miles for newspapers, or for all periodicals, is fair and right. I believe that the newspapers pay their own way within such a zone, and I shall be very glad to see the zone system modified so as to fix a rate of 1 cent a pound within the first two zones. That part of the amendment changing it is all right; I see no objection to it. I want it adopted. It is somewhat the same as an amendment that I proposed last year, and I really believe it would be better for this reason: It will be remembered that the real cost to the Government of the second-class mail is transporting it a long distance at a flat rate. It has been shown by proof that I believe to be competent before the Post Office Committee from time to time that within a zone of 200 miles, and I think even farther than that, probably 250 miles, newspapers are absolutely self-sustaining; in other words, they pay for the cost of their transportation. The present law provides for a constantly increasing rate, as has been seen by my reading of it a few moments ago, gradually increasing the rates on the first two zones from 1 cent and a quarter a pound up to 2 cents a pound. I believe when we reach the maximum of 2 cents a pound in a zone of 200 miles, it is going to be found to pay a great deal more than the cost of transporting all the periodicals within that zone. Indeed, I think it will pay twice as much as it costs the Government to transport it. I do not believe that is proper or right.

On the other hand, it will be found that the rates were too low for the farther zones. The highest rate it will reach is, I think, 8 cents a pound. I understand the present law will produce in revenue, when the system is in full force in 1921, when this increase in rates year by year goes on until 1921, about $20,000,000. In other words, all that will be done by this bill will be to wipe out about $20,000,000 of the deficit, taking away from the publishers $20,000,000 of the subsidy now granted them. In other words, the United States will thereafter pay to the publishers a subsidy of $50,000,000 instead of a subsidy of $70,000,000, as it does now. That is the effect of the present law passed in 1917, and so far so good.

That is the effect of the present law, passed in 1917, and so far so good.

The zone system certainly ought not to be abolished as by this bill is provided. The only modification that I have to suggest is this: Under the amendment I have offered, and which is pending before the Senate, in a zone of 200 miles, the first two zones, instead of the rates being 1¼ cents, as it is now, and gradually ascending to 2 cents, my amendment provides that it shall be 1 cent. The subsequent part of my amendment retains a zone system just as it is, but increases for the farther zones just a little more than the proposal of the committee. The result is that under the provisions of the amendment I have offered, in addition to its being a fairer method of settling this controversy by reason of the fact that the newspapers and periodicals circulating in a zone of 200 miles are now paying their own expenses, it simply amounts to this: The amendment that I have offered does not go quite as far as the law does now. Under my amendment the amount that will be produced to the Government will be from twelve to fifteen million dollars, about three-fourths not of what is now brought in but what will be brought in at the end of the four-year period under existing law.

Mr. President, I am going to offer that amendment and ask the Senate to vote on it. If the Senate declines to accept that amendment I am going to vote against any change of the zone system, because I believe that the zone system is the only proper method of dealing with this second-class postal rate question.

It is contended that the present zone system is unfair. I suppose whenever any bounty is taken away from anyone the method adopted of taking it away is considered by those whom it affects as being unfair. Did it ever occur to Senators, now that there is such a complaint about the first-class mail matter, as to the cause of that complaining? Every day our mail is filled with complaints from the fathers and mothers of this country about their letters not reaching their boys in Europe and about their boys' letters not reaching them. Just this morning I received a letter from a Congressman elect saying that his boy had been in France for four months; that the family had written to him very often, and he had never received a letter in the four months. Just a day or two ago the parents received four letters written at various times from their boy. In these he said that he had never received a dollar of pay since he had been over there, and that though his father had sent him money from time to time he had never received a dollar of that money. There must be some fault about our mails. I do not know how it can be accounted for except that our mails are so full of second-class mail matter that the first-class mail matter is being neglected to give way for carrying the second-class mail matter. In other words, the mails are so crowded and stifled that first-class mail matter does not have a fair chance. I do not know that that is the reason for it, but there ought to be some explanation of the very remarkable fact that letters do not go as they formerly did.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am afraid the explanation the Senator from Tennessee gives for the defective mail service between the United States and France will hardly do. As a matter of fact there is comparatively little second-class mail that goes to France, and therefore it could not be held responsible for the failure of the delivery of letters there. On the other hand, the second-class mail in this country is very large, and the delivery of first-class mail in this country is entirely satisfactory.

The only explanation for the failure to deliver the mail to the soldiers in France, and for the failure to receive the letters of soldiers in France written to their families in this country is, in my opinion, rank incompetency; and I just take this occasion to say that it is one of the most disgraceful breakdowns of the Post Office Department, in the first place, and of the War Department management, in the second place, that the soldiers in France have been deprived of their home letters and the folks at home have been deprived of the letters from their soldiers. It has been destructive or injurious, at least, to the morale of our soldiers abroad, and it has caused a world of anxiety unnecessarily to families here. It is due, first, last, and all the time to the rankest sort of mismanagement and incompetency in the Post Office Department and the War Department. We might as well be plain about that. It is one of the things that is causing in this country the most widespread dissatisfaction and indignation, and no explanation for it has been made, and none can be made, except rank, miserable incompetency.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator may be entirely correct about it. At the same time I notice that the increase in the volume of second-class matter is out of all proportion in the matter of pounds, in the matter of millions of pounds, to the first-class matter. It may be that first-class matter has got blocked, as I suggested a while ago. I can not say about that. I am not here to decide the question as to who is responsible for it. I have a different proposition on hand just now which I want to talk about. There have been many difficulties to overcome in handling our over-seas mail.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is just——

Mr. McKELLAR. And I will be glad to proceed. I know the Senator is correct in his statement that there is constant complaint from citizens all over the country about the mails between here and their boys in Europe, and we ought not to be in a position where complaints can justly be made. I know they are made, and repeatedly made, and I wish I could in some way remedy that very unfortunate situation. I can not undertake to attempt to fix the blame now.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator knows from his service on the Military Committee that repeated efforts have been made to ascertain the cause of this miserable breakdown, and the committee has been unable to get anything like an adequate explanation from the people responsible for it. It is worse probably, but not much worse than the breakdown of the business management in this country which has failed to pay family allotments to the families of soldiers who are serving abroad. It is like the business breakdown which has resulted, when, as we know, soldiers in the service have gone one, two, three, four, five, and six, and in some case seven, months without their pay. It is such a business breakdown that it reflects most seriously against the business management of these departments we have intrusted with responsible duty during this war.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to say a word in answer to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. I have three sons in the service and they write and we get the letters not every day, but seldom a week passes that we do not get letters from them. I can not understand why there should be such a lack of letters that are written by soldiers to other people. We have had a fair return in the way of answers and the letters that have been written from our side have reached them; sometimes not rapidly, of course, for there is difficulty in transmitting mail over there, and there is great difficulty also in finding the regiments because the troops are going from one part of the line to another every few days. I can give an illustration of this difficulty. When my youngest boy was about to sail from Long Island we went to see him off. We had been informed that he was going to sail in a day or two. We got to the gate and we were told that the battery had not gone. They said it would be found several blocks over in a certain direction. We went over in that direction making frequent inquiry. We went a distance of six or seven blocks and there we were told we should go over in another direction. We went to no less than eight different places that were designated and at last found a man who said, "I will take you right to the battery," and so he did, and that is the only way we found it. We found that the battery was located within two blocks of where we first made inquiry, but they had said "no; it is not here."

Of course, it is on account of the temporary character of the location of the troops; nobody can keep track of them, and on that account I have not any doubt but that there have been failures to deliver mail. I have not any doubt but that some of the mail does not come here that is written by our soldiers abroad, but considering the confused character of the various regiments, batteries, and companies and the movements almost daily to different parts of the line, I have not any doubt but that the service has been very good; not the best in the world, because it can not be so good as when people are established in a locality.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. Has not the Senator received a large number of complaints from his constituents that their mail has not been delivered and that they have not received their mail from over there?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I have received some, not many; but I say to the Senator, while some of the complaints are well founded, I find in many instances it is absolutely the fault of the soldier boy. In one instance a mother complained bitterly and said there must be some fault, that her boy was a most dutiful boy, and his allowance had always come to her; but for the past four or five months she had not heard from him; that something was terribly wrong, and she wanted something done. I made inquiry concerning the matter, and I found that the boy five months before had married and transferred his allowance to his wife instead of his mother.

There are instances, of course, where there are failures to deliver the mail at times, and it may be the case for a while longer; but where you have two or three million men scattered over wide territory, no one knowing exactly where they are—the mail authorities probably do not know—it does seem to me that there has been a fair accommodation in mail matters between Europe and the United States.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield for a question; but I want to go on. It will take me but a few minutes to conclude. The mail service matter is beside this particular question.

Mr. WEEKS. I do not want to ask a question. I want to ask about what has been said on this subject, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is wholly apart from the subject I am discussing, but I yield.

Mr. WEEKS. I did not suppose there was a Senator on this floor who would have the temerity to even apolize for the foreign mail service. The Senate Military Committee, as the Senator from Tennessee knows, has frequently made inquiry about the matter. There has been a deluge of complaints from every source, complaints that have been verified, and it has been acknowledged on the part of the War Department officials appearing before the committee that the service was bad and they did not know, practically speaking, how to correct it. What the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] has said about it is absolutely true. It is not only a breakdown, it is a hopeless breakdown, and it shows an incompetency which I have not seen anywhere in the Government service since I have been in Congress.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, one more moment. The Senator can go further than that. He can say it got so bad that the War Department itself insisted upon taking over the service. It was taken away from the Post Office Department because it was so impossible, and now the War Department itself has broken down in about the same degree. It has attempted the delivery of mail to soldiers over there, and I am told by those who have seen it that mail for weeks is held piled up by the ton in the sacks it came in without having been delivered.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have no doubt that the failure has been because of the difficulty in getting the addresses of companies and the location of them. Here is a letter I have just received from one of my sons, written the 30th of November, mailed the 2d of December, and received to-day. Seventeen days in transmission from France is not bad. Considering the fact that in a great big army of that kind the addresses are often wrong, it does seem to me that that is a pretty fair service. It is true that you can not have perfect service where you have two or three million men who are in various and different locations, moving from one part of the line to another, but it seems to me that all things considered it is not a bad service. When officers are doing the best they can under the circumstances I believe they should be encouraged instead of being condemned.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, we have wandered somewhat afield, and I want to come back to the real controversy here. Our New England, New York, and Eastern friends who are interested in the publishing business frequently tell us it is very unfair to the West, to the far-off States, for their citizens not to be able to get the advantages of the lower rates of postage, and there is a great educational propaganda that is being sent out by the aforesaid eastern publishers for the benefit of our far-off southern and southwestern and western communities. I do not think I ever read a better answer to that proposition than in a letter I have before me, and I am going to call the attention of the Senate to it. It is from Mr. F. P. Holland, who is president of the Texas Farm and Ranch Publishing Co., and, I think, answers every contention I have ever heard made on that subject. For the benefit especially of our western and southwestern Senators I want to read it:

DEAR SIR: I have been advised that there is a strong movement under way—

He is right about that, I will interpolate, not a strong movement is, but a strong movement has been, is now, and ever will be as long as we permit these gentlemen to enjoy this subsidy. Mark me, as long as Congress permits the owners and controllers this subsidy that they are drawing from the Government in whole or in part we are going to find a strong current right here in Washington seeking to uphold it, seeking to make it larger, seeking to defeat all the legislation that has been passed here to put them on an equality with the rest of our citizens. I read on:

I have been advised that there is a strong movement under way to repeal the zone system, and I desire to enter a protest, both as a publisher and a citizen, feeling that the period of readjustment following the war will be difficult enough, without sudden shifts in the salutary program recently adopted.

The old flat rate, in effect, constituted an economic, social, religious, and political barrier. It tended to discourage literary and technical development in the magazine field outside of the East.

May I interpolate right here that the complaint that is coming here from the zone system emanated directly or indirectly in the eastern part of our country and not from the western and southern part of our country.

In operation it was nothing less than a subsidy granted the New York publications.

Remember, Senators, the Government gives as a bounty scores of millions of dollars every year, and it is growing constantly under the old flat-rate system which we are asked to restore.

If to the former subsidy in postage the existing burden in freight is added—and freight in carload lots to Texas amounts to between $400 and $500—then it is clear that no publication outside of the favored circle has an even chance to make good, except to the extent that it is able to give greater value for less money.

The freight rate has increased by the action of Congress almost double. The Government has to pay more for the cost of carrying these periodicals than ever before—probably 100 per cent more—and yet because Congress has taken just a small portion of that subsidy away from them they were back here at Congress urging us to restore the old flat rate almost before we got acquainted with the new law. I do not see how any Senator can vote for a return to the old flat-rate system. I do not know how he is going to defend his vote. I do not believe he can defend his vote. But I will read on:

The eastern publications have carried on a vigorous propaganda since the zone system was first suggested, spending thousands of dollars in their efforts to secure a flat rate, even at double the present cost in postage. Why? They desire to perpetuate the principle of subsidy as an advantage against the remainder of the country, whether the haul is 10 miles or 10,000.

Now, notwithstanding the fact that many of them have increased their subscription rates enough to absorb the additional cost of carriage, they are still bent upon creating a monopoly.

They have already increased the rates for their magazines upon the people to pay them for this increased cost of transportation; they are still bent upon holding their subsidy and building up their monopoly—

The only side of the argument presented to the public has been their side, and many organizations have indorsed their statements without giving the facts any consideration whatever.

And may I interpolate again that to my certain knowledge thousands and thousands of letters printed and signed by various organizations in my State have been forwarded to me against the zone system, and I believe in every case where I have taken the trouble to write to the writer of the letter and ask how it happened that he or she wrote to me about it, he or she came back and said they were asked to do it by the publisher of a certain paper or in answer to a request in an advertisement; that they knew nothing about it themselves, but they were caught with the idea that they would get their periodicals cheaper perhaps. Reading on:

It is unfair to assume that a magazine mailed from Dallas to Waco should bear the same rate borne by a magazine going from New York to Manila, just as it is unfair to argue that publishers at a distance from the paper mills should enjoy the benefit of a common freight rate. Indeed, when it comes right down to it, I might as well contend that a publisher in Texas is entitled to the reduced freight rate, since the argument differs in no material respect.

But there is another and a far more vital reason why the East should not be permitted to furnish the reading matter for the Nation. As you will remember, Wall Street clamored against currency reforms, and yet, when the reforms were finally inaugurated, the country, as a whole, derived immediate benefits, and to-day it is doubtful whether a financial panic is possible.

That was one of the financial reforms inaugurated. So when the Federal reserve bank was established we remember that these same eastern allied interests—not the same interests, of course, but I suppose similar—were absolutely sure that it would ruin the country. Yet Congress adopted the great Federal Reserve System of banking, and you see the benefits all over the country, notwithstanding the cocksure predictions of some of our eastern friends.

With greater elasticity an era of confidence was ushered in, despite the loud predictions of interested prophets. The equitable rate offered publishers came during the war, when materials and wages were high; at a time when the Government very wisely prohibited the consumption of paper in new ventures.

Had the zone system been adopted during normal times, legitimate expansion would have disarmed the sharpest critic of the existing system. New York has the population, the factories, the combinations of capital, and the magazine. It is inevitable under existing conditions that the magazines should offer the standards of the East for the consideration of the West, to the exclusion of the ideals and ambitions of the West; that instead of abolishing sectionalism they should gradually bring the country to one system of belief, founded on sectionalism brought to its highest possible standard of refinement.

There is no such thing, for example, as a national farm paper, owing to the varying conditions of climate, soil, transport, market, and labor, and agriculture, admittedly, is the basic occupation. Considering this phase of the business alone, it is to the advantage of the Nation to encourage the development of journals which reflect local conditions and stimulate community progress, and what is true of agriculture in the narrow sense is true of education in the broader sense, for each section of the country has an inherent right to self-expression, and the newspaper is not the medium through which thought becomes a permanent enriching asset.

Wall Street was not slaughtered by currency reforms, neither will the national magazine be killed by a fair rate of remuneration for the service rendered. It is rather absurd, when you come to think of it, that a Texas magazine, which occupies new territory, should have to help defray the carriage on an eastern publication. The subscriber should pay the bill if he happens to be a long way from market, just as he pays on a shipment of mackerel from Maine.

I believe that the maximum benefit will be derived by the people of this country when they are fortunate enough to be able to present their own views in their own way, and I am convinced that enough of the big journals will endure to help bind the people together, although I am not quite certain, under the provision of the zone system which provides that not more than 50 per cent can be paid in commissions for subscriptions, that some of the advertising sheets which depend solely upon bogus circulation will continue to prosper. Again, I hardly think that the spiritual uplift of the Nation will be furthered by a low rate on such decadent trash as Snappy Stories and The Parisienne, themselves a thousand times more pernicious than the so-called sectional journalism which New York dreads.

As I have pointed out, the publications which contend for the flat rate, even at a stiff increase, are interested primarily in the ratification of a system of subsidy under which they can operate more readily against competition arising off the Atlantic coast. If the flat rate is sound and the people stand in need of education, as authors of the propaganda contend, then it certainly follows that the Bible, Shakespeare, Gibbon, Dickens, and Wilson should enjoy it, for it is hardly compatible to urge that a passage from Diamond Dick equals a passage from the Bible when it comes to promoting morals, progress, political unity, and literary comprehension.

Remember, Senators, that on all these books there is a different rate; they pay according to the length of transportation, and do not go as second-class matter.

Before the zone system is tampered with, I think it is only fair that it should be given a thorough trial under conditions of peace. To alter it now because it is bitterly opposed by selfish interests claiming leadership in intellectual matters would lead to confusion and leave the question of merit undetermined.

I believe that the Government, which now aspires to such big things in regard to the common welfare, would commit a grievous blunder if it reestablished the old form of subsidy, which enabled periodicals in the great centers to circulate advertising through its direct patronage.

I do not want to place myself in the light of contending for special consideration; I do want to make myself clear in regard to postage determined by the nature of the service rendered.

Yours, very truly, F. D. HOLLAND,
President Texas Farm and Ranch Publishing Co.

Mr. President, I want to commend the statements in this letter to the Senate. Let us give this zone system a fair and impartial trial. The magazines have not gone out of business since it has been established, which was a little over a year ago, and it has been in force since last July. I have not heard of a single magazine that has suspended. Freight rates have increased nearly a hundred per cent. The Government has to stand that, while the magazine rates have been increased by the Government only about 10 or 11 per cent, and they never will go to an increase of more than 20 per cent under the present law.

The truth of the business is that the publishers ought to be glad, looking at it from a selfish standpoint, which I do not think ought to exist; but looking at it from their own selfish standpoint, they ought to be glad to forgo the $70,000,000 of subsidy which the Government is giving them under the present law and accept what the present law gives them. The Government is not giving to any other class of our citizens a subsidy. The lawyers of the country do not get a subsidy; the farmers of the country do not get a subsidy; the mechanics of the country do not get a subsidy; the laboring men do not get a subsidy; the ministers of the gospel do not get a subsidy; the doctors, the merchants, the blacksmiths, the clerks, do not get a subsidy; no other class of our people get a subsidy except this one class, and we are giving them $70,000,000 a year under the flat-rate system. We have only as yet taken away $4,000,000 of this, and yet they want us to return it.

Who appeared before the committee? Did the publishers? I ask the chairman of the committee, did the publishers or any of the representatives of the publishers appear before the committee and ask that this system be changed almost before we even started it?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that at the time we were having hearings and up to the time we closed our hearings there was no suggestion of a change. The suggestion of the amendment came in executive session, but a great number of publishers came personally and talked with members of the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not surprised. The publishers have been here very regularly in their own behalf. They argue well a bad cause. I am sure that there is no public sentiment for the change back to the old flat-rate system except such as has been created by the advertisements of publishers and salesmen and by personal visits. In almost every magazine of this country we have seen advertisements substantially like this: "Do you think that the people in distant communities ought to be discriminated against; that they ought to pay more for their reading matter than the people in New York pay? Ought they not all to have their reading matter at the same rate as the New Yorkers get theirs?"

Quite frequently that kind of argument catches the person to whom it is addressed. These advertisements are so arranged as to make them very enticing to people who do not understand the matter, people who would not for a moment uphold any Senator or any Representative in voting this immense subsidy of $70,000,000 to the allied magazine interests. I think there are about 87 magazines in the whole country, or something like that. According to the proof they are all united by bonds of some sort; all have a community of interest in fighting for the restoration of this flat rate, fighting for this subsidy. One publisher, as I recall the facts, is the owner of 11 magazines, and receives an annual subsidy from the Government of over $5,000,000. Is that right? Why to that distinguished publisher, owning many newspapers and 11 magazines, should Congress vote a rebate in freight rates of over $5,000,000 a year?

The time has come, Senators, when we should be very careful about the expenditure of the people's money. The war is over. It is necessary for us to tax our people heavily; we have got to lay a heavy taxing hand on them, but we ought to be very careful about expenditures and to be very careful about the subsidies which we grant to any class of our citizens. Let us give this system, which we only enacted last year, a fair trial. It is not exactly what it ought to be. I think it might be made a little more equitable. I may be wrong about it, but we have just put it into force; it has not yet been in force for six months. Let us give it a fair trial. Do not let us change at this time.

I beg the Senate to disagree with the unamended amendment which has been offered by the committee and to vote it down. I ask the Senate first to vote for the amendment which I have offered. If added to the committee amendment it will perfect that amendment. It will retain the zone system and will not require newspapers circulating in a zone of 200 miles to pay more than the cost of transportation within that zone. It will distribute the cost more equitably. I want to insert here the committee amendment as amended by my amendment. If this amendment is not adopted I shall vote against the repeal of existing law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the amendment of the committee, as proposed to be modified by the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, will be printed in the RECORD.

The committee amendment, as proposed to be modified, is as follows:

SEC. 1402. (a) That section 1103 of the revenue act of 1917 is hereby repealed.

(b) Section 1101 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1101. That on and after July 1, 1919, the rates of postage on publications entered as second-class matter (including sample copies to the extent of 10 per cent of the weight of copies mailed to subscribers during the calendar year) when sent by the publisher thereof from the post office of publication or other post office, or when sent by a news agent to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news agents for the purpose of sale, shall be 1 cent per pound or fraction thereof for delivery within the first and second zones applicable to fourth-class matter.

"Third zone, 1½ cents per pound.
"Fourth zone (300 to 600 miles), 2 cents per pound.
"Fifth zone (600 to 1,000 miles), 3 cents per pound.
"Sixth zone (1,000 to 1,400 miles), 4 cents per pound.
"Seventh zone (1,400 to 1,800 miles), 5 cents per pound.
"Eighth zone (over 1,800 miles), 6 cents per pound:

"Provided, That free-in-county circulation provided by law shall continue as at present: Provided further, That the Postmaster General may hereafter require publisher to separate or 'make up' to zones, or in such manner as may be directed, all matter of the second class when offered for mailing."

(c) This section shall take effect July 1, 1919.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I feel myself guilty in taking the time of the Senate to discuss this question, but the time so far to-day has been taken up by Senators who are opposed to the repeal of the zone system. I am, therefore, going to ask the indulgence of the Senate for just a few minutes to call attention to some of the statements which have been made and to briefly state why I think that, for the best interests of the country at large, the zone system should be repealed.

We have heard repeated again to-day the old charge that there was a subsidy of $70,000,000 granted to the publishers of this country through the old 1-cent rate upon second-class mail matter. Mr. President, how is that arrived at and upon what is it based? Everyone who makes the statement bases it upon the Hughes Commission report. I say now that if all of the second-class mail matter were eliminated from the mails to-day and first-class mail matter alone carried, instead of there being a profit, there would be a deficit.

The $70,000,000 which is charged up to the second-class mail matter is reached in this way, which is unfair: The mail is weighed and after determining the number of pounds of all the mail which is carried from all parts and to all parts of the country, the expense of carrying the mail, and administering the affairs of the Post Office Department are all ascertained. They then find how much it is going to cost a pound to carry the mail—first class, second class, third class, and fourth class—and the second-class mail matter is charged with its pro rata amount of expense based upon the total weight. We are told that by that system there is a deficit in carrying second-class mail matter of $70,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Utah seems to be in doubt as to whether this is a fair method of reaching what the actual amount of the deficit is. On the other hand—and the Senator may be correct about it, as I am not certain about it myself—the Senator has no doubt in his mind that whether the method of finding out the cost is correct or not, there is a deficit of many millions of dollars in carrying the mails, has he?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Tennessee has asked me that question before, and I frankly said I had no doubt of a deficit; but I wish to say to the Senator that it costs the Government of the United States more to deliver a hundred pounds of first-class mail matter than it does to deliver a hundred pounds of second-class mail matter, and——

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. HARDWICK. While that is true, the department reports full allowance for that, and they give the figures for each class. The Senator understands, if he has examined the question, that the department has applied the same system for determining what it costs for each class of mail matter.

Mr. SMOOT. That is exactly what I said, that this same system was applied to every class of mail matter in the United States, and I say that it is not fair. Take a letter that weighs an ounce. Under the old rate it was 2 cents for a letter; it could be carried from New York to San Francisco for 2 cents, and it could be carried from San Francisco to England for 2 cents, there being no zone system whatever in regard to that class of mail. I call attention to the fact that nearly every civilized country in the world carries its mail on a flat rate, and no matter whether the distance is 10 miles—if 10 miles is outside of the drop zone—or 3,000 miles, the rate is the same.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield first to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that, while this system of including overhead charges applies to all four classes of mail matter, as I stated just now, the fact remains that the department, the Hughes Commission, and everybody else has always figured the cost of handling first-class mail as being in excess of 50 cents a pound, instead of 8 cents, which is the estimate for handling second-class mail matter.

Mr. SMOOT. I say to the Senator that I will agree with him when he says that the Post Office Department and the Hughes Commission agreed to the cost, but when he says that everybody else agrees to it, I must disagree with his statement.

Mr. HARDWICK. Probably I "covered too much territory."

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that there are men in the Post Office Department who have studied this question, and who are as intimately acquainted with it as any of the assistant postmasters general; and they say that the Hughes Commission report can not be sustained. But even granting what the Senator says, Mr. President, I say, in my opinion there is a loss in carrying second-class mail matter——

Mr. HARDWICK. There is a very heavy loss.

Mr. SMOOT. But not any such loss as shown by the Hughes Commission report.

Mr. McKELLAR. What would the Senator fix the loss at?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I never like to state a figure upon the floor of the Senate unless I am pretty positive that it is correct. So I can not answer the Senator's question positively; but I will state to him that it would not surprise me at all if there was a loss of $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 a year, basing the estimate upon the old rate, provided the overhead charges and the expense of delivering the second-class mail matter are estimated as they have been estimated in the past. I have no desire, Mr. President, to try to mislead Senators upon this question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield further to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator spoke of the policy of other Governments, and said that none of them had established a zone system, but that they had a flat rate. I am not advised about that; but the Senator understands, does he not, that no Government in the world has as good a postal system as we have?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, take Canada, on the north. The rate charged by Canada on second-class mail matter is half a cent a pound, or 50 per cent of what we originally charged. Canada, passing through this war, imposing such taxes upon her people as never were known before, and looking for money from every possible source, has felt that it was very unwise to increase the rate on second-class mail matter. I could, Mr. President, go into the postal rates of every country this afternoon, but I do not wish to take the time of the Senate now to do so. I simply wish to record my dissent from some of the statements that have been made here to-day in relation to the cost to the United States Government of handling second-class mail matter.

The Senator from Tennessee just a few moments ago said that there was one publisher in the country who was receiving from the Government of the United States a bonus of $5,000,000. I know to whom the Senator refers, and I wish to say to the Senator that if he would go to the Treasury Department and could secure the return of that publisher showing his net income for the last year, the Senator would find that his income was not anywhere near $5,000,000.

Mr. President, the United States Government established postage rates; it invited all the publishers of the United States to build their business upon those rates, and the publishers of this country had a perfect right to believe that the rates that were imposed in the old law would stand. Why? Because no other civilized country has thought of increasing rates upon second-class mail matter, but the almost invariable rule in other Governments has been to decrease such rates.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will look at the hearings he will find the figures which I gave to be accurate, so far as the proof was concerned. That leads me to ask the Senator this question: The Senator will recall that last year and heretofore the question of zone rates was fought out by the Post Office Committee. There was a great fight made, and the Post Office Committee had very extended hearings on the subject. They went over the whole matter, and they reported a system after the most careful examination. Now, why is it that the Finance Committee takes jurisdiction of this matter after a system had been adopted by Congress under a report of the Post Office Committee?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we find that a year ago the revenue bill was made the vehicle, as it were, for an amendment to the then law increasing the rate of postage, and not only increasing the rate of postage but providing for the establishment of a zone system. The bill which we have now under consideration repeals that law and enacts another law, and the Finance Committee is simply carrying out the policy adopted when the zone system was put into effect.

Mr. President, can anybody defend the fact that an American citizen living in San Francisco can send to the farthest ends of India second-class mail matter for about one-quarter of the amount that he can send it from San Francisco to New York? Can anyone defend the fact that a citizen of Canada, to the north of us, can send to the farthest parts of the United States a magazine published in Canada for nearly one-fourth of what an American citizen can send a magazine published in New York to the same point when the new rates shall be in full force?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I do not know whether that can be done under our law or not; the Senator is more familiar with it, probably, than I am; but I wish to say to the Senator that, if that is the law, I will very cheerfully join the Senator in an attempt to repeal it, so as to make it fair to the American public.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that it is not fair to-day; and the Senator's amendment, I will add, is simply midway between the present law and the amendment which is reported by the committee; in other words, the amendment reported by the committee will yield over and above the old rate between four and five million dollars per annum, while the amendment which the Senator from Tennessee has just offered to the committee amendment would yield about ten or eleven million dollars a year over and above the old rate in force before the present law.

Mr. President, America must not be split up into half a dozen sections. I believe in the theory of the fathers that the Post Office Department was never intended as a revenue-collecting institution. It is not so regarded in any country, and it should not be so regarded in our country.

I could not help smiling when the letter of Mr. Penton, the publisher of the Iron Age, was read. In all of these tax matters, Mr. President, when a letter comes recommending certain increases in taxes that may fall upon the party making the recommendation, I always look for "the nigger in the woodpile," and he can generally be found. In this case the writer of the letter does not say that he is in favor of a zone system, but he does say that he would prefer to have an increase in second-class postage rather than to have an increase in first-class postage rates. Why? Pick up the Iron Age, Mr. President, particularly the holiday issue that has been presented here to-day as a frightful example, and you will see in that publication thousands of little advertisements. The publisher of that periodical knows that he can pay upon the 18,000 copies of each issue the increased rate on second-class mail matter and still pay less than if he had to pay increased postage on his letters to his advertisers, not only on the original letter addressed to them, but when a return is made for the payment of the advertisements on the letter acknowledging its receipt; indeed, there is no telling how many other letters must be sent, including statements showing amounts due, and in connection with other contracts between the publisher and the different advertisers in his periodical. Therefore it perhaps would have been an advantage to him to let the postage on first-class mail matter remain as it was and increase the rates on second-class mail matter as he suggested.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, is the Senator referring to Mr. Penton?

Mr. SMOOT. I am referring to Mr. Penton, publisher of the Iron Age.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator know how many letters he writes each year?

Mr. SMOOT. I do not know the number; but I do not think it is necessary; the same can be fairly judged.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator know the amount of second-class mail matter that Mr. Penton sends out?

Mr. SMOOT. He at least sends out his weekly issue of 18,000 copies or more.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me ask the Senator upon what does he base his assertion that Mr. Penton would be saving money in that kind of way?

Mr. SMOOT. I base it upon the evidence that has been submitted of similar publications to the committee several times when this question has been up. I wish to say to the Senator that publishers and others who have used the second-class mail privilege have shown to the committee that their first-class postage was more than their second-class postage expense.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator referred to Mr. Penton's letter?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. I know Mr. Penton, and I know him to be an honest man. He knows his business, and, I dare say, knows it better than the Senator from Utah knows it; and I am a little surprised to hear the Senator make a statement of that kind without having more data with regard to Mr. Penton's business.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Ohio did not hear what the Senator from Utah said or he would not have made the statement which he has made. The Senator from Utah has not charged Mr. Penton with being a dishonest man; but the Senator from Utah has stated that he was bright enough and a smart enough business man to know what his expense would be under the zone system for second-class mail as compared with the increase in the first-class letter postage.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator mean by that statement to have it inferred that Mr. Penton is controlled in his views with regard to public legislation by the amount of money he is to get out of it?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think that was what brought forth his letter—the very fact that there were taxes to be imposed that fell upon his business; and the letter itself shows that that was the reason why he wrote it.

Mr. POMERENE. Always these men who are after a certain class of governmental graft are questioning the motives of other men. I deny the right of the Senator to question Mr. Penton's motive in this matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, Mr. President, I have made the statement, and I think it is well within the bounds of truth.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. SMOOT. I promised the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] that I would be through in a very few moments, and I have taken now more time than I anticipated.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator declines to yield, very well.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMOOT. I will yield the floor, if necessary.

Mr. HARDWICK. All right. I will take it, then, to answer what the Senator has said.

Mr. SMOOT. But I am not through yet.

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh! I thought the Senator had yielded the floor. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARDWICK. I just want to suggest that there might be more force in the last argument made by the Senator from Utah with reference to Mr. Penton, of Ohio, if it were not for the fact that the Senator from Utah proposes in this same bill to reduce not only his second-class postage but his first-class postage back to where it was; so the position of the Senator from Utah is that he will save for him at both ends of the line.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this letter was written in June, 1917, when the present law was under consideration; and the Senator has not found Mr. Penton writing a letter now, when a decrease of rates is proposed.

Mr. HARDWICK. No, Mr. President; and that is not the important phase of the matter; but here was a proposition of a gentleman who was a very large beneficiary of this system telling the truth about it, whatever his motive. Now, he is not to be discredited by the committee because he has done that—and of course I know there is no personal effort to discredit him, and I have not taken any such view as that of the matter—when the committee in one hand hands him a reduction on his first-class mail matter and in the other hand presents him a reduction on his second-class matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, Mr. President, I should like to proceed.

I wish to say that I have not reflected upon Mr. Penton in any way, shape, or form. He has done just what other business men in the United States have done; but I want to say that if in this bill we had proposed an increase in the postal rates on first-class matter no doubt you would have heard from Mr. Penton, and there is no reason why you should hear from him now when there is a decrease.

I can understand why the publishers of the Saturday Evening Post do not care whether they have the zone system or whether they do not. That developed at the hearing of a year ago. The officers of that paper know well that if the zone system is in vogue there will be perhaps thousands of magazines and small weekly newspapers that will go out of existence, and the more that go out of existence the greater monopoly the Saturday Evening Post will have; and they can make more money by eliminating competition and competitors than they can by trying to secure reduced rates of postage.

The Senator has tried to make it appear that only the publishers of the country are interested in this subject, those that are pecuniarily interested; that they are the ones that are appealing to Congress. Why, Mr. President, there was a great convention held by the United States Chamber of Commerce at Atlantic City just the other day. Business men from all over this country, representing all classes of business, were in attendance upon that convention, and this is the resolution that was adopted by the convention:

Whereas the absolute industrial unity of our Nation is the basic factor in our splendid and prosperous development, and is moreover the basis upon which industrial reconstruction must rest; and

Whereas national unity is wholly dependent upon the maintenance of easy and equitable channels of communication between all sections of the Nation, which can only be accomplished through the operation of equal postal functions and uniform postal rates between all parts of the country; and

Whereas the postal zone law hastily passed by Congress last year is not only destructive of such unity, both educationally and industrially, but means the sectionalizing of our Nation: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we most earnestly urge the repeal of this postal zone law on second-class matter, and most heartily commend and indorse the action of the Finance Committee of the Senate of the United States in incorporating an amendment to repeal this destructive and un-American law.

Mr. President, I can not state the reasons for the repeal of this obnoxious law more succinctly or more to the point than the resolution passed by that great body of business men of this country.

Much has been said about carrying magazines with advertising matter in them. I have on my desk, I suppose, a hundred letters from different organizations of the country, showing the amount of mail first class in character that comes to those concerns through the advertisements as they appear in publications; and in every case the receipts by the Government from the first-class mail will far more than pay the expenses of carrying that advertising matter through our mails. Think of the millions of advertisements in the magazines of the country. Every issue, whether they be weekly or monthly, reaching to the ends of the country, going to the homes of the people; and we all know that unless it was profitable, and unless there was some return by way of orders from the people, they would not advertise. There is no order given, there is no invoice sent, there is no return made, there is no letter of explanation given from the purchaser or the advertiser, but that carries a postage stamp of 3 cents upon it. So, Mr. President, when we stop and consider the situation as it is, I believe with all my heart that a mistake will be made if we begin sectionalizing this country.

Why should a citizen of San Francisco pay four times the amount of transportation for his magazines from New York than a citizen of Ohio pays?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, why should he pay more for the transportation of himself from New York to San Francisco than he does from New York to Ohio?

Mr. SMOOT. I expected that very question, Mr. President.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has had it.

Mr. SMOOT. And I want to say now to the Senator that that is quite a different proposition. One is a commercial transaction pure and simple. The other is an educational matter, and recognized as such by every civilized country in all the world. I may answer it by asking the same question: Why should a letter be sent from New York to San Francisco at the same rate of postage as from New York to Jersey City? For the same reason and no other, Mr. President; and when we begin to chop up this country into sections it will be a sorry day for the unity and unification of the people of this country.

Therefore, Mr. President, I trust that the committee amendment will be agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I know it will be useless to spend any time in discussing this question, especially as I have no particular suggestions to make for or against the pending amendment, and I do not propose to delay action, but I do not care to let the matter pass without repeating somewhat that I said last year.

I did not believe that in last year's revenue law we dealt with postal rates in a scientific manner, nor do I consider the committee provision or the pending amendment as more than an attempt to palliate a bad condition in existing postal laws. In spite of all the arguments that have been made or that will be made to the contrary, it is a notorious fact that second-class mail matter is not paying its proportionate share of the maintenance of the Post Office Department. Special commissions composed of wise men from civil life and others from congressional membership have investigated the question and determined this truth. The stock argument that newspapers and publications generally, without distinction, are educational and necessary for upbuilding the intellectual and moral tone of the country is always advanced as reason for granting special privileges to second-class mail matter, but it is nevertheless a fact that a great majority of these beneficiaries are issued as commercial projects, with no other object in the world. They are maintained for the money the publishers get out of them.

However, this seems to be a legislative question that is very difficult to settle. I do not know whether this is due to the fact that the newspapers and magazines have such a great political influence as to warp the legislative mind or not, but I think it is. It is also true that many Members of Congress are interested in newspapers, and I can readily see that this is an embarrassing matter to them. I may not know what the reason is, but it seems to be impossible to deal with this question by itself. It ought to be considered as a separate proposition. It was not put in the revenue bill in the first place for the purpose of raising revenue. It is not now here as a purely revenue matter, but because there was and is an opportunity to annex it to a tax bill. Those who have had courage enough to meet the question of postal rate adjustment have been in the minority and have been unable to secure consideration for it as an independent proposition.

I hope that during the next Congress we shall deal with this whole question in a separate bill, and that it can be brought forward standing upon its own bottom. The bill that we have here makes very little present difference in the situation as it affects publishers. The existing law has only been in force since the 1st of last July. It has not wrought serious injury to these publications; they are simply afraid of the future; and the pending amendment does not propose to change the 300-mile limit zone. That is to be at the old rate of 1 cent a pound. Such rate, in my judgment, is too low. I have no hesitation in saying that, because evidently it is true.

We are conducting the business of transporting these publications at a loss to the people. First-class letter postage pays not only its cost but yields a big revenue besides to the Government, and yet under our existing rates on second-class matter we are obliged to use all of that surplus revenue to make up the deficit on such matter. Will anyone contend that it is right in equity or morals for the Government to tax one class of mail users at least 100 per cent more than the cost of their service in order that a bonus may be granted to another class of users who pay less than one-fifth of what it costs the Government to serve them? And when you consider that this latter class are using the mails largely for commercial purposes the more astounding the proposition becomes.

Mr. President, I for one propose to insist at the next session of Congress, if it is possible to do so, upon having this question raised and settled upon its merits. I do not want to do injustice to the publishers of the country. I may not know the facts, but I want to know them, and if they disclose discriminations I want to correct them. If I could be sure that this would be done, I would not care what happened in this bill. It would not make very much difference what you do with it if we could get action in the immediate future upon this proposition.

We have been dodging the issue. As was submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], in the letter from Mr. Penton, some of the publishers themselves admit that they are securing from the Government something to which they are not entitled, and all of them know that this is so. It is unadulterated favoritism; and it is granted, I submit, simply or largely because of the influence that those publications can exert upon the political fortunes of Members of Congress who are called upon to legislate.

I feel this way, and this is my only excuse for giving expression to my thoughts at this time. I do not like to have the provision passed with the thought that I acquiesce in these things. When I have yielded in the past it has been because I have been obliged to do so, not being able to secure the thing that I felt was absolutely just and fair to all the people of the United States. If justice and equity were done, we could reduce first-class letter postage to 1 cent, and handle all the mail of the country without loss.

You may talk about educational influences, but I suppose that letter mail is an instrument of education quite as essential as the great majority of the publications that are getting this subsidy from the Government. People correspond through the mails. It is a source of intelligence; it has an uplifting influence; and yet we tax the letter writer 2 and 3 cents per letter in order that we can give advertising mediums an opportunity to go into the Treasury of the United States and use up all its surplus postal fund.

These are plain facts, but I believe they are truths. Some newspapers and other publications might be injured if they were compelled to pay their cost of transportation to the Government. Some might have to suspend; but I submit that other provisions of this tax law are not so solicitous of the businesses to which they apply. If we must impose special burdens upon one class of mail users in order to grant special privileges upon another class, if we must, in fact, place a financial burden upon the people, in order to keep alive a few newspapers and magazines published and circulated for personal benefit and financial profit, it is time we found out whether the result is worth while.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I had not intended to make any observations upon this subject, more than to ask a few questions as the debate progressed. My attention, however, has been called to the fact that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], in beginning this discussion, referred to the letter of Mr. John A. Penton, which I had read into the RECORD, as having something about it which was an object of suspicion; at least, he referred to it as having a "nigger in the woodpile," or a nigger in the "wood fence," I am informed, is the way he put it.

I have known Mr. Penton for a good many years. He does not belong to my party, but he is one of the Republicans who has real courage; and when he sees that a thing is wrong the mere fact that righting it may take dollars out of his pocket does not influence his judgment as a public citizen.

No matter what position Senators may take as to what is the actual cost of delivery of second-class mail matter, everyone seems to concede that the carrying of newspapers and magazines by the Government is done at a very large loss. So far as this legislation is concerned it matters not whether that loss is $25,000,000 or $50,000,000 or $70,000,000. The amount which the statute now requires these publishers to pay is only a modicum of the actual cost, and Senators shoot far afield when they simply suggest that it does not cost the Government as much as the Post Office Department contends that it does cost.

We have heard the argument to the effect that the press is an influence for good, and that therefore we ought to let it have these privileges. No one is denying the fact that the press is an influence for great good. Through the propaganda which has been spread over this country during the past few years I have heard from many ministers of the Gospel on this subject, and they delight to tell of the influence of the religious papers, and state that they will be handicapped if they are not permitted to have them carried at special rates. But at the same time the atheist circulates his paper, having the same privileges; and while the minister of the Gospel is saying one word for the religious paper he is saying the same word for the atheist publication.

Then we have the publishers of the great literary magazines speaking of the benefit of their publications; and at the same time that they are speaking in the interest of their publications they are saying a good word for the publishers of the Police Gazette.

Mr. President, there is only one thing to do when it comes to legislation of this character, and that is to do what is going to be right for all the taxpayers and all the citizens of the country.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] referred to the large increase in the amount of advertising matter that appears in many of these periodicals. There is no question but that his statement is absolutely accurate, if he has not understated it; and what is this advertising matter? Why, it is a part of the merchandise of the advertiser.

The newspapers have said, the magazines said last year, "If you increase our rates, we must increase our subscription rates." Well, what if they do? Just the other day I received a statement from one of the magazines which heretofore I have received at $3.50 a year. They have increased the subscription rate to $4 a year. I am not complaining about that. It is a magazine that I have read for 30 years, and I expect to continue to read it. But I suspect that this great magazine—and its influence is great—if it would continue to take the right side of problems of this kind and say to the publishers everywhere, "You must pay for the service you get," would have a greater influence in the moral world than it and similar magazines have when they are insisting always that public servants shall vote to them large subsidies. If the Senators who are pleading for this subsidy for the publishers now were to ask for the same privilege for any other interest they would be driven from public life.

The fact is that I have heard it stated that those publishers who are opposed to this increase are now boasting of the scalps they got at the last election, and they are going to continue the fight. When I can stay in public life only by yielding to influences of that kind or threats of that kind, I prefer to get out of public life and remain in private life.

Mr. President, when this matter was up before I had some correspondence with the publishers of newspapers, and I read into the RECORD a letter from Mr. Harry E. Taylor, who is the publisher of one of the very live daily papers in southern Ohio. His home city is Portsmouth, a city of probably forty or fifty thousand inhabitants, and this was his letter:

DEAR SENATOR: I wish to express my hearty approval of your stand on the matter of newspapers and periodicals paying their way through the Postal Service. We are engaged in a legitimate commercial business, and we have no right to ask or expect that the Government shall carry our papers at a loss, as is being done now. I am confident that the great majority of publishers engaged in legitimate business feel about it as I do and are willing to pay their way with the Government or anyone else.

Sincerely, HARRY E. TAYLOR.

And again he wrote me another letter, from which I at that time read into the RECORD a paragraph. I want to read it:

I have always felt that the drawback to the newspaper business was that it was not generally recognized as a legitimate commercial enterprise. It was the custom so long for publishers of newspapers to sit around at the back doors with their hands out, begging for alms, that newspaper men came to be regarded as a sort of high-class mendicant—a sort of necessary evil, as it were. Newspaper men seemed to think, and religiously cultivated the idea, that they could not get along without subsidies and concessions from city, county, State, and National Governments in the way of special privileges. It has seemed to me that the sooner we get away entirely from this idea and stand squarely on our feet, paying our way as we go, neither asking nor accepting favors, the better it will be for all of us.

I submit that Mr. Taylor takes the real position which ought to be assumed by every publisher.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I interrupt the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I was interested in what the Senator said about the notice he had received from the magazine publisher that the price of his magazine was going up 50 cents a year. It reminds me of a little correspondence I had with one of my constituents who had been importuned by a magazine publisher to write to his Senator asking me to defeat any proposition which looked to an increase of the second-class mail rate, stating that if that were done the publisher would have to increase the price of his magazine 50 cents a year. I wrote to this correspondent of mine and asked him about how many letters he and his family wrote during the year. He wrote me back that they figured it up that he and the rest of his family wrote on an average at least four letters a week, or 208 letters a year, on which they paid a postage of $4.16. I suggested to him that the proposition was to reduce first-class letter postage to about what it cost, and to raise second-class mail postage to about what it would cost the Government, and if that were done he would get his letter postage for 1 cent and save $1.08, and could therefore well afford to pay 50 cents to the publisher and save the balance.

Mr. POMERENE. I am glad the Senator has contributed that information to the discussion. I had a good deal of correspondence on this subject, too. Some of it was with high-school children. One of these very magazines to which I refer telegraphed me at one time to the effect that their magazine was being taken by many thousands of high-school pupils in the great State of Ohio, and so forth, and urged that I, for their benefit, should allow these publishers to get their hands into the public till. While they have increased the subscription price of the magazine, I dare say if we would reduce the price of postage on second-class mail matter to what it was before the increase was made there would not be any decrease in the subscription price of the journal.

Mr. McKELLAR. The amendment which I propose is to perfect the amendment of the committee. I now offer it and ask for a vote. I call attention to the fact that the amendment comes in on line 10, page 277 of the bill, immediately after the word "matter."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 277 strike out all of line 10 after the word "matter" and all of line 11 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Third zone, 1½ cents per pound.
Fourth zone (300 to 600 miles), 2 cents per pound.
Fifth zone (600 to 1,000 miles), 3 cents per pound.
Sixth zone (1,000 to 1,400 miles), 4 cents per pound.
Seventh zone (1,400 to 1,800 miles), 5 cents per pound.
Eighth zone (over 1,800 miles), 6 cents per pound:
Provided, That free-in-county circulation provided by law shall continue as at present: Provided further, That the Postmaster General may hereafter require publisher to separate or "make up" to zones, or in such manner as may be directed, all matter of the second class when offered for mailing.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I shall occupy only a few minutes of the time of the Senate to briefly explain my own position and to state why I am opposed to the proposed change of the law. I think all of us realize the importance of collecting as much revenue as we possibly can to defray the expenses of this war. I believe even the Senator from Utah will admit that it is necessary in order to carry on the tremendous expenses of the Government.

If the provision which is now being discussed was simply one which affected newspapers I should not take any of the time of the Senate, nor should I oppose the provision offered. We know, Mr. President, that that is not the amendment which we are about to vote upon.

A farmer in the South raising cotton has just as much right to ask for a subsidy and ask that his cotton shall be transported free of charge to the markets as a newspaper publisher has to ask for the subsidy which is provided for in this amendment, not that portion of his paper or magazine which diffuses knowledge to the public, but the commercial part of his paper, namely, the advertising part, which is purely a commercial affair.

I say the cotton planter in the South has just as much right to ask for a subsidy and ask that his cotton be transported free, and so has the grain producer of the West or anyone else in the United States to ask for similar subsidy. Think of it, Senators! If any of us should propose a bill or an amendment asking that our product should be transported free of charge how ridiculous it would appear! But it is being done in this case simply because some of us are afraid of the great metropolitan press, afraid of the influence of newspapers and the magazines. Senators, the day may come when some of us will be willing and glad to let those gentlemen get our scalps rather than to submit to propositions which we know are unfair and unjust.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] referred to the fact that those same people had gloated over the fact that they got the scalps of certain men in the last election, and that that campaign will be carried on. So far as I am personally concerned they are welcome to my scalp if at the expense and the sacrifice of my own conscience and my own judgment I shall submit to a proposition which is, in my judgment, unfair, unjust, and indefensible.

In the first place, Mr. President, I am going to vote against the amendment and support the Post Office Department in what they ask, because I know the Government needs the revenue. In the second place, I am going to oppose this amendment because I believe it is an injustice to the small newspaper men in the country. I wonder what the great Security League of New York will think about Senators who are opposing administration measures now. I hope this will not be one of the 8 or 10 propositions upon which they agreed to determine whether a man was loyal or disloyal.

I say to the Senator from Utah, who is courageous, that he is taking a tremendous responsibility upon himself, because that great league is composed of the great men of this country. I know one of them very well. He testified before the Committee on Agriculture last year, at least he was present for about 30 days. He was at that time representing some of the great trusts of the country. I do not say that all trusts are bad—100 per cent bad—but this particular gentleman was not representing the common people throughout the country at that time. Perhaps he has reformed now. Perhaps he has seen the error of his ways and been instrumental in having the resolution adopted in that great convention, and which the Senator from Utah just read into the RECORD, and I have no doubt it was a great convention, composed of very eminent men.

I say to the Senator from Utah if you take it as legitimate business proposition, you can not defend it; it is indefensible; and while you argue in favor of it, you will have to argue around a circle in order to defend yourself. From the standpoint of the publishers of the small newspapers of the country, I ask to have this letter read at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

JAMESTOWN, N. DAK., December 13, 1918.

Hon. A. J. GRONNA,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: We understand an effort is being made by the big daily and the magazine publishers to secure their old subsidy privileges of the mail by a repeal of the present zone system of postage rates. We earnestly hope you will oppose vigorously this rank discrimination against the small dailies, which are growing in numbers and filling a field satisfactorily. The small daily is rapidly developing into a necessity of the smaller towns, and the reason is evident. Type-setting machines and telephones transmitting news formerly sent by telegraph have given the small daily a chance to supply the needs of the community with a combination local and general newspaper. The big dailies do not print the local news, and all the small dailies now have wire press reports and print the important news of the world and the Nation, together with the local, State, and county news.

Many persons in small towns are not able to take or have time to read the larger dailies for the general news, and are satisfied with the small daily service. The local merchant also has in the small daily a satisfactory medium to advertise his goods, which is of value to the community and a right to which it is surely entitled.

The small daily is also filling a demand of farmers for a daily newspaper delivered by rural carriers. The war, the draft, and the Red Cross have created a new class of newspaper readers, and thousands of town and farm families are now subscribers to local dailies who never subscribed or read regularly any daily paper before. The combined local and general news in concise space is all that this class of readers desire. Should they be deprived of it?

Is not the privilege of the residents of the smaller towns equal in importance to the demands of publishers of larger dailies who wish to monopolize the local field, and is it just to permit the small daily to be driven out of existence by subsidizing the larger ones by Federal discrimination?

We believe that the injustice in permitting this will only add fuel to the arguments of those who are using claims of big business favoritism to create a strong sentiment in this country against all conservative, sane, and fair legislation for all classes alike.

We hope you will oppose strenuously and promptly any change in the zone system of postage rates for newspapers.

Yours, truly,

ALERT PUBLISHING CO.,
By W. R. KELLOGG.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, that letter is from a newspaper man in my State, a man of very high standing. He is also a Republican.

If it were not for the fact that the Government at this particular time needs all the money that we can possibly collect, it might not be out of place to take this $70,000,000 out of the Treasury and subsidize the press to that amount, if they were willing to acknowledge that they are subsidized. But, Mr. President, for one I have nothing against the large newspapers of the country. They are really responsible for my presence here, because I have always had their opposition. Had it not been for their opposition, I doubt if I would have been here at all. I know the voice of the country press, of the little weekly newspaper, of the small daily newspaper in the country comes nearer to expressing the real sentiment of the people of the country than the voice of some of the large metropolitan newspapers.

Some other day, when the time of the Senate is not so precious as it is now, I shall try to amplify upon this subject; but I see that my patient, good friend from North Carolina, the chairman of the committee, is getting somewhat anxious to have the bill passed.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has correctly interpreted my feelings.

Mr. GRONNA. I shall forego taking up very much more time, although I should like to have an hour or two to tell the Senators who are present and others who may hear me what I think about this proposition. But I am going to ask the Senate to listen to a letter written by a Democratic editor of North Dakota, the editor of the only daily Democratic newspaper in my State. It is a letter which was sent to me last year. I ask the Secretary not to read his letter to me, but to read a letter which is addressed to Mr. Rex Beach. It seems that Mr. Rex Beach was president of the Authors' League of America to educate other editors throughout the country, and the letter which I ask to have read is in answer to Mr. Rex Beach by Col. J. H. Bloom, of Devils Lake, N. Dak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEVILS LAKE, N. DAK.

Mr. REX BEACH,
New York, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: I have your article advocating repeal of the new second-class postage rates which you kindly gave me first chance to publish here. I can not use this article, for I am not at all in sympathy with your position, nor is this very strange. You are a magazine and story writer; I just a plain country editor. We have no interests in common.

With the abolition of the railroad pass and other "something-for-nothing" privileges, there no longer exists any good reason why even newspapers should be deadheading it at the post office. Whatever faint excuse there may have been at one time for the carriage at a loss by Government of newspapers, none has ever existed for so carrying magazines, for this nearly free carriage and distribution could be regarded as advisable only in connection with dissemination of news, not of mere information, no matter how valuable the latter. Books give information, generally more thoughtfully prepared. Free or nearly free distribution for country newspapers did give a means of quickly getting to rural and small-town residents important news about current happenings, but that argument never applied to the magazine, which of necessity is prepared days and even weeks ahead of publication. Its contents, while in some instances containing knowledge, by no possibility furnish news, for such information as is provided ceased to be news 24 hours after it was made public.

My objection to the new law is that it does not go far enough nor quick enough. If I had my way, the rates would jump until this handling of second-class mail became profitable. Subscribers who were unwilling to pay a proper price, based on cost, for favorite periodicals, would be of mighty little value to the community.

I live in a region of farmers, and so far as they are concerned know that they are literally pestered with "junk" masquerading as farm journals, and a law that would relieve them would be welcome. I am quite aware that many people have no high regard for the country press and consider it of little consequence. Likewise many people think that we have too many magazines which are entirely unsuited for admittance to respectable homes. They get their large circulations because, through "sponging" their transportation from the Government, they can afford to make enticing offers to subscribers, and having built a big circulation get a stiff price from advertisers. Moreover, these advertisements are simply circulars or third-class matter, save in method of distribution. As such, they should pay 8 cents per pound instead of 1.

They would give away circulation if the law permitted, and even now they circumvent it in every way possible. Here is one way in which farm journals get around it: With a subscription price of $1, a journal I have in mind gives a solicitor 95 cents for procuring the subscription, and then gives a premium to the farmer which costs 35 cents, though it is represented as worth $1.50. In one case of this sort 60,000 subscriptions out of 500,000 issue were taken because of a real desire for the farm journal, the entire remainder being induced by joint action of glib-tongued solicitor and fascinating "premium."

As a result, advertisers are "bilked" into giving business to "circulation" which few read, and the post office is burdened with distribution at a loss of mountains of trash. With popular magazines the desire for increased circulation induces publishers to give agencies such rates that clubbing offers work a similar fraud upon the department and the advertiser. Wasted circulation is promoted. A subscriber who takes three periodicals, with aggregate list price of $3.50 for $2, may find that the first is one he does not want, the second his wife does not want, and the third neither wants.

I will admit I am mercenary in opposing, just as you are in exploiting, your program. I am opposed to classifying newspapers with magazines for postage purposes. Not only do newspapers render services to the public which entitle them to better rates but also the haul of the magazine is a thousand miles, and then some, while the newspaper goes perhaps 50 miles. When rates are based on common sense, the country paper will come into its own again, and the advertising that formerly appeared in its columns but has of late been carried in magazines will once more return there. Then its influence will increase, for advertising will protect its patrons against mail-order vampires, and the local merchant can once more afford to take space and exploit his wares, to the joint benefit of himself, the farmer, and the small paper.

THE ZONE SYSTEM IS THE SALVATION OF THE COUNTRY PAPER.

Every country newspaper in the United States should oppose your scheme of repeal, but they won't, for they haven't sense enough to do it. They will follow the lead of the big city papers and magazines of the East and howl about the great injustice of the increase, as you so thrillingly put it, blissfully unconscious of the fact that by so doing they are assisting the chief agents of the mail-order houses in stealing away their trade.

Another point: I want any paper that comes into my territory from St. Paul, Chicago, and New York to pay well for the privilege; at least, let it pay cost. I have to pay freight on my paper which comes to me before it is printed and then I distribute it to near-by patrons by mail, and I object to the easterner getting his paper, just because it is printed, into my people's hands free, or nearly so.

If our Congressmen do their duty by their constituents, the only change that will be made in the law will be to put more "teeth" into it, making second-class mail pay cost of handling.

Believe me, the noise the "big boys" are making is tuneful to me, but I am wondering if they can continue to get away with it. I know they should not, but they are a resourceful lot. It wasn't such a bad idea, either, to get you and the Authors' League to do some of the calamity howling.

Yours, very truly,

J. H. BLOOM,
Editor The Journal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee is an amendment to the committee amendment repealing the zone system.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is to perfect the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Johnson, Cal.	New	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Johnson, S. Dak.	Norris	Smoot
Calder	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Spencer
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Page	Sutherland
Dillingham	Kellogg	Penrose	Swanson
Fernald	Kendrick	Poindexter	Thomas
Fletcher	Kenyon	Pollock	Townsend
France	Kirby	Pomerene	Trammell
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Ransdell	Underwood
Gay	La Follette	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Gerry	Lodge	Shafroth	Warren
Gronna	McKellar	Sheppard	Watson
Harding	McNary	Sherman	Weeks
Hardwick	Martin, Ky.	Simmons
Henderson	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.
Hitchcock	Moses	Smith, Md.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question recurs upon the adoption of the amendment as proposed by the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. NORRIS. Is the vote to be taken on the committee amendment or is there a vote to be taken on an amendment to the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote is now to be taken on agreeing to the amendment as proposed by the committee.

Mr. NORRIS. I thought the Senator from Tennessee had offered an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. His amendment to the amendment was defeated. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GAY (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea." Not knowing how the Senator from Indiana would vote if present, I refrain from voting.

Mr. FERNALD (when Mr. HALE's name was called). I desire to announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], is absent on official business. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], who is not present. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], which I will transfer to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and will vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. Not knowing how he would vote, if present, I refrain from voting.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] is absent on account of official business. He is paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BAIRD].

Mr. KENDRICK (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. SHERMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON]. I am informed that if present he would vote for the committee amendment. So I am at liberty to vote, and I will let my vote stand.

Mr. WATSON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT]. I voted, but because I am unable to obtain a transfer of my pair I desire to withdraw my vote.

Mr. WARREN (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. WARREN. Then I will ask to withdraw my vote, as I have a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. STERLING. I desire to state that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] are absent on business of the Senate.

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] is detained on official business.

I desire also to announce that if the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] were present, he would have voted in favor of the so-called McKellar amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]; and

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS].

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. SHIELDS] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

Mr. STERLING (after having voted in the affirmative). I am informed that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], with whom I have a general pair, has not voted. Not knowing how he would vote, I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 22, as follows:

YEAS—34.

Borah	Hitchcock	McNary	Simmons
Calder	Johnson, Cal.	Martin, Va.	Smith, Md.
Dillingham	Jones, N. Mex.	Moses	Smoot
Fernald	Jones, Wash.	Page	Spencer
Fletcher	Kendrick	Penrose	Swanson
France	Knox	Poindexter	Underwood
Gerry	Lodge	Pollock	Weeks
Harding	McCumber	Ransdell
Henderson	McLean	Sherman

NAYS—22.

Beckham	Kenyon	Norris	Sutherland
Curtis	Kirby	Nugent	Thomas
Gronna	La Follette	Pomerene	Trammell
Hardwick	McKellar	Shafroth	Vardaman
Johnson, S. Dak.	Martin, Ky.	Sheppard
Kellogg	Myers	Smith, Ariz.

NOT VOTING—40.

Ashurst	Gay	Overman	Smith, S. C.
Baird	Goff	Owen	Sterling
Bankhead	Gore	Phelan	Thompson
Brandegee	Hale	Pittman	Townsend
Chamberlain	Hollis	Reed	Wadsworth
Colt	King	Robinson	Walsh
Culberson	Lenroot	Saulsbury	Warren
Cummins	Lewis	Shields	Watson
Fall	Nelson	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Frelinghuysen	New	Smith, Mich.	Wolcott

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, on page 7, line 1, the committee desire to perfect its amendment by adding, after the word "any," the word "stock," and after the word "taxpayer," by inserting the words "during the calendar year 1918."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTIN of Kentucky in the chair). The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 1, after the word "any," which is the first word in the line, it is proposed to insert the word "stock," so that it will read "any stock dividend," and after the word "taxpayer," in the same line, to insert the words "during the calendar year 1918."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I will ask the Secretary to read the next committee amendment which was passed over.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over was, on page 11, beginning in line 3, which was passed over at the instance of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], where the committee proposed to strike out beginning in line 3, down to and including line 9, as follows:

(a) In the case of a citizen or resident of the United States 12 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 216: Provided, That upon the first $4,000 of this amount the rate shall be 6 per cent.

(b) In the case of a nonresident alien, 12 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 216.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

(a) For the calendar year 1918, 12 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 216: Provided, That in the case of a citizen or resident of the United States the rate upon the first $4,000 of such amount shall be 6 per cent.

(b) For each calendar year thereafter, 8 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 216: Provided, That in the case of a citizen or resident of the United States the rate upon the first $4,000 of such amount shall be 4 per cent.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, that amendment was passed over with my consent. It involves the 1920 tax, and I think it may again be passed over. I do not think we are ready to take it up at this time.

Mr. President, I think the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] asked that the surtax section on page 11 be passed over. There is no notation on the back of the bill that he requested it, but I am quite sure that he did request it. I will ask the Senator from Wisconsin if I am correct about that?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It has been agreed to. I waived that request.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well; I overlooked that fact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is the one at the foot of page 47, which was passed over at the instance of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]. The amendment is under the heading of "Tax on corporations"——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I should like to have that section go over again if agreeable. I wish to submit to the Senate some remarks concerning it, and I do not believe that I care to do so this afternoon, unless it is insisted upon. I should like to take that up with some other provisions of the bill, which I hope to discuss the first thing to-morrow.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I shall not insist upon it, because I am aware of the fact that the Senator desires to discuss other portions of the bill in connection with that provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over was passed over at the request of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], on page 65, beginning in line 1, to insert:

CONSOLIDATED RETURNS.

SEC. 240. (a) That corporations which are affiliated, within the meaning of this section, shall, under regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, makes a consolidated return of net income and invested capital for the purposes of this title and Title III, and the taxes thereunder shall be computed and determined upon the basis of such return.

In any case in which a tax is assessed upon the basis of a consolidated return, the total tax shall be computed in the first instance as a unit and shall then be assessed upon the respective affiliated corporations in such proportions as may be agreed upon among them, or, in the absence of any such agreement, then on the basis of the net income and invested capital properly assignable to each. There shall be allowed in computing the income tax only one specific credit of $2,000 (as provided in section 236); in computing the war-profits credits (as provided in section 311) only one specific exemption of $3,000; and in computing the excess-profits credit (as provided in section 312) only one specific exemption of $3,000.

(b) For the purpose of this section, two or more corporations shall be deemed to be affiliated—

(1) If one corporation owns directly or controls through closely affiliated interests or by a nominee or nominees substantially all the stock of the other or others, or if substantially all the stock of two or more corporations is owned or controlled by the same interests, or if one such corporation buys from or sells to another products or services at prices above or below the current market, thus effecting an artificial distribution of profits, or in any way so arranges its financial relationships with another corporation as to assign to it a disproportionate share of net income or invested capital.

(2) A foreign corporation shall not be deemed to be affiliated with a domestic corporation unless substantially all its stock is owned or controlled by such domestic corporation or by a resident taxpayer or group of resident taxpayers owning or controlling substantially all the stock of such domestic corporation. Where under this subdivision a foreign corporation is affiliated with a domestic corporation, the total tax (computed as a unit as above provided) shall be reduced by the credit authorized in section 238.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will state that I asked that that amendment go over at the request of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], who is now present and who will offer any amendment he desires.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I have heretofore presented an amendment, which was printed, providing a substitute for subdivisions 1 and 2 of paragraph (b) of the amendment in regard to consolidated returns; but on reconsideration I ask to perfect the amendment so as simply to strike out part 2 of subdivision (b), on page 66, and insert in lieu thereof the amendment which I will ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment offered by the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment reported by the committee.

The SECRETARY. On page 66, beginning in line 8, it is proposed to strike out subdivision 2 of paragraph (b) down to and including line 16 on that page and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

(2) A foreign corporation shall not be deemed to be affiliated with a domestic corporation unless a majority of the stock or a controlling interest in the stock is owned or controlled by such domestic corporation or a resident taxpayer or group of resident taxpayers, or by such domestic corporation and a resident taxpayer or group or resident taxpayers closely affiliated with the management of said domestic corporation. Where under this subdivision a foreign corporation is affiliated with a domestic corporation the total tax (computed as a unit, as above provided) shall be reduced by the credit authorized in section 238.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, the object of that amendment is simply this: A domestic corporation doing business in a foreign country—in Canada, for illustration—renders a consolidated return of all its business and profits, but it is given credit for the taxes which it pays in Canada, as Canadian corporations are given credit for taxes they pay in this country. As a matter of fact, in carrying on business in Canada American corporations have found it necessary, instead of becoming admitted into Canada as foreign corporations, to hold the stock of Canadian corporations, and in many instances they have allowed local stockholders of their holding company to subscribe for stock in the Canadian company.

While, of course, the Congress can not compel a foreign corporation to make a consolidated return in this country, yet it is to the advantage of the foreign corporation to make a consolidated return if it can have a credit for the taxes it pays in that country, the same as foreign corporations have for taxes paid in this country; otherwise it is perfectly manifest that holding corporations in this country which have been compelled to carry on their business in a foreign country through a subcompany will not have any dividend declared from the subcompany.

I believe the Treasury Department is convinced that the Government will get more taxes under the amendment I have proposed and at the same time it will encourage American business men to continue business in Canada.

Along the northern boundary of this country there are a great many business institutions which have branches in Canada which are usually controlled by a holding company. The holding company sometimes owns 35 or 40 or 50 per cent, and the stockholders, resident taxpayers, will hold the remainder; but they are affiliated together, the companies are operated as one company, and they are perfectly willing to make returns as one company.

This bill provides—and it is a very wise provision—that where substantially all the stock belongs to a holding company it shall make consolidated returns. Personally I can not see any reason why, if they control the subcompany, a consolidated return should not be required in the same way.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KELLOGG. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that the Senator's amendment provides, "unless a majority of the stock or a controlling interest in the stock is owned or controlled by such domestic corporation or a resident taxpayer," and so forth. A controlling interest in the stock might be even less than a majority of the stock.

Mr. KELLOGG. It might be less.

Mr. SMOOT. That often happens.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the company is controlled by the stock of some of its own stockholders who act with the company that would be a controlling interest.

Mr. SMOOT. Does not the Senator think that if the corporation is allowed to make a consolidated return it at least ought to have a majority of or a controlling interest in the stock? Many corporations are controlled by one man who owns, say, 45 per cent of the stock; and it seems to me if we are going to allow consolidated returns at least there ought to be a majority of the stock owned by the individual.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is owned by the company or individual stockholders—resident taxpayers—who act with it.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have no objection to that, and I will perfect the amendment in that way if the Senator from North Carolina is willing to accept it.

Mr. SIMMONS. What is the suggestion?

Mr. SMOOT. I called the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to the fact that under the wording of his amendment a controlling interest in the stock may be less than the majority of the stock, and I asked the Senator if he would not be willing to amend his amendment so as to require a majority of the stock to be owned or controlled by the corporation making the consolidated return.

Mr. SIMMONS. Not less than a majority.

Mr. SMOOT. Not less than a majority of the stock.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will do that——

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I have no objection to that, provided that majority includes the stock held by resident taxpayers who act with the affiliated corporation, the same as in the case of the original amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Then say "not less than a majority of the voting stock."

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator in charge of the bill wishes, I will withdraw the amendment at present and offer it later.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think that will hardly be necessary.

Mr. KELLOGG. Then, Mr. President, I will read the amendment as I have modified it:

(2) A foreign corporation shall not be deemed to be affiliated with a domestic corporation unless a majority of the voting stock is owned or controlled by such domestic corporation or a resident taxpayer or group of resident taxpayers or by such domestic corporation and a resident taxpayer or group of resident taxpayers closely affiliated with the management of said domestic corporation. Where under this subdivision a foreign corporation is affiliated with a domestic corporation the total tax (computed as a unit as above provided) shall be reduced by the credit authorized in section 238.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not hear the first part of the suggestion, having been interrupted. Does it provide that it shall be not less than a majority of the voting stock?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; "unless a majority of the voting stock "——

Mr. SIMMONS. If that is the amendment, while I think the committee amendment is somewhat preferable, I am anxious not to have controversies where it is not necessary, and the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota is so much like that of the committee that I am disposed to accept it.

Mr. KELLOGG. I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over will be found on page 84, beginning with line 19.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will ask the Chair if there was not an amendment passed over on page 83?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was not. The Senator from Colorado gave notice that later on he would offer a substitute for the amendment on page 83.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes. It is marked here, and the mark does not indicate the purpose.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over begins on page 84 with the subdivision (b) under the third bracket on line 19, and was passed over at the request of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. SMOOT. Those are the 1920 rates on excess profits, and that amendment will be disposed of in connection with the other similar amendments in other parts of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let that go over again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again passed over.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, on page 168, if the Senator will turn to that page, on line 25, the word "in," after the word "spirits," should be "and."

Mr. SIMMONS. That is correct.

Mr. SMOOT. I move to strike out "in" and insert "and" at that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection.

The SECRETARY. On page 168, line 25, after the word "spirits," it is proposed to strike out the word "in" and insert in lieu thereof the word "and."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 85——

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment on page 85 was passed over for the same reason as the former amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is because it involves the question of the excess-profits tax.

The SECRETARY. On page 95——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, that amendment was passed over at the request of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]. I think the Senator has decided not to offer an amendment, which at one time he expected to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over will be found on page 105, under "Part VII.—Miscellaneous," section 335.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the same thing, and I ask that that be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again passed over.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is the one on page 107, at the foot of the page, where the committee proposes to strike out "Title IV.—Estate tax," going to the bottom of page 136. The amendment was passed over at the instance of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not see the Senator from Colorado in the Chamber. I should like very much to have action upon this amendment this afternoon, if possible.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Colorado has left the Chamber for the day. He stated to me a few moments ago that he was having some throat trouble, and had to be treated by a specialist; and I understood him to say that he would not be here for the balance of the afternoon.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well, Mr. President; let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again passed over.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over will be found on page 137.

Mr. SIMMONS. That amendment was passed over at the instance of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]. He is not here, and he requested me to have it passed over again. He said that he was necessarily called out of the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again passed over.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over will be found on page 144, and was passed over at the suggestion of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I now send to the desk an amendment proposed by the committee as a substitute for the whole of the balance of that section. The section relates to marine and fire insurance and some other miscellaneous insurance.

I will state to the Senate that the committee has worked out in the case of fire and marine insurance a different scheme of taxation from that embodied in the bill, just as it worked out a different scheme of taxation on life insurance companies, which has heretofore been adopted by the Senate. I now send the amendment to the desk. It will be seen that there are at the end of the substantive amendments a great many small amendments that are made necessary by the sweeping change in this title of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The amendment begins on page 143, line 4, with the heading "Insurance." After the heading "Insurance," it strikes out all of sections 503 and 504 and proposes the insertion of four new sections, as follows:

SEC. 503. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid in respect of all policies (not exempt under subdivision (b) of section 505) issued by any mutual insurance company a tax equivalent to 1 per cent of the excess of the gross amount of premiums charged (including reinsurance premiums charged) under such policies over the amount of premiums paid for reinsurance, return premiums, and premiums on policies not taken, such tax to be paid by the company issuing the policy.

SEC. 504. That from and after January 1, 1918, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in respect of all policies (not exempt under subdivision (b) of section 505) issued by any insurance company other than a mutual insurance company, the following taxes upon the excess of the gross amount of premiums charged (including reinsurance premiums charged) under such policies, over the amount of premiums paid for reinsurance, return premiums, and premiums on policies not taken, such tax to be paid by the company issuing the policy:

(a) In the case of policies of casualty insurance, a tax equivalent to 1½ per cent of such excess;

(b) In the case of policies of marine and inland insurance (except policies of insurance upon exports) a tax equivalent to 2½ per cent of such excess: Provided, That under rules prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, any marine insurance company or fire and marine insurance company may elect to be taxed in respect of all policies (including policies of insurance upon exports) issued by such company, in which case the rate shall be 1½ per cent, but such election once made shall be adhered to in subsequent years unless permission to change is given by the commissioner;

(c) In the case of all other policies a tax equivalent to 1½ per cent of such excess.

SEC. 505. (a) That for the purposes of sections 503 and 504 the term "policies" includes contracts of reinsurance, and all fidelity and surety bonds upon which premiums are charged, and the term "insurance company" includes reinsurance companies.

(b) Policies issued by any corporation enumerated in section 231, life insurance and annuity contracts issued by any life insurance company, and mortgage guarantee policies and policies guaranteeing titles to real estate, shall be exempt from the taxes imposed by sections 503 and 504.

SEC. 506. That the taxes imposed by sections 503 and 504 shall be computed quarterly for the periods ending on March 31, June 30, September 30, and December 31, of each year, and every person subject to such taxes shall make quarterly returns under oath, in duplicate, to the collector of the district in which the principal office or place of business of such person is located. Such returns shall contain such information and shall be made in such manner and at such times as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe. The tax shall, without assessment by the commissioner or notice from the collector, be paid to the collector at the time so prescribed for filing the return: Provided, That in the case of the tax imposed by section 504 for the calendar year 1918, return shall be made and the tax shall be paid on or before March 15, 1919, and any amounts theretofore paid under subdivision (b) or (c) of section 504 of the revenue act of 1917, or under subdivision 2 of schedule A of Title VIII of the revenue act of 1917, on account of any policy issued on or after January 1, 1918, shall be credited toward the payment of such tax.

If any tax imposed by section 503 or section 504 is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax a penalty of 5 per cent of the amount unpaid, together with interest thereon at the rate of 1 per cent for each full month from the time the tax became due until paid.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, my motion is to strike out all of section 503 and all of section 504 and insert what has been read by the Secretary. It begins on page 143, line 5, and is a motion to strike out all of section 503 and section 504.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, does the Senator expect to have a vote on that amendment to-night?

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to have it voted upon to-night.

Mr. CURTIS. There are several Senators who are interested in that section, and who were not aware that the amendment was to be proposed. If the Senator wants a vote now, I shall have to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall not ask for a vote to-night if the Senator is going to make that motion; but I do not believe there will be any objection to this change in the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. The amendment has not yet been explained, and it is a new proposition. It has not yet been printed.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well, Mr. President; the matter may go over. Does the Senator object to having it adopted subject to a motion to reconsider if any Senator desires?

Mr. CURTIS. If the Senator will consent to that action being taken.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I will consent to that.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senator will agree to have it reconsidered if anybody objects in the morning?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will agree to it; yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, in lines 8 and 16, after the word "company," it is proposed to insert the words "or a mutual insurance company."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For the purpose of this amendment and the others about to be stated, the votes whereby amendments have already been agreed to will be reconsidered in the absence of objection.

Mr. SIMMONS. I make that motion, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the votes will be reconsidered.

Mr. SIMMONS. Therefore the Chair can consider as being reconsidered all the amendments necessary to perfect this amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, lines 8 and 16, after the word "company," it is proposed to insert the words "or a mutual insurance company" within the parentheses.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 31, line 14, after the word "income," at the end of the line, it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "or taxable under section 504."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 39, line 7, after the word "income," it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "or taxable under section 504."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 47, lines 21 and 22, after the word "corporation," in line 21, it is proposed to strike out the words "other than a life insurance company" and insert "except insurance companies taxable under section 245 or section 504."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 55, line 24, after the word "income," it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "or taxable under section 504."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On pages 58 to 60, it is proposed to strike out paragraph "(10)," beginning on line 24, page 58, and all of paragraphs "(11)" and "(12)" down to and including line 4 on page 60.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 61, lines 10 and 11, it is proposed to strike out the words "except in the case of life insurance companies" and insert in lieu thereof "for the purpose only of the tax imposed by section 230."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 67, line 1, after the word "companies," in the title, it is proposed to add the words "and mutual insurance companies."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 67, line 4, after the word "company," it is proposed to insert "and every mutual insurance company."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 67, line 5 and line 10, it is proposed to strike out the words "life insurance."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 67, line 18, it is proposed to strike out the words "a life" and insert the word "an."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. After the word "company," in line 19, it is proposed to insert the words "taxable under section 245."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 67, line 23, and on page 68, line 1, it is proposed to strike out the word "An" and insert the words "In the case of a life insurance company, an."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 68, line 16, it is proposed to strike out the words "life insurance."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. Also, on page 68, line 21, it is proposed to strike out the words "a life" and insert the word "an."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. And after the word "company," it is proposed to insert the words "taxable under section 245."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On line 24, after the word "rents," it is proposed to insert a semicolon and the following: "and (2) the term 'reserve funds required by law' includes, in the case of any assessment insurance company, sums actually deposited with State or Territorial officers pursuant to law as guarantee or reserve funds."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, in the amendment on page 68, line 21, which reads: "Strike out the words 'a life' and insert the word 'an,' and after the word 'company' insert the words 'taxable under section 245,'" I am advised that the numeral "1" should be inserted in brackets.

The SECRETARY. In the amendment on page 68, line 21, it is proposed to strike out the words "a life" and insert "an," and after the word "company," at the end of the line, it is proposed to insert "taxable under section 245," and to insert in brackets the numeral "(1)."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 77, line 19, after the word "title," it is proposed to insert the words "or by section 504." There are already inserted at that place the following words:

And every personal-service corporation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, there is an amendment already adopted on page 77, line 19, and this comes before that amendment.

The SECRETARY. Then it is proposed to insert, before the amendment already agreed to, after the word "title," on page 77, line 19, the words "or by section 504."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 88, line 8, after the word "companies," it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "mutual insurance companies and insurance companies taxable under section 504."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 208, lines 8 and 9, strike out the words "other than a life insurance company."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 208, lines 21 and 22, it is proposed to strike out the words "other than a life insurance company."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 209, line 12, after the numerals "231," at the end of the line, it is proposed to insert a comma and the following: "nor to any life insurance company, mutual insurance company or insurance company taxable under section 504."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 234, line 21, after the word "all," it is proposed to insert the words "mortgage guarantee policies and policies guaranteeing titles to real estate, and on all."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 234, line 24, it is proposed to strike out the words "subdivision (b) of," and after "503" to insert "or 504."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, on page 87, line 24, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 87, line 24, it is proposed to strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a colon and the following:

Provided, That the tax upon such second part shall in no case be less than 20 per cent thereof, unless the tax upon the entire net income, if computed without benefit of this section, would constitute less than 20 per cent of such entire net income, in which event the tax shall be determined upon the entire net income, without reference to this section, as other taxes are determined under this title.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. I offer the following amendment, to come in on page 94, line 13.

The SECRETARY. On page 94, line 13, in the amendment already agreed to, strike out all after the word "assets" and the comma, and insert in lieu thereof: "valued in accordance with the provisions of subdivision (a) of section 326, section 330, and section 331."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the vote by which the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. On page 94, line 22, after the word "capital," I move to insert "for any year."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. On page 95, line 12, I move to strike out the word "taxable" before the word "year."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. On page 98, after line 4, I move to add as a new paragraph the following:

The average invested capital for the prewar period shall be determined by dividing the number of years within that period during the whole of which the corporation was in existence into the sum of the average invested capital for such years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. On page 191, line 2, after the comma and following the word "organizations" where it first occurs in that line, I move to insert the words "Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children or Animals."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator from Louisiana yield to me to offer an amendment?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the pending bill, which I ask to have printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be printed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In connection with the amendment in the nature of a substitute which I have just presented, I submit a table which I have had prepared, being a comparison of the income-tax rates and the amount of income taxes upon specified individual incomes under the existing law, the Senate bill, and the proposed substitute for the bill.

Also, I submit a table showing the surtaxes upon individual incomes at the steps provided in the substitute and an estimate of the revenue it would raise, compared with the estimated revenue from individual incomes under the rates of the bill reported from the committee. I ask that the tables be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Comparison of income taxes upon specified incomes under the existing law, the Senate bill, and the proposed substitute bill.

Income.	Existing law.		Senate bill.		Substitute bill.
	Amount.	Rate.	Amount.	Rate.	Amount.	Rate.
		Per cent.		Per cent.		Per cent.
$2,500	$10	0.40	$30	1.20	$10	0.40
$3,000	20	.67	60	2.00	20	.67
$3,500	30	.86	90	2.57	30	.86
$4,000	40	1.00	120	3.00	40	1.00
$4,500	60	1.33	120	3.33	50	1.11
$5,000	80	1.60	150	3.60	60	1.20
$5,500	105	1.91	215	3.91	95	1.73
$6,000	130	2.16	250	4.16	130	2.17
$6,500	155	2.38	320	4.92	165	2.51
$7,000	180	2.57	390	5.57	200	2.86
$7,500	205	2.73	460	6.13	235	3.13
$8,000	235	2.93	530	6.63	285	3.55
$8,500	265	3.12	605	7.12	335	3.94
$9,000	295	3.23	680	7.71	385	4.28
$9,500	325	3.42	755	7.95	435	4.58
$10,000	355	3.55	830	8.30	485	4.85
$12,500	530	4.24	1,235	9.88	860	6.88
$15,000	730	4.87	1,670	11.13	1,235	8.23
$20,000	1,880	5.90	2,630	12.15	2,335	11.67
$25,000	1,780	7.12	3,720	14.80	3,935	15.74
$30,000	2,330	7.93	4,930	16.43	6,235	20.95
$35,000	2,980	8.51	6,270	17.91	8,635	24.67
$40,000	3,580	8.95	7,730	19.33	10,985	27.46
$45,000	4,330	9.73	9,320	20.71	13,335	29.63
$50,000	5,180	10.33	11,030	22.06	15,685	31.37
$60,000	6,780	11.30	14,830	24.71	21,585	35.97
$70,000	8,880	12.69	19,130	27.33	27,485	39.23
$80,000	10,980	13.72	23,930	29.81	34,035	42.54
$100,000	16,180	16.18	35,030	35.03	48,435	48.44
$150,000	31,680	21.12	37,030	44.69	86,935	57.95
$200,000	49,180	24.59	101,030	50.52	125,435	62.72
$300,000	92,680	30.89	173,030	57.68	203,435	67.81
$500,000	192,680	38.54	323,030	64.60	361,435	72.29
$1,000,000	475,180	47.52	703,030	70.30	761,435	76.14
$5,000,000	3,146,180	62.80	3,783,030	75.66	3,961,435	79.23

Surtax rates and estimated revenue under the substitute bill.

Net income.	Taxable income.	Surtax rate.	Revenue.
		Per cent.
$5,000 to $7,500	$575,000,000	5	$33,750,000
$7,500 to $10,000	340,000,000	8	27,200,000
$10,000 to $15,000	474,000,000	13	61,620,000
$15,000 to $20,000	315,000,000	20	63,000,000
$20,000 to $25,000	225,000,000	30	67,500,000
$25,000 to $50,000	615,000,000	45	276,750,000
$50,000 to $75,000	240,000,000	57	136,800,000
$75,000 to $100,000	220,000,000	70	154,000,000
$100,000 to $200,000	394,000,000	75	295,500,000
$200,000 to $300,000	185,000,000	76	140,600,000
$300,000 to $500,000	163,000,000	77	125,510,000
Over $500,000	425,000,000	78	332,280,000
Total	7,400,000,000		1,714,510,000
Normal tax		2	70,000,000
			1,784,510,000
Estimated return under Senate bill			1,432,000,000
Increase over Senate bill			352,510,000

MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in the subject of ships and shipping and our American merchant marine. After conferring with several friends I decided to call a conference in this city of patriotic Americans who feel an interest in this subject. I have prepared this invitation, which I would like to read to the Senate, dated yesterday, and addressed to patriotic Americans interested in ships and shipping. It will take but a minute to read it.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 18, 1918.

To all patriotic Americans interested in ships and shipping:

In my capacity as a Senator from Louisiana, a State vitally interested in our merchant marine, and as a member of the Commerce Committee of the United States Senate I invite to a conference in the auditorium of the Smithsonian Institution at the Nation's Capital, January 22 and 23, 1919, representatives of every class of patriotic Americans who wish to see our shipping restored to the proud place it held 80 years ago, when 90 per cent of American commerce was carried in American ships and the Stars and Stripes floated over rich argosies of trade in every sea.

For three-quarters of a century we have had no ship policy worthy of the name. Since the world war began marked progress in legislation has been made and excellent and important work done by the United States Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation. It is essential to our welfare that this work be continued and expanded; that we build and operate ships of commerce on a scale commensurate with out greatness and the national security; and that a secretary of marine be created.

There is much wisdom in unity of counsel. Exchange of views between many wise men, representing all interests in America, gathered together in this center of the Nation's thought should result in outlining a ship policy and in supporting it by healthy public opinion under the guidance of a great voluntary patriotic association to be formed by the conference, if deemed best.

I respectfully urge each and every citizen who has real ideas on this vital subject to attend the meeting and present his suggestions. Those who expect to be present will please advise me as promptly as possible.

JOSEPH E. RANSDELL.

Mr. President, I do not intend to take the time of the Senate to discuss this subject now. At a later date I hope to do so rather fully.

CHANGE OF NAME OF STEAMER.

Mr. HARDING. I ask permission to submit a report from the Committee on Commerce. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 5102) to authorize the change of name of the steamer Charlotte Graveraet Breitung to T. K. Maher, and I submit a report (No. 626) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed, upon application of the owner, the Morrow Steamship Co., of Mentor, Lake County, Ohio, to change the name of the steamer Charlotte Graveraet Breitung, official No. 27665, to the T. K. Maher.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for the third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS FOR PEACE.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that on Saturday next, immediately after the morning business, if we have any morning business on that day, I shall address the Senate on the question of peace and the proposed league of nations. If we do not have routine morning business on Saturday, I fear I may be compelled to connect the speech with the revenue bill now pending.

AFFAIRS IN RUSSIA.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, a day or two ago the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] submitted to the Senate some remarks relative to the situation in Russia so far as the United States is concerned.

I have received many letters concerning our men in the American Army who are in Russia. I have called the attention of the Secretary of War to some of these conditions; but for the purpose of giving a little more publicity to the situation, I send to the desk a letter which I have received to-day on this subject, and I ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCLEAN in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

DETROIT, MICH., December 17, 1918.

Senator CHARLES E. TOWNSEND,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have been requested to write to you by Mrs. Charles A. Hawley, a widow, of 734 East Lawn Avenue, Detroit, Mich., regarding her son, Sergt. Harold Culver, Company A, Three hundred and thirty-ninth Infantry, American Expeditionary Force, northern Russia. She has written to him numerous times, but has never received a letter from him since he went overseas, and notwithstanding repeated efforts in various directions has been unable to learn anything about him.

She would indeed appreciate anything you can do to acquaint her with his present whereabouts and condition, if alive, or to confirm her belief that he has been killed or has died of disease.

In connection with this, although perhaps boring you with details that you have no doubt heard in many forms heretofore, I would also like to register a complaint regarding treatment of the American Expeditionary Force in northern Russia.

I have a personal acquaintance with at least a dozen families in Detroit who have boys in this force and know of a number of others with whom I have not a personal acquaintance, every one of which has, I believe, a just complaint. In the first place, this force sailed for England on July 22 and arrived there on August 4. Left England for Russia on the 25th and arrived in Archangel September 10 to 12. The first mail that this force received after leaving Camp Mills was delivered to them on October 6, which, to put it very mildly, is some delay in service, and especially so when every man no doubt was longing and wishing for letters from home. I sent two cablegrams to my son, Corpl. Howard A. Stafford, Three hundred and thirty-ninth Infantry, Machine Gun Company, American Expeditionary Forces, while he was still in England. These cablegrams did not reach him until October 6, and then by mail. Postal money orders mailed to him were two months and a few days in reaching him, and we were not allowed to send anything to him that would add to his comfort and pleasure until October 21, and not since then. Right here I would ask if it is not possible now to send small packages containing things of which he is fond and which he is unable to get in northern Russia?

I have written at least two letters to the War Department asking what bearing the armistice will have in the home-coming of this north Russian force. Also inquired if it is possible to get them out of Archangel or that vicinity during the winter, back to civilization, but have received no direct answer, the only answer of any consequence being to the effect that the peace conference in Paris would determine the future policy in Russia, but whereas we know that four months after peace treaty is signed their term of service automatically discontinues. This date of possible release is so indefinite that I would like to have it substituted by something more definite.

In connection with this, I would like to ask if the purpose of the American Expeditionary Force in northern Russia has been changed since the signing of the armistice, as I believe that the force has accomplished the object for which it was originally sent to Russia, namely, the protection of the port of Archangel from German invasion. I have before me a letter received by an officer in that north Russian American Expeditionary Force, who says that they have accomplished everything for which they originally went to Russia to accomplish.

In view of this and the unnecessary hardships those men are suffering at the present time at the front, after accomplishing their object, namely, living in small box cars, as many as 15 to a car, which car also must contain their equipment of every kind, stove, wood, ammunition, etc., and I understand that some of the organization has been at the front for two months or more, and there they are obliged to live in old log houses, or, if there are no log houses in the vicinity, they live outdoors, which in Russia at this time of year, you must admit, will probably bring them back to us, if at all, in bad condition.

I do not pretend to attempt to dictate what the Government is doing with their military forces. This handful of men in Russia, in so far as I can see, can not accomplish anything of value, and they seem to have been forgotten, and the Government evidently has no stated policy or reason for keeping them in that territory, and if you and others could but add your protest to that of Senator JOHNSON of California it might be possible to get these forsaken fellows out of that God-forsaken country. The feeling in Detroit against maintaining them longer in Russia is crystallizing and gaining in strength, as witnessed by very numerous letters of protest appearing daily in all Detroit papers, and I would ask that you use your large influence in protest against what I believe is unnecessary suffering and get this American force out of Russia as soon as possible, leaving this police duty—for it can be no more than that with so small a force—to the people to whom this work rightfully belongs, namely, European forces.

Understand, the writer is calling your attention to these things, which are creating a great deal of dissatisfaction everywhere, especially in Detroit, the home of 80 per cent of this American Expeditionary North Russian Force, knowing full well that the welfare of these Michigan boys is close to your heart and that when the extent of the feeling against maintaining this American force in Russia is brought home to you that you will thoroughly investigate the truth of what I have said and you will use your best endeavor to rectify the Government's failure to handle the situation in Russia correctly as regards the Three hundred and thirty-ninth Infantry.

With sincere thanks for what you may be able to accomplish, I am,

Yours, very truly,

D. P. STAFFORD.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its Enrolling Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4924) to amend section 336 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the annual report on the statistics of commerce and navigation of the United States with foreign countries.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11709) granting the consent of Congress to the village and township of Halstad, Norman County, Minn., and the township of Herberg, Traill County, N. Dak., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 12001) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 12001. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 13308. An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

THE REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is so late in the evening that I shall not now offer an amendment respecting the income of estates, but I shall move to perfect that section of the bill the first thing in the morning.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

COMMERCE WITH GUATEMALA.

On motion of Mr. HITCHCOCK, the following convention between the United States and Guatemala, signed December 3, 1918, was ratified and the injunction of secrecy removed therefrom:

The Senate:

I transmit herewith, to receive the advice and consent of the Senate to its ratification, a convention between the United States and Guatemala, signed December 3, 1918, for the development of commerce between them and to increase the exchange of commodities by facilitating the work of traveling salesmen.

Respectfully submitted.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, December 3, 1918.

—

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President with a view to its transmission to the Senate, if his judgment approve thereof, to receive the advice and consent of the Senate to its ratification, a convention between the United States and Guatemala, signed December 3, 1918, for the development of commerce between them and to increase the exchange of commodities by facilitating the work of traveling salesmen.

Respectfully submitted.

ROBERT LANSING.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 3, 1918.

—

The United States of America and the Republic of Guatemala, being desirous to foster the development of commerce between them and to increase the exchange of commodities by facilitating the work of traveling salesmen, have agreed to conclude a convention for that purpose and have to that end appointed as their plenipotentiaries: The President of the United States of America; Robert Lansing, Secretary of State of the United States; and the President of the Republic of Guatemala, Señor Don Joaquín Méndez, his envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the United States, who, having communicated to each other their full powers, which were found to be in due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

Manufacturers, merchants, and traders domiciled within the jurisdiction of one of the high contracting parties may operate as commercial travelers either personally or by means of agents or employees within the jurisdiction of the other high contracting party on obtaining from the latter, upon payment of a single fee, a license which shall be valid throughout its entire territorial jurisdiction.

In case either of the high contracting parties shall be engaged in war, it reserves to itself the right to prevent from operating within its jurisdiction under the provisions of this treaty, or otherwise, enemy nationals or other aliens whose presence it may consider prejudicial to public order and national safety.

ARTICLE II.

In order to secure the license above mentioned the applicant must obtain from the country of domicile of the manufacturers, merchants, and traders represented a certificate attesting his character as a commercial traveler. This certificate, which shall be issued by the authority to be designated in each country for the purpose, shall be viséed by the consul of the country in which the applicant proposes to operate, and the authorities of the latter shall, upon the presentation of such certificate, issue to the applicant the national license as provided in Article I.

ARTICLE III.

A commercial traveler may sell his samples without obtaining a special license as an importer.

ARTICLE IV.

Samples without commercial value shall be admitted to entry free of duty.

Samples marked, stamped, or defaced in such manner that they can not be put to other uses shall be considered as objects without commercial value.

ARTICLE V.

Samples having commercial value shall be provisionally admitted upon giving bond for the payment of lawful duties if they shall not have been withdrawn from the country within a period of six months.

Duties shall be paid on such portion of the samples as shall not have been so withdrawn.

ARTICLE VI.

All customs formalities shall be simplified as much as possible with a view to avoid delay in the dispatch of samples.

ARTICLE VII.

Peddlers and other salesmen who vend directly to the consumer, even though they have not an established place of business in the country in which they operate, shall not be considered as commercial travelers, but shall be subject to the license fees levied on business of the kind which they carry on.

ARTICLE VIII.

No license shall be required of—

(a) Persons traveling only to study trade and its needs, even though they initiate commercial relations, provided they do not make sales of merchandise.

(b) Persons operating through local agencies which pay the license fee or other imposts to which their business is subject.

(c) Travelers who are exclusively buyers.

ARTICLE IX.

Any concessions affecting any of the provisions of the present treaty that may hereafter be granted by either high contracting party, either by law or by treaty or convention, shall immediately be extended to the other party.

ARTICLE X.

This convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington or Guatemala within two years, or sooner if possible.

The present convention shall remain in force until the end of six months after either of the high contracting parties shall have given notice to the other of its intention to terminate the same, each of them reserving to itself the right of giving such notice to the other at any time. And it is hereby agreed between the parties that, on the expiration of six months after such notice shall have been received by either of them from the other party as above mentioned, this convention shall altogether cease and terminate.

In testimony whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed these articles and have thereunder affixed their seals.

Done in duplicate, at Washington, this 3d day of December, 1918.

RECESS.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, December 20, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nomination received by the Senate December 19 (legislative day of December 15), 1918.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

Joseph B. Eastman, of Massachusetts, to be a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission for a term expiring December 31, 1922, vice George W. Anderson, resigned.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate December 19 (legislative day of December 15), 1918.

ASSISTANT CHIEF INSPECTOR OF LOCOMOTIVE BOILERS.

John A. Shirley to be assistant chief inspector of locomotive boilers.

APPOINTMENT IN THE NAVY.

Victor Blue to be Chief of the Bureau of Navigation in the Department of the Navy, with the rank of rear admiral.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 19, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Rev. Earle Wilfley, of the Vermont Avenue Christian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou who art the giver of every good and perfect gift, from whom we take our being and to whom we must at last give account of ourselves, we pray that Thy holy word may have lodgment in our hearts to-day and Thy holy spirit attend us along the journey of life. Be with the deliberations of this day in the House, keep Thy servants in perfect peace, in clearness of mind, in strength of heart and purpose, and to Thy name shall be all the praise, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—WICKERSHAM AGAINST SULZER.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that the contested-election case of Wickersham against Sulzer will be taken up in the House on the 3d day of January.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Louisiana will notice that the 3d of January is Friday of the week in which New Year's occurs.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. And a great number of the Members will not be here.

Mr. FOSTER. They ought to be here.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; but many Members have not their families here with them, and they have gone home to spend the holidays with their families.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. I imagine that there will be a quorum here on that day.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think it would be more convenient for the membership of the House if we took it up on the Monday following.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 12945. An act providing for the purchase of uniforms, accouterments, and equipment by officers of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, and midshipmen at the Naval Academy from the Government at cost; and

H. R. 12916. An act to provide for the temporary promotion of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps serving with the Army.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to return to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, the bill (H. R. 12001) entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary,'" approved March 3, 1911.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 988. An act providing for the payment of certain interest on items 1 and 4 of the judgment of the Court of Claims of May 18, 1905, in favor of the Cherokee Nation; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

RESOLUTION BY NATIONAL ASSEMBLY OF PANAMA (H. DOC. NO. 1607).

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Acting Secretary of State, as follows, which was ordered to be printed, with accompanying documents, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 17, 1918.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose for the information of the House of Representatives a copy of a dispatch from the American minister at Panama, communicating a copy of the resolution adopted by the National Assembly of Panama on November 11 last felicitating the Government of the United States and the Governments of the allies on the signature of the armistice on November 11, 1918.

I have the honor to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

FRANK L. POLK,
Acting Secretary of State.

AMENDING THE LAW RELATING TO STATISTICS OF COMMERCE AND NAVIGATION.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4924) to substitute the calendar year for the fiscal year for statistical reports from the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in the Department of Commerce. The bill has passed the Senate, and if passed now the department can put the new year in force on the 1st day of January. The committee has had a hearing and feels satisfied that it is legislation that ought to be enacted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 4924, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 4924) to amend section 336 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the annual report on the statistics of commerce and navigation of the United States with foreign countries.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 336 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the word "fiscal" immediately preceding the word "year" at the end of the first sentence of said section and by inserting in lieu thereof the word "calendar."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the bill does not give us very much information, and I think the gentleman from Tennessee should give us some statement as to the real purpose of the bill.

Mr. SIMS. The report is very short, although we had a full hearing in the committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that before the objection is waived that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. SIMS), as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4924) to amend section 336 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the annual report on the statistics of commerce and navigation of the United States with foreign countries, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

The following is the report of the Senate Committee on Commerce on this bill:

"The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4924) to amend section 336 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the annual report on the statistics of commerce and navigation of the United States with foreign countries, having considered the same, report favorably thereon with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

"The bill has been referred to the Secretary of Commerce, and his report thereon (together with communications from the chairman of the United States Shipping Board and the War Industries Board with reference to H. R. 11848, on the same subject) is as follows:

"DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
"OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
"Washington, September 19, 1918.

"MY DEAR SENATOR: In response to your communication of September 14, requesting for your committee suggestions touching the merits of S. 4924 and the propriety of its passage, I take pleasure in advising you as follows:

"From time to time it has been proposed that the annual official report on the statistics of foreign trade of the United States which, as provided in paragraph 1 of section 336 of the Revised Statutes, is now required to be issued to the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, be changed to cover the period to the close of the calendar year.

"At the time when this law was passed these statistics were compiled and published principally for the information and guidance of the Government particularly as a guide for legislation. In later years the use of foreign-trade statistics by industrial and commercial organizations has been rapidly increasing, and as their business year is more largely than any other the calendar year they find it inconvenient not to be able to procure official statistics of our foreign trade of calendar years.

"The chief value of trade statistics lies in their comparability with statistics of production and with trade statistics of other countries. Practically all the statistics of production, both agricultural and industrial, that are compiled and published by the executive departments of this Government, as well as of other governments, relate to the calendar year, as, for instance, the statistics of manufacture, etc., compiled by the Bureau of the Census of this department, the statistics of mineral production compiled by the Geological Survey, and the statistics of agricultural production and estimates compiled and published by the Department of Agriculture. The United States is the only important country in the world which publishes its foreign-trade statistics for the fiscal year rather than for the calendar year, the only other countries being Mexico, Turkey, Persia, Honduras, and Haiti, and the following British colonial possessions: Canada, Australia, and India.

"The change proposed in the pending bills has been recommended by a special statistical committee appointed by the Department of the Treasury and the Department of Commerce as well as by a special statistical committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. Moreover, at the present time the Shipping Board, the War Trade Board, and the War Industries Board, which boards are making very valuable use of our statistics in connection with the Government's control of trade and industry, and particularly the Shipping Board in its efforts to conserve tonnage for military use, are all very anxious to have these statistics issued for the calendar instead of for the fiscal year. For this reason the proposed legislation may be looked upon as a war-time measure, the speedy enactment of which will be of considerable assistance in the fulfillment of our military program.

"I am taking the liberty of sending with this letter a copy of the latest issue of Commerce and Navigation of the United States, being the report authorized by section 336 of the Revised Statutes and which it is now desired to have relate to the calendar rather than the fiscal year. Should you desire additional copies of this report for any or all of the members of your committee, they will be gladly furnished on request.

"Very truly, yours,
"WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
"Secretary.

"Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
"United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

"UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD.
"Washington, September 19, 1918.

"Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
"Chairman Senate Committee on Commerce.
"United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

"MY DEAR SENATOR FLETCHER: My attention has been called to a bill now pending in the House (H. R. 11848) providing for the compilation of foreign-trade statistics, published by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce, by the calendar year rather than the fiscal year.

"Inasmuch as statistics are valuable to the extent that they may be used in reference to future action, and inasmuch as such value is greatly enhanced if statistics are readily comparable with other statistics of a like nature, it seems to me highly desirable that the foreign-trade statistics of the Department of Commerce should be brought in line with the statistics gathered by the Bureau of the Census, Geological Survey, Bureau of Mines, and trade statistics of most of the foreign countries. All these statistics are published for the calendar year. I feel confident that this legislation will find ready acceptance in your committee, but write to you in view of my personal interest in foreign-trade matters.

"With kindest regards, I am,
"Yours, very truly,

EDWARD N. HURLEY,
"Chairman."

"WAR INDUSTRIES BOARD,
"Washington, September 20, 1918.

"Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
"Chairman Senate Committee on Commerce,
"United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

"MY DEAR SENATOR: The bill H. R. 11848 authorizing a change from the fiscal to the calendar year in the compilation of foreign-trade statistics in the annual report of the commerce and navigation of the United States, as published by the Department of Commerce, would, in my opinion, effect a valuable aid to American business and statistical organizations. Because of that I should like to see the proposed legislation enacted.

"Very respectfully, "B. M. BARUCH."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to make an inquiry of some gentleman to explain the bill, whether it be the gentleman from Tennessee or the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SIMS. I would be glad to have the gentleman from Wisconsin answer the question, as he is very familiar with the facts.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does this pertain to the matter included in the monthly reports called the Reports of Commerce and Navigation, which are subsequently bound in the annual report?

Mr. ESCH. It covers that, although they get out an annual report.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does this apply simply to the annual report? I ask for this reason: The committees that are making up the bills, especially the Ways and Means Committee, need the report that corresponds to the fiscal year, with reference to the amount of imports and exports, especially imports, in order that we may know how much tariff dues to lay for the fiscal year. We ought to have some report of the fiscal year. If we do not we will have to do a large amount of work ourselves to sift it out of the report for the calendar year.

Mr. ESCH. I understand from the officials of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce that they would make out a report for six months, and also the annual report. They would make out some annual reports which would give the committee the information the gentleman seeks.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And we will still receive the monthly reports?

Mr. ESCH. Yes. The object is to harmonize the foreign statistics as to exports and imports with the statistics we are gathering in other fields. The agricultural statistics are for the calendar year, and the statistics of the Geological Survey as to minerals are annual. Up to 1916 the Interstate Commerce Commission gathered the statistics of railroads for the fiscal year, but in the latter part of 1915 they issued an order making these reports based on the calendar year. So that these three great statistical bureaus are all on the calendar-year basis. We are trying to put the foreign and domestic commerce statistics on the same basis, to correspond likewise with the statistics furnished by all the great commercial nations of the world, and it ought to be done at once, so that the department can begin on the 1st of January.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, one further statement which the gentleman from Wisconsin did not refer to: It was testified before our committee that under the present plan of making reports business men and corporations were continually calling for reports with reference to foreign trade, and as these were made up at the end of the fiscal year there was some difficulty, requiring much more time to get up reports for the calendar year to comply with the special inquiries made. If this bill was passed it would save a great deal of work for the bureau that they now have to do in order to supply people with the statistical information that they request on the calendar-year basis.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. I note that the report urged as a reason for the passage of this legislation that it was a war measure.

Mr. SIMS. That was the statement before the Senate committee.

Mr. NORTON. And the argument for its passage was that it was a war measure. In what way does the chairman of the committee hold that this particular legislation is a war measure, needed to carry on the war?

Mr. SIMS. That statement was made by the Secretary to the Senate committee, in his letter to the Senate committee.

Mr. NORTON. I call attention to that for the reason that I think that statement is ridiculous. It seems to me this legislation is meritorious, from a business point of view. There is a real need for it, but it has nothing to do with the war.

Mr. SIMS. We are not asking for the bill on that account.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman's suggestion, that letter was written before the signing of the armistice, and prior to that date the War Industries Board and the War Trade Board made numerous demands on the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce for statistics, and the information given was important to these two war boards. That is possibly why in that letter it was referred to as a quasi war-time measure.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to make an inquiry. What has this to do with the war?

Mr. SIMS. The war now?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Nothing that I know of.

Mr. MANN. I notice that the principal reason why the Secretary of Commerce asks for the enactment of this legislation is contained in this sentence:

For this reason the proposed legislation may be looked upon as a war-time measure, the speedy enactment of which will be of considerable assistance in the fulfillment of our military program.

Is it not about time that the various departments of the Government asking for legislation by Congress should quit trying to impose upon Congress the idea that legislation in no wise connected with the war is desired to further the interests of the military program?

Mr. SIMS. There was nothing before our committee to that effect.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; this was before the committee, and it was just read from the Clerk's desk at the gentleman's request as a part of the report of the committee, and it was the only thing practically that the committee had before it.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, no. We had hearings, and officials from the Department of Commerce were there, and they did not even refer to the war.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time and was read the third time and passed.

On motions of Mr. SIMS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Chair to lay before the House the bill (H. R. 11709) granting the consent of Congress to the village and township of Halstad, Norman County, Minn., and the township of Herbert, Traill County, N. Dak., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States. It is a House bill with Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the bill H. R. 11709, a House bill with Senate amendments, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

AMERICAN COMMITTEE FOR RELIEF IN THE NEAR EAST.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from further consideration of the bill (S. 4785) to incorporate the American Committee for Relief in the Near East, and that the same be considered at this time.

Mr. MANN. Where is the Senate bill now?

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is before the Committee on the Judiciary. A similar House bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from further consideration of Senate bill 4785, and that the same be taken up for consideration at this time. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following persons, namely, James L. Barton, Samuel T. Dutton, Cleveland H. Dodge, Henry Morgenthau, Edwin M. Bulkley, Alexander J. Hemphill, Charles R. Crane, William Howard Taft, Charles Evans Hughes, Elihu Root, Harry Pratt Judson, Charles E. Beury, Arthur J. Brown, John B. Calvert, William I. Chamberlain, William T. Ellis, James Cardinal Gibbons, Jerome D. Greene, David H. Greer, Harold A. Hatch, William I. Haven, Myron T. Herrick, Hamilton Holt, Frank W. Jackson, Arthur Curtiss James, Frederick Lynch, Vance C. McCormick, Charles S. Macfarland, Henry B. F. Macfarland, William B. Millar, John R. Mott, Frank Mason North, George A. Plimpton, Philip Rhinelander, William Jay Schieffelin, George T. Scott, Albert Shaw, William Sloane, Edward Lincoln Smith, Robert Eliot Speer, James M. Speers, Oscar S. Straus, Charles V. Vickrey, Harry A. Wheeler, Stanley White, Ray Lyman Wilbur, Talcott Williams, and Stephen S. Wise, their associates and successors duly chosen, are hereby incorporated and declared to be a body corporate of the District of Columbia

by the name of the American Committee for Relief in the Near East and by that name shall be known and have perpetual succession, with the powers, limitations, and restrictions herein contained.

SEC. 2. That the object for which said corporation is incorporated shall be to provide relief and to assist in the repatriation, rehabilitation, and reestablishment of suffering and dependent people of the Near East and adjacent areas; to provide for the care of orphans and widows, and to conduct any industrial enterprises or operations of a philanthropic character which may, in the judgment of the corporation, be necessary to promote the social, economic, and industrial welfare of those who have been rendered destitute, or dependent directly or indirectly, by the vicissitudes of war, the cruelties of men, or other causes beyond their control.

SEC. 3. That the direction and management of the affairs of the corporation, and the control of its property and funds, shall be vested in a board of trustees, to be composed of the following individuals: James L. Barton, Samuel T. Dutton, Cleveland H. Dodge, Henry Morgenthau, Edwin M. Bulkley, Alexander J. Hemphill, Charles R. Crane, William Howard Taft, Charles Evans Hughes, Elihu Root, Harry Pratt Judson, Charles E. Beury, Arthur J. Brown, John B. Calvert, William I. Chamberlain, William T. Ellis, James Cardinal Gibbons, Jerome D. Greene, David H. Greer, Harold A. Hatch, William J. Haven, Myron T. Herrick, Hamilton Holt, Frank W. Jackson, Arthur Curtiss James, Frederick Lynch, Vance C. McCormick, Charles S. Macfarland, Henry B. F. Macfarland, William B. Millar, John R. Mott, Frank Mason North, George A. Plimpton, Philip Rhinelander, William Jay Schieffelin, George T. Scott, Albert Shaw, William Sloane, Edward Lincoln Smith, Robert Eliot Speer, James M. Speers, Oscar S. Straus, Charles V. Vickrey, Harry A. Wheeler, Stanley White, Ray Lyman Wilbur, Talcott Williams, and Stephen S. Wise, who shall constitute the first board of trustees and constitute the members of the corporation. Vacancies occurring by death, resignation, or otherwise shall be filled by the remaining trustees in such manner as the by-laws shall prescribe, and the persons so elected shall thereupon become trustees and also members of the corporation.

SEC. 4. That the principal office of the corporation shall be located in the District of Columbia, but offices may be maintained and meetings of the corporation or of the trustees and committees may be held in other places, such as the by-laws may from time to time fix.

SEC. 5. That the said trustees shall be entitled to take, hold, and administer any securities, funds, or property which may be transferred to them for the purposes and objects hereinbefore enumerated by the existing and unincorporated American Committee for Armenian and Syrian Relief, and such other funds or property as may at any time be given, devised, or bequeathed to them, or to such corporation, for the purposes of the trust; with full power from time to time to adopt a common seal, to appoint officers, whether members of the board of trustees or otherwise, and such employees as may be deemed necessary for carrying on the business of the corporation, and at such salaries or with such remuneration as they may think proper; and full power to adopt by-laws and such rules or regulations as may be necessary to secure the safe and convenient transaction of the business of the corporation.

SEC. 6. That as soon as may be possible after the passage of this act a meeting of the trustees hereinbefore named shall be called by Samuel T. Dutton, Cleveland H. Dodge, Henry Morgenthau, Edwin M. Bulkley, Alexander J. Hemphill, William B. Millar, George R. Scott, James L. Barton, and Charles V. Vickrey, or any six of them, at the Borough of Manhattan, in the city of New York, by notice served in person or by mail, addressed to each trustee at his place of residence; and the said trustees named herein, or a majority thereof, being assembled, shall organize and proceed to adopt by-laws, to elect officers, and generally to organize the said corporation.

SEC. 7. That Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman from Virginia will make some explanation of the bill.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I should be very glad to make an explanation, if it is desired. I do not want to consume the time of the House, for I know this day has been set apart for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. If this charity is to be effective, however, the bill must be very speedily passed. Ten days at least must elapse before the bill can become operative after its passage.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This makes this a corporation of the District of Columbia, does it?

Mr. MONTAGUE. It makes it a national corporation, in my opinion.

Mr. TOWNER. It makes it a corporation of the District of Columbia by the terms of the bill.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Technically, it is a corporation with head offices in the District of Columbia.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, the important matter is that it should be incorporated by the Congress of the United States. It effects almost the consolidation of existing societies, because of the importunate nature of the relief work. About 4,000,000 of these Syrians and Armenians have been driven from their homes and are refugees only, without clothes and without food, dying every day.

The importunate nature of this is to gather together and unify this relief work. This organization of men embraces leading men who have been interested in this relief work, and is to unify it and place it under one control. That, of course, is the object of the bill. It passed the Senate unanimously the other day, and it has been favorably reported by the committee here.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Now, there is some language in section 2——

Mr. MONTAGUE. I would say to the gentleman, supplementing what the gentleman from Iowa has said, that the temper and mind of the peoples in the Near East with whom this fund will have to be distributed is such that unless you have some governmental impress upon the organization itself its object can not be effectively secured. It is proposed to raise a very large sum by voluntary contributions, to be administered by this corporation for the relief of the distressed people of Armenia, of Syria, and the other sections of the country formerly under the Ottoman domination. I may say that perhaps no distress and suffering ever equaled the distress and suffering that this bill attempts to meet, and the immediate necessity alone justifies me in asking its present consideration by the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I desire to call my friend's attention to the language in section 2, in which there is enumerated the object or objects, "and to conduct any industrial enterprises," that is in lines 18 and 19.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the getleman will read the residue of the sentence, he will see it says, "and to conduct any industrial enterprises or operations of a philanthropic character." That is, the operations of the industrial enterprise must be of a philanthropic character. There may be technical and mechanical training schools, for example.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman says there may be technical schools there. May I ask where?

Mr. MONTAGUE. In Armenia or Syria, Asia Minor.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is not expected they will operate in this country?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Not at all. The entire administration of this philanthropy is to be in what is generally called the Near East; that is, in Syria, Asia Minor, and contiguous country.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Now, may I ask my friend from Virginia just why it is necessary to have a special act? Why can not this be incorporated under the general laws of the District of Columbia?

Mr. MONTAGUE. For the reason suggested by the gentleman from Iowa awhile ago; that is, unless the people in the Near East believe that the Federal Government in some way has given its impress to this philanthropic undertaking it will not meet with the success that is desired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman if this bill or a similar bill is now pending before the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. MONTAGUE. This bill was presented by me some months since, and the next day, upon looking at the calendar, I found the bill had been referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. I thought it should have been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, in my ignorance. The Committee on the District of Columbia, however, reported it out unanimously, so I was informed by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, the chairman of the committee. In the past few days a similar bill has passed the Senate unanimously, being reported by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. That bill came to this body and was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Therefore I made the request a few moments since for unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary should be discharged from the further consideration of the Senate bill, and that that bill should be taken up and considered in lieu of the House bill heretofore reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia. That is the parliamentary status, as I understand it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question, just for a moment?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is this money to be collected by this proposed organization to be handled in the same way as that of the Armenian Relief Committee, who heretofore handled contributions sent to them without overhead charges or expense for transmission, and so forth?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am very glad the gentleman has asked that question, and I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee and the other Members of the House, because it is an important inquiry. Millions of dollars have been solicited and much already sent to these suffering people and not one cent of overhead charge has been incurred in connection with the distribution or the administration of that fund, and the hope of the incorporators is to do the work without any overhead charge. It is a piece of clean charity from beginning to end. It is simply asked that the organization may have the imprimatur of the Government itself to facilitate its banking operations or its contact with the Governments of that country, to give the organization a standing greater than a mere voluntary or a private organization could obtain.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will.

Mr. LONDON. Does the expression "Near East" have a definite legal meaning?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think not. I think it has a historic meaning which is better understood by the gentleman than by myself.

Mr. LONDON. Would it not be better to define it in the law?

Mr. MONTAGUE. It says the "Near East and adjacent areas" and specifically contemplates Syria and Armenia, does it not? I think that is ample geographically and governmentally. The trouble is if this bill is amended now it will have to go back to the Senate, and what we desire to do is to get immediate relief to these poor, starving people.

Mr. LONDON. Does the gentleman believe the slightest amendment would defeat the bill now?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I do not think it would defeat the bill, but it would delay the bill, because it would have to go back to the Senate.

Mr. LONDON. Of course, the expression "Near East" has a definite historical meaning and is used in historical works. The question is whether the courts will take judicial notice of the meaning of that expression.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Well, I do not know what the courts would hold. I will say to the gentleman that I think the term "Near East," if I am not mistaken, has, as the gentleman says, a definite historical meaning, and it was put in this bill by the suggestion of those who have given very largely to this charity, and I have no doubt they had quite a satisfactory idea of what is meant by the terms "Near East" and "adjacent areas."

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will.

Mr. EMERSON. How were these names suggested?

Mr. MONTAGUE. These names were suggested originally by this very committee, or some gentleman of this committee, as I understand. It was a voluntary committee, and perhaps enlarged by these names contained in the bill.

Mr. EMERSON. All the interests have been consulted in connection with this?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understand from my correspondence with the secretary that this bill is the unanimous wish of all of these incorporators—very eminent incorporators, as the gentleman will observe.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will say to the gentleman from Virginia that this day was set aside especially for the Private Calendar, and with the understanding that he would let this bill go over if discussion arose and it was found that time would be required to pass it. I think if it requires discussion and time he ought to let it go over until the Private Calendar is disposed of.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I assure the gentleman that I am not desirous of discussion.

Mr. ALMON. With the understanding that you will let it go over if time is required——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this bill, as I understand, was introduced by the gentleman from Virginia in the House on the 1st of July, 1918. It was referred, possibly inadvertently, to the Committee on the District of Columbia, the only connection which one can see being the fact that it is supposed to be incorporated in the District of Columbia. The real object of such a bill as this is to obtain what they call the "prestige" of having the United States of America back it as an incorporation. The bill has never had any action in the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, notwithstanding that it is now there. The Senate bill is sought to be substituted, without consideration or amendment, and the Senate bill is now, so I am informed as to the parliamentary status, in the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives.

It seems to me there may be a number of things in this bill in the matter of the perfection of the details, as suggested in this debate, in the matter of seeing to whom this relief does go, in the matter of consideration of the great scope of section 2, which provides for the conduct of industrial enterprises and of operations of a philanthropic character, and proceedings necessary to promote the economic welfare, and such things of that kind—and I assuredly have no objection to the accomplishment of these very worthy objects—but I have an objection to the incorporation without consideration of bodies of men calling themselves different associations, seeking to become incorporated in the District of Columbia for a national purpose, and it certainly is most unwise to make an incorporation even of this admittedly excellent character unless it can be passed upon by the proper committee, unless certain amendments or suggestions can be considered after hearings, unless the membership of the House can be advised rightly, because it is not a right thing to incorporate and to give the great benefit of national incorporation to any society unless we know the exact meaning of what is sought to be accomplished and see whether these meanings coincide with our power to afford national incorporation. It seems to me we ought not peremptorily set aside action and discharge a committee which has never had opportunity to give consideration to a bill and take up a Senate bill that we know little of. This proposed relief has been and can be afforded without this bill. And under the circumstances, therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am constrained to object until the proper committee has opportunity to consider it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects, and the gentleman from Mississippi is recognized.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I believe it is understood that we call the bills as they appear on the Private Calendar.

Mr. MANN. You have to move to go into the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KITCHIN. I was going to make a unanimous-consent request. I ask unanimous consent that all bills on the Private Calendar be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. I will say to the gentleman that that is wholly impracticable.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. KITCHIN. I thought we could save time.

Mr. MANN. The bills are called only by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Post Office appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD on the Post Office appropriation bill. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. KITCHIN. Then we will have to make a motion on each bill.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. The only motion to make is to go into the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KITCHIN. I move, Mr. Speaker, that we go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider bills on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, with Mr. GARD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of consideration of bills on the Private Calendar. The Clerk will report the first bill.

STEAMSHIP "CALDERA."

The first bill in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4988) to authorize the changing of the name of the steamship Caldera.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice and take its position at the foot of the calendar. The reason for my making that request, I believe, though I have not had time to confirm it, is that there is a Senate bill of identic character that was passed some months ago. Otherwise I would move to lay the bill on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin that this bill be passed without prejudice and go to the foot of the calendar?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, why not let it take its place? It is not being objected to. Why not leave it where it is and pass it over temporarily?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to that, Mr. Chairman. If there is any member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries in the Chamber, I would be glad if he would give us information on this bill. I believe that a Senate bill of identical character was passed in the summer session. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin by unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

DAVID L. BRAINARD.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 979) for the promotion and retirement of Col. David L. Brainard, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army.

The title of the bill was read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, we are not considering bills under reservation of objection. We are considering all the bills on the Calendar in their order. This bill is on the Calendar, and has been called, and is entitled to consideration. I rise to ask recognition from the Chair.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], who is familiar with this bill, is here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] asks recognition of the Chair?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was under the impression, Mr. Chairman—and that impression is confirmed by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]—that the purpose of this bill was incorporated in the Army appropriation bill. I therefore move that the bill be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it lie upon the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that this bill (S. 979) be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

STEAMSHIP "CALDERA."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, my attention has been called, since the first bill was brought up for consideration, to the calendar, which shows that Senate bill 2469, now public law 118, authorizing the change of the name of the steamship Caldera, has passed both bodies and is now a law. I now ask that the House bill 4988 be called up formally so that I may make a motion to have it reported back to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to call up the bill H. R. 4988. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. I move, Mr. Chairman, that the bill H. R. 4988 be laid aside with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that the bill (H. R. 4988) to authorize the changing of the name of the steamship Caldera be laid aside with the recommendation that it lie on the table. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

MARY NEAF.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7715) for the relief of Mary Neaf.

The title of the bill was read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Mary Neaf, mother of Richard Neaf, who served under the name of John Ryan as a private in the One hundred and sixty-seventh Company, Coast Artillery Corps, shall be considered as the duly designated beneficiary of the late Richard Neaf, alias John Ryan, under the act approved May 11, 1908, as amended by the act approved March 3, 1909.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move, if some member of the committee does not wish so to move, that this bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation that it do pass. I beg the pardon of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE]. The gentleman can make the motion.

Mr. IGOE. Never mind. Go ahead.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves that the bill (H. R. 7715) for the relief of Mary Neaf be laid aside with the recommendation that it do pass. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Private Calendar.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW NATIONS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 329) referring certain claims against the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Court of Claims.

The title of the bill was read,

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, the bill just read by title was incorporated as an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill last year. For that reason I move that the bill be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma moves that the bill H. R. 329 be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it lie on the table. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

HARRIET FISHER.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 855) for the relief of Harriet Fisher.

The title of the bill was read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to issue a patent to Harriet Fisher, of St. Louis, Mo., for the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 28, in township 17 south, range 7 west, of the fifth principal meridian in Arkansas: Provided, That she shall file application for the land and pay therefor at the rate of $1.25 per acre within six months after the approval of this act.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I assume that there will be no opposition to the passage of this measure.

In 1861 a certain military land warrant was issued and it was sought to be located on a particular 40 acres of land in the State of Arkansas, and described in the bill. A mistake was made in the location of the land and the location was canceled. Later another effort was made to locate this particular land warrant, which was located on different land from the tract in question. For the past 50 years this tract of 40 acres has been occupied and thought to be owned by different individuals. Finally this St. Louis woman, Mrs. Harriet Fisher, acquired the land through purchase in good faith for a valuable consideration. It developed that the tract had never been patented. During all these years the taxes assessed against the property have been paid. The title was thought to be good, and now this party simply asks the privilege of entering it at the prevailing price of $1.25 an acre.

I move, Mr. Chairman, that the bill be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it be passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas moves that the bill H. R. 855 be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it be passed. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Private Calendar.

ALEXANDER F. M'COLLAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1423) for the relief of Alexander F. McCollam.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent to Alexander F. McCollam, of Yankee Jims, Placer County, Cal., for the lands described in homestead entry No. 07349, Sacramento series, being homestead-entry survey No. 147, in section 28, township 14 north, range 10 east, Mount Diablo Meridian, in Sacramento land district, in Placer County, Cal., and containing 1$\frac{5}{8}$ acres, according to official plat of homestead-entry survey No. 147, in the Tahoe National Forest made July 19, 1915.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, this bill passed the House and went to the Senate during the last days of the last Congress, and like many other bills did not get through the Senate. The committee has again unanimously reported it to the House, and I move it be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I know from observation in the past that the gentleman from California can make himself heard, but we could not hear what he said at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman ask that the gentleman from California repeat his statement?

Mr. MANN. I could not ask that he repeat it, but I ask the gentleman to explain the bill so that we may know something about it.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I would be pleased to make a statement. The purpose of the bill is to have a patent issued to the present owner, Alexander F. McCollam, so far as the records are concerned of the probate court in Placer County. Originally Henry Eckhoff made application for a homestead. It was land segregated in a forest reserve set apart for town purposes. People were allowed to make homestead entries on the land. Eckhoff made a homestead entry, inclosed it, and thereafter died before patent could issue. The probate proceedings were taken in the court of Placer County before Judge Prewett, the necessary proceedings were had at the sale, and McCollam purchased the property and a deed was issued to him.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the regulations of the Land Office is it necessary for the purchaser at an administration sale of the rights of the deceased intestate to public lands to also prove that he himself is qualified as an entryman and entitled to a patent?

Mr. RAKER. It might be if it was an ordinary homestead of 160 or 320 acres; but this is a small tract of a forest reserve that these people were allowed to homestead. The gentleman will notice that this only comprises 1.16 acres of land—a town lot.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has not answered my question. The gentleman is on the Public Land Committee, and, I suppose, is well acquainted with the laws as to the rights of purchasers of the claims of deceased homesteaders.

Mr. RAKER. If a man makes a purchase at a valid sale he does not have to prove his qualifications as a homestead claimant, if all the proceedings are under the land laws. But in this particular instance, being a town lot, fenced, and a nice little home on the place, they do not require the purchaser to show his qualifications as a homestead claimant. In other words, the ordinary course would be to make final proof and get a patent for the heirs. There were no heirs. The effort was made, and the court allowed the proceedings to go through the probate court, and McCollam purchased at an administrative sale, paid his money, and then his only course by which he could obtain the title to the land was to make a proper showing to the Land Office, which he has done, and they recommended that the patent be issued for this small tract of land.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not believe the department has gone quite as far as the gentleman says in recommending that a patent be issued to the purchaser of the rights of the deceased claimant.

Mr. RAKER. They have said that they would make no objections.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am a little in doubt as to whether the purchaser would not have to qualify to show that he was a qualified entryman in order to entitle him to a patent.

Mr. RAKER. No; if he applied to the Land Office and got a patent issued to him directly, not as an heir of the original applicant, he might have to do it; but there are no provisions in the law whereby you can sell the rights of a homestead claimant at an administrative sale and get a patent, and therefore it requires this kind of legislation.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. As a matter of fact, the estate of this man Eckhoff had no interest in this land whatever under existing law.

Mr. RAKER. Except as a homestead claimant.

Mr. NORTON. That is no interest at all. You are trying to have enacted law which would give McCollam this land, whereas under any claim of right that he makes as having a right from Eckhoff does not exist. The gentleman is asking Congress to give him pure new legislation, to give him this land and put it under the guise that Eckhoff at one time had a claim on the land. That is it in substance.

Mr. RAKER. I beg the gentleman's pardon, there is no assumption about it. The probate court assumed jurisdiction and wound up the estate. Administration was completely had and the court authorized the sale by giving public notice, which was given. They authorized the sale of 1.16 acres, and at the executive sale Mr. McCollam bought and paid the money and got his deed. Eckhoff had no heirs that they have been able to find. Mr. McCollam has paid the money and the Department of Agriculture has received it, and the Secretary of the Interior says that this is the only method by which a man can obtain title to what he has bought and paid for. We have taken this method to do it.

Mr. NORTON. You would have exactly a similar case if a man had last year taken up 640 acres in North Dakota, settled on it, and a few days after settling had died, and I had gone out there, had his estate probated, and had included in the estate the 640 acres and made a purchase of it, when under the law I knew that that land would not descend to his estate at all.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, yes.

Mr. NORTON. And the administration of the estate, including that land, was a mere fiction.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. Under any homestead filing properly complied with the widow, if any, and the minor children, if any, or the representatives, may make final proof on the homestead and get a patent. I have seen it done many times.

Mr. NORTON. So have I; but in this case there is no widow and no children.

Mr. RAKER. In this case it is only a town-lot site set aside in a forest reserve as part of the town, where the man had been living on it, and they called them homesteads, and the man got his filing for this 1.16 acres, built a nice home. and then died, and the probate court administered upon it, and McCollam purchased it at the sale. This is the only method by which he can get the title.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Assuming the probate proceedings were entirely regular, did not McCollam take only such title as Eckhoff actually possessed, and he possibly bought the property in at the administrators' sale at a price somewhat below what the property would be worth if the title was known to be absolutely settled?

Mr. RAKER. No; I think not. I understood from what I gathered, which is not in the record, that it was offered at public sale, and he paid a fair price. Just what amount he paid I do not remember.

Mr HAMILTON of Michigan. Of course, he bought the property with his eyes wide open, knowing what he was getting.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, surely; but the judge who administered upon the case is one of the ablest men in California, and ordinarily people have great confidence in a proceeding before a judge of that kind. The judge assumed jurisdiction and completed the administration. Here is a little home, and the man assumed that he would eventually get the title. He finds now that the strict legal title is in the Government. The equitable title to the fence and in the house was in McCollam, beyond question. He asks Congress to allow the Secretary of the Interior to issue him a patent for this land, and the Department of the Interior as well as the Department of Agriculture accede to that; they think it ought to be done.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Of course, the gentleman understands that I am not questioning the legal ability of the court.

Mr. RAKER. I appreciate the importance of the gentleman's question.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman states that Eckhoff built a nice home on this land.

Mr. RAKER. He did.

Mr. NORTON. And lived there—settled there.

Mr. RAKER. He did.

Mr. NORTON. He resided there for some time?

Mr. RAKER. He resided there for some time and then died.

Mr. NORTON. How much was this home worth?

Mr. RAKER. I do not remember now just what it is worth.

Mr. NORTON. I notice that McCollam paid $75 for it.

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. NORTON. It must have been a very fine home.

Mr. RAKER. I have seen many homes on this land we are trying to legislate about, for homesteaders, for $50 or $75.

Mr. NORTON. What is the land worth per acre?

Mr. RAKER. At this particular place?

Mr. NORTON. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, it is a little town in the mountains.

Mr. NORTON. As a matter of fact, of course, under the law I know, and I think the gentleman knows——

Mr. RAKER. I said that the strict legal title is in the Government.

Mr. NORTON. It is just passing legislation here to give him a piece of Government land which he can acquire in another way.

Mr. RAKER. No, he can not.

Mr. NORTON. Can he not make entry on this land now?

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. NORTON. Why not.

Mr. RAKER. It would not be practical to use his homestead rights on an acre of town lots that he thought he was getting title to. It is too small to take the time of the House.

Mr. NORTON. Another way in which he would acquire it, instead of coming here to Congress and taking the time of Congress and incurring an expense of several hundred dollars on the part of Congress, would be to buy scrip and scrip it.

Mr. RAKER. No; that kind of land is not subject to scrip.

Mr. NORTON. Santa Fe scrip.

Mr. RAKER. No; you can not scrip on an acre and sixteen one-hundredths of an acre.

Mr. NORTON. I do not want to dispute the gentleman, but I do not know of any land that can not be scripped.

Mr. RAKER. There have been too many thousands of acres scripped in my district, taken from the Santa Fe, and you can not do it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was rather surprised at the gentleman's statement of the law that it was not necessary for the purchaser to qualify himself as an entryman in order to entitle him to succeed to the rights of the deceased intestate. I direct the gentleman's attention to the language of the Secretary of the Interior on that subject on page 4 of the report. That is the reason that I inquired as to the law and regulations governing that phase of the subject. In the last paragraph but one from the end the Secretary writes:

No evidence has been submitted tending to show whether or not Alexander F. McCollam possesses the requisite homestead qualifications necessary to the entry by him of public lands under the homestead laws.

I take it from that statement that the department would decline to recognize any person as purchaser of the rights of a homestead entryman unless he could qualify as a homestead entryman.

Mr. RAKER. Not in a case of this kind. I feel quite sure of the point because of the peculiar status of those town-site lots. It is divided up in blocks or lots, and these people were permitted to take these pieces each one was living on and call it his home, and in a way they called it a homestead.

Mr. STAFFORD. They had to qualify to take those pieces of land under the homestead law?

I do not believe the intent of the homestead law would cover that case. Unquestionably, in my mind, from reading the Secretary's letter, it does technically require that a person must be a qualified entryman.

Mr. RAKER. Ordinarily I think there is no doubt about that. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

DAVID E. GRAY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1607) for the relief of David E. Gray.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of David E. Gray, postmaster at Greeley, Colo., in the sum of $10,088.09, due to the United States on account of postage stamps and other stamped paper on account of losses resulting from burglary of said post office on July 1, 1911.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, unless some explanation is asked of this bill I would like to move that it be reported back to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the bill carries the very large amount of $10,000, and I think the gentleman should make some explanation of the merits of this bill before moving its adoption.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I will be very glad to do so. This is the case of a post-office burglary. The post office at Greeley, Colo., in 1911, was robbed of stamps and post-office receipts to the amount of $10,088.09. The report accompanying this bill is a very complete showing that full investigation of the robbery was made by the representatives of the Post Office Department in Colorado, to which investigation the postmaster himself gave every aid possible and spent quite a large sum of money in order to apprehend the thief and recover the stolen property, however without avail. The fact that it exceeds the amount of $10,000 is the only thing that prevented prompt settlement by the Post Office Department, the law requiring that when the amount exceeds $10,000 that the Post Office Department must be authorized by a special act of Congress to relieve the indebtedness, and that is the purpose of this bill, which has the full indorsement of the Postmaster General.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Yes; I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. MANN. Has this bill been before previous Congresses?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. That is a question that I am unable to answer. It only was brought to my attention in the fore part of 1916. At the time I introduced the bill, I think——

Mr. STAFFORD. I know that the gentleman is very familiar with it, but the report does not disclose that it has ever been submitted to the House or the Senate for action.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I think that is true if I remember correctly.

Mr. STAFFORD. And the letter of the Postmaster General on this subject is as late as January 22 of this year.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me remarkable that where the Post Office investigators promptly made an investigation and promptly reported that the postmaster should be relieved from the liability no claim has been made to Congress between 1911 and 1917. I did not recall the bill in a former Congress, and that is the reason I asked the gentleman.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. The report does not disclose that, and I have no personal information with reference to it. I know a considerable sum was spent by the postmaster himself in conjunction with the representatives of the department in an endeavor to run down the thief. They had several clues presented to them, and considerable time was used in such investigation before remedy was asked from the department.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. BLANTON. Did the committee before whom this bill was pending hear evidence of the justice of the claim?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. The member of the Post Office Committee [Mr. STEENERSON] who made the report on the bill will answer that question.

Mr. BLANTON. I would just like to know whether or not favorable report on this bill was made solely upon the letter of the Postmaster General or did they hear evidence?

Mr. STEENERSON. We heard the representative of the Post Office Department and the committee was unanimous in recommending it.

Mr. BLANTON. I wanted to know if the evidence showed that the requirements under section 361 of the postal regulations were carried out by the Postmaster, that the funds were securely locked up as required by that regulation?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; the evidence showed that they were locked in a safe furnished by the United States Government, and it was not the postmaster's property.

Mr. BLANTON. That the postmaster was in no way negligent?

Mr. STEENERSON. No; the burglar entered by taking out a pane of glass in the rear and reaching around and opened the lock of the door. This safe formerly was in use by the United States Government at Colorado Springs, and the post-office inspector had this safe moved to Greeley, and it was furnished to the postmaster by the United States Government and locked, and they knocked off—what is it?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. The combination of the safe.

Mr. STEENERSON. The knob you turn.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to know whether if the full amount of the loss, as evidenced by this claim, was definitely proven by evidence of probative force?

Mr. STEENERSON. It was absolutely proven and the only reason why the Post Office Department did not pay it at once was because it exceeded by $85 the maximum the department can pay in such cases under the statute of 1888.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to state to the committee the reason I am asking these questions is there are a number of claims coming from various postmasters all over the country for alleged loss of stamps and funds, and so forth, against which I expect to lodge objection, and I did not want a precedent to be established in this particular case by lettting this bill go through unless all of these matters had been met——

Mr. STEENERSON. That is very true.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that during the past fiscal year there were 664 claims made in the Post Office Department by 664 different postmasters, aggregating $98,966.40, which were allowed by the Postmaster General and paid, not claims made and disallowed but claims made and allowed by the Postmaster General.

Mr. STEENERSON. Because they were less than $10,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Because the Postmaster General could not say that they had not met the requirements of the law or had been negligent. Now, if there were this number of claims allowed by the Postmaster General, the committee can readily understand how many other claims were made and were turned down. So you can see it is a momentous question, after all, that is under consideration. And I want to see these claims especially proven before the committee by competent evidence of probative force, and not merely take it for granted that the loss occurred and the postmasters suffered the various losses claimed.

Mr. STEENERSON. There is no question in this claim.

Mr. BLANTON. No question as to the loss or want of negligence on the part of the postmaster?

Mr. STEENERSON. The claim would have been paid by the department if they had had jurisdiction, but unfortunately it exceeded their jurisdiction by $88. It is recommended by the department and urged by them.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill H. R. 1607 be referred to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE] moves that the bill be referred to the House with the recommendation that it pass.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, just one moment. I would like to ask the gentleman why this particular claim was not referred to the Committee on Claims for attention? It occurs to me that it is a claim that should properly have gone to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. In reply to the question of the gentleman from Texas, permit me to say that I was quite new in my service here at the time I presented this bill, and I took advice from older parties, and that was that, with the recommendation and reports that were made by the Post Office Department, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads would be the proper place to refer the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask whether the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads usually investigate claims of this character? Are they in the habit of investigating claims of this character?

Mr. STEENERSON. We have in some cases. In some cases, if they are less than $10,000, we do not want anything to do with them. That is a claim the department has control of. In a claim of this kind the statute itself requires it to be reported to the Speaker of the House for adjustment.

Mr. BLANTON. I might add that the Committee on Claims has lately investigated carefully a case involving over a million dollars. So, I take it——

Mr. STEENERSON. I know that the committee did not ask for any bill. I would like to get rid of it, but as long as it was before us without objection we did our best to report it. The chairman of the committee is here.

Mr. MOON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that it is very clear under the rules that not only the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads but the Committee on Claims may take jurisdiction of claims of this character. It has been the habit of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads frequently to take care of these cases, and where many of these claims have come to us we have voluntarily relinquished our jurisdiction and sent them to the Committee on Claims for adjudication. There is no question of the right of the Post Office Committee to determine these matters.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado moves that the bill H. R. 1607 be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it be passed.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM M. WILSON.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2635) to authorize the issue of a patent to certain land in Alabama to William M. Wilson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to issue a patent to William M. Wilson, of Chilton County, Ala., for the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of fractional section 32, and the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of fractional section 33, township 21 north, range 17 east, St. Stephens meridian, in the State of Alabama, reserving to the United States the right to overflow all or any part of said land in the construction and maintenance of work for the improvement of navigation in the Coosa River, without compensation to the said Wilson, his heirs or assigns, for any damages they may sustain by reason of such overflow.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill in reference to land, as I understand, down in Alabama. I notice in the report it says something about the use of this land for Government work in that vicinity, as I have it marked here. I would like to ask if this land is to be used in Government work down there in the completing of a dam, or whatever it may be, for the improvement of navigation.

Mr. WALTON. I am unable to personally answer that question. This is a bill of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BLACKMON], and I understand he is ill. I was directed by the Committee on Public Lands to make a favorable report. As I understand, this land was withdrawn in 1908, on the Coosa River, it being the intention to determine just what portion was necessary for the river's improvement. In 1912 Mr. Wilson through inadvertence was allowed to make a homestead entry, which he perfected, but on account of a prior withdrawal patent could not be granted. I do not know anything about the project.

Mr. FOSTER. The letter of a Secretary of the Interior says:

The tracts involved, with other unappropriated lands bordering on the Coosa River and the islands therein, were in the year 1908 withdrawn from all forms of disposal for use in connection with the improvement of said river until it should have been determined what portions were actually needed for the work.

Now, this man went on there. I think he is entitled to some relief. But we have in some of these cases allowed a money consideration for damages in going on the land, and I wondered if this land was really land that was to be used in Government work down there. I notice it says that the Government shall not be held responsible for any damage done to this land by overflow, but the question is whether it was in proximity to this work, where this land was necessary, and it probably ought to be retained, and whether the man ought or ought not to be paid, instead of given the land, for whatever damages have come to him as the result of his being permitted to settle on the land. That is the inquiry I wanted to make.

Mr. WALTON. I am not familiar with the facts in detail. Perhaps the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON] knows something about them.

Mr. ALMON. I understand the only way the land will ever possibly be needed by the Government will be by reason of overflow for building of dams, and the bill provides that Mr. Wilson shall not have any claim against the Government for overflow, and if that is true I do not see that the Government would have any further interest in it.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I notice in this report this significant statement of the Secretary of the Interior, namely, that there has been an appeal taken from a decision; that this man appears to have inadvertently gone onto land which was withheld from entry, and it simply says this, quoting from the report:

From said decision an appeal was prosecuted to the department, and the case is now pending here pursuant thereto.

It seems to me there has been no decision on the appeal in the Land Office. If that is true, I do not think we ought to legislate until that appeal is decided.

Mr. FOSTER. Here is some land that was afterwards withdrawn from entry. There comes along a man who is permitted to enter on the land. Of course, the Government does not guarantee a title when men enter upon land, and yet he was permitted to enter on the land and it seems he made all proof to secure this land.

I think when the Government does that it is at least morally under obligation not to permit men to spend their money and get nothing for it. We have passed bills similar to this, I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and have paid men for the land where it was not feasible to give the land.

Now, the only question in my mind is whether this land is of the kind to be used by the Government in its work down there. I do not believe there is any question but that the man has a claim against the Government. We are assured by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON] that that land is not to be used by the Government, so that under the circumstances, as I look at it, this man ought to have this land. He has complied with the law as far as he could. The fact that the land was withdrawn was not known to him.

Mr. ROBBINS. Does the gentleman, who speaks with some knowledge of this bill, know anything about the improvements that have been made upon the land by Mr. Wilson, the alleged settler?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois will permit, Mr. BLACKMON appeared before the Committee on Public Lands when this bill was under consideration, and my recollection is that he stated there were some improvements on the land such as a homesteader generally places on land, and I recall the further fact that this man in good faith made his filing, and the Land Office permitted him to make the filing, but they denied him the final proof, which they had to do under the law, because the land had been withdrawn. He took his appeal in order to keep his homestead intact. The Secretary of the Interior in the last Congress—the Sixty-fourth Congress—recommended that this bill be passed, and the Secretary again recommends here that the bill be passed. This man had to take the appeal or he would have been down and out entirely. He has taken the appeal solely to protect his rights. With the appeal pending in the Land Office, the Secretary heartily recommends that the bill be adopted, so that the applicant may get title to the land.

I recollect the further fact, as presented by Mr. BLACKMON, that it is a question, even if the Coosa Dam was built, whether it would overflow it.

Mr. ROBBINS. I was going to ask how far is this Government improvement on the Coosa River from this land? It is evidently a backwater proposition that they are trying to protect here. What information has the gentleman on that?

Mr. RAKER. At this time I have no information as to the distance of this land from the dam, but it is on the river where it is expected there may be an overflow. But this protects the Government, and this man would get no compensation for it.

Mr. ROBBINS. On that statement I have no objection.

Mr. WALTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be reported back to the House with favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Mexico moves that the bill H. R. 2635 be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Private Calendar.

ALMA HARRIS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4240) for the relief of Alma Harris.

The title of the bill was read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patent to Alma Harris for the southeast quarter section 12, township 20 south, range 7 west, New Mexico principal meridian, in the Las Cruces land district, New Mexico, upon payment of the lawful purchase price of said land, without further proof of compliance with law.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I understand the only reason why the bill seeks to give this woman the title to the land without further proof of compliance with the law is on account of its being close to the Mexican border.

Mr. WALTON. Yes. This land is located close to the Mexican border.

Mr. FOSTER. And it is unsafe for her to be there?

Mr. WALTON. Yes; and the War Department notified her that it would be unsafe. I move the bill be reported to the House, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Mexico moves that the bill H. R. 4240 be reported to the House with favorable recommendation. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

THOMAS CAMPBELL.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1873) for the relief of Thomas Campbell.

The title of the bill was read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to remove from the records of his department the charge of desertion against Thomas Campbell, formerly of Company K, Ninth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, and to issue to him an honorable discharge as of the date of May 20, 1863, when said regiment was mustered out of service.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

At the end of the bill insert the following:

"Provided, That no pension, bounty, or allowances shall accrue prior to the passage of this act."

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. RIORDAN] is absent from the House, as is Mr. CALDWELL, who reported the bill. In their absence I ask that the bill be favorably reported to the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, this is to give this man an honorable discharge.

Mr. CRAGO. Yes, sir.

Mr. FOSTER. That, to my understanding, has never been done. I recall a few years ago getting a bill unanimously through this House twice and through the Senate twice unanimously, and each time it was vetoed. Does the gentleman suppose that if he gets this bill through for an honorable discharge for this man he will get it signed?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. They have a prescribed form.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand so. This is designed, as I understand, to give this man a pensionable status, and there is a prescribed form by which that is done.

Mr. MANN. Not a prescribed form, but a customary form.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; that is better.

Mr. CRAGO. This is out of the ordinary.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will yield, I will say that when I came here first this form of a bill was passed and a great many bills of this character became laws. Finally the War Department advised, I think, President Roosevelt first that it was without the power of Congress to change the facts, and President Roosevelt vetoed all of the bills of this character which were sent to him after a certain time. There were not very many sent. When Mr. Taft came in as President a bill of this kind slipped through the House and the Senate, and was, I believe, vetoed by President Taft for the same reason.

The War Department has consistently maintained the position that it would recommend that the President veto any bill which provided that you grant an honorable discharge to a man who had not received an honorable discharge, and that Congress by legislating could not alter facts. The fact remains in the War Department that a man had been dishonorably discharged. We might say that we change the facts, but the facts would still remain. We adopted then the policy of granting the right of pension to soldiers on the theory that that would admit them to the Grand Army of the Republic if they were granted a pension, because ordinarily a man can not receive a pension unless he has an honorable discharge, and the fact was they got their pension and practically an honorable discharge.

Mr. CRAGO. I think the gentleman is entirely correct as to the proposition, and we have endeavored in our committee to put all the bills in that shape. I think the proper course here would be, since that has not been done with respect to this bill, to change it in accordance with that form.

This man Campbell is a brother of the late Hon. Timothy J. Campbell, who served in the House from New York a number of years ago.

I move, Mr. Chairman, that the bill be amended to read as follows:

That in the administration of any laws conferring the rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Thomas Campbell, formerly of Company K, Ninth Regiment, New York Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 20th day of May, 1863, when said regiment was mustered out: Provided, That no pension, bounty, or allowances shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield before the gentleman makes that motion? Will the gentleman advise the committee as to the policy of the Committee on Military Affairs in favorably reporting bills of this character, where the soldier was obligated to serve a term of three years and then deserts, and his justification is that when he enlisted he enlisted with the understanding that he was only to enlist until his regiment was mustered out?

Mr. CRAGO. I will say that the policy of the Military Committee on these bills has been this: They are all referred to a subcommittee, the subcommittee looks over the records, considers them carefully, and if they are unanimous in their conclusions they so report it to the full committee. The full committee authorizes some one of the subcommittee to make the report. With the thousands of cases before the committee, they steer clear of giving any man a pensionable status who had not served one year. This man was transferred to this battery with the understanding that when the organization went home to New York he would go home with them and be discharged. He served more than a year, and went back to New York with his battery, and he thought he was mustered out.

Mr. STAFFORD. But he enlisted for a term of three years.

Mr. CRAGO. The battery went home and was mustered out, and he thought he was mustered out. He stayed there in his usual avocation, and it is easily understood that where a man's organization was taken home to New York, and he was a member of that organization, it was not a very great stretch of the imagination for him to think that he was mustered out as well as the rest. It was merely a matter of bookkeeping.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out certain language and insert the language that he has stated.

Mr. CRAGO. I will furnish the Clerk with the amendment in writing.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRAGO. I move that the bill as amended be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be passed.

The motion was agreed to.

CHARLES LYNCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1954) for the relief of Charles Lynch.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, That in the administration of any laws conferring the rights, privileges, or benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Charles Lynch, who was a private in Company A, Ninth Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 16th day of July, 1864: Provided, That no back pay or pension be allowed prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I notice this proviso is in a little different form than usual on these bills. This says that "no back pay or pension shall be allowed prior to the passage of this act." Usually it says that "no back pay, bounty, or allowances shall accrue," and so forth.

Mr. TILSON. There was no intention not to have this in the usual form. Mr. Chairman, I move that the proviso be amended so as to read that "no pension, bounty, or allowances shall accrue prior to the passage of the bill."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the proviso by making it read: "Provided, That no pension, bounty, or allowances shall accrue prior to the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, this bill was passed unanimously by the Sixty-fourth Congress and failed to receive consideration in the Senate. It is back here by unanimous report of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The facts are set out quite fully in the report, and unless there is some question, which I shall be very glad to answer, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to know the reason why he was denied an honorable discharge.

Mr. TILSON. Because he was left by his organization. He had been in the service nearly three years. His regiment started to return by boat from New York, having been at home to fill up its ranks by recruiting, and he was to sail with the rest of the regiment, but they went away without him. He had been allowed to go ashore by his lieutenant for the purpose of purchasing some tobacco. When he returned to the dock the ship with all his personal equipment and everything else was gone. Instead of trying to follow up his command or reporting himself to the Provost Marshal, as he should have done, he was improperly advised and enlisted in another regiment 12 days later. In the new regiment he served until August, 1865. He has an honorable discharge by law from the second enlistment, but he has no honorable discharge from the first enlistment, and this precludes him from receiving a pension. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I thought the House was committed to the policy that where people did not have an honorable discharge in this war they should not be allowed a pension. Why should they be allowed a pension in any other service if not in this war? Is not the service as great in this war as in any other war?

Mr. TILSON. Oh, yes; but this man has an honorable discharge from one service, but has not from the other. He was accidentally left by his organization, and while technically he was a deserter, he was not really a deserter.

Mr. RAGSDALE. And yet by the rule which has been stated on the floor of the House he would not be entitled to a pension.

Mr. TILSON. That is the rule as it has always existed, but under the facts we think he ought to have a pension.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Then we are going to make exceptions to the rule which we affirmed the other day relating to those who are serving in France to-day.

Mr. TILSON. Oh, I suppose we shall make exceptions under all laws where proper cases arise.

Mr. FOSTER. There will probably be soldiers in this war where they make a proper showing, where exceptions will have to be made.

Mr. TILSON. Undoubtedly; it is human to err, and mistakes have been made through all time. Where we find that a real mistake has been made and because of it some soldier who has rendered honorable service has been injured, that mistake ought to be remedied just as far as possible.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The gentleman thinks this is purely a question of mistake and of no intention upon the part of the man?

Mr. TILSON. The committee was entirely convinced that there was no fault on the part of the soldier so far as his being left was concerned, and it is shown that he was very much disturbed on account of being left behind. The boat carried away all of his clothing and equipment, and it appears that the man was very much disconcerted on account of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman that the bill H. R. 1954 be laid aside with a favorable recommendation to be reported to the House with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JEREMIAH STOVER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 667) for the relief of Jeremiah Stover.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Jeremiah Stover, who was a private of Company B, One hundred and eighty-eighth Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 16th day of October, 1865.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, unless some explanation is asked to this bill——

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, I think the gentleman should explain it.

Mr. CRAGO. The facts, in brief, are these: This bill went through the same course as all the other bills in the subcommittee and in the full committee. Jeremiah Stover is more than 80 years of age. He lives in Gettysburg. He has a son-in-law there who is a prominent citizen and an official of one of the railroads. Mr. Stover was a soldier who served more than three years' honorable service. He was doing provost duty at one time and was authorized by the officer having charge of that duty to purchase his own horse. He purchased his own horse, and later, with some of the natives in that locality, he made a trade, and I imagine, like some horse trades that we have all heard of, it was not a satisfactory trade. In any event, after the organization had left that immediate vicinity, this man, who had traded the horse for Stover's own horse, reported to the military authorities that Stover had gone off with a Government-owned animal. The truth of the matter is that if it was a Government-owned animal, it was an animal that was in this other man's possession, and was traded to Stover for Stover's own horse. Stover knew nothing of this for several months after that, until just before they were mustered out. He was then charged with it, and I believe was found guilty of having in his possession an animal owned by the United States Government. He was sentenced to serve some time, but the sentence was commuted, and he was released from arrest. He went home. He is an honorable citizen and has been resting under this unjust charge all of these years. He simply made a trade with one of the natives with a horse that he owned himself or a horse which might have belonged to the United States Government, and the committee thought in view of his more than three years of honorable service for his country this old man at this time ought to be put on the honor roll.

Mr. FOSTER. So the gentleman thinks in this case it was just as in other cases where one man got the better of another in a horse trade.

Mr. CRAGO. That is all there is to it.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. In other words, this person to whom it is proposed to give relief was guilty merely of receiving stolen goods.

Mr. CRAGO. That is only according to the man who may have got the worst of it in a horse trade.

Mr. RAGSDALE. That is the fact in the case, is it not?

Mr. CRAGO. That is the allegation.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The charge was that he had stolen a horse.

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. And the difference is that he merely received stolen goods.

Mr. CRAGO. The difference is that he traded for this horse, which may have belonged to the United States Government.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Is it not a fact that it did?

Mr. CRAGO. I am not sure.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Is not that the record? In other words, he could not have stolen the horse at all; but it did belong to the Government.

Mr. CRAGO. He made a trade of his own animal for this animal.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The relief that the gentleman is asking is from the charge of having stolen a horse, when the fact is that he was found in possession of property that did belong to the Government.

Mr. CRAGO. What appealed to the committee was this: Here is an old man 80 years of age, who has given more than three years of service to his country, and all of these years he has been denied any of the financial benefits——

Mr. RAGSDALE. I am not making any question about that. What I am trying to do is to get at the facts. The facts are that the property was the property of the United States Government.

Mr. CRAGO. That was the finding of the court-martial; yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The finding was that he got the property of the United States Government.

Mr. CRAGO. Probably that is true.

Mr. RAGSDALE. And the only thing the gentleman is pleading here is that, instead of having gotten it directly from the Government, he received stolen goods that were the property of the Government, although he gave his horse in return for them.

Mr. CRAGO. What Mr. Stover maintains with all the vigor that any man can maintain is that he knew nothing about the ownership of this animal, except that he thought the man with whom he made the trade owned it.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I am just trying to get the facts. He did receive goods that was stolen from the United States Government.

Mr. CRAGO. That was the finding, I suppose, of the court-martial.

Mr. RAGSDALE. And that you are trying to relieve him of.

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. And the plea put up is that instead of stealing it he received it.

Mr. CRAGO. Not knowing that it was stolen.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The plea the gentleman is making is that instead of stealing it he simply received stolen goods.

Mr. CRAGO. No; there is nothing of that kind.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Why, the gentleman offers by way of justification that he did not know that the horse was stolen.

Mr. CRAGO. That is exactly correct.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Therefore he was receiving stolen goods, and the plea by way of justification is that he did not know it was stolen.

Mr. CRAGO. The court-martial found that the property he received was stolen.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The court-martial found he was receiving stolen goods.

Mr. CRAGO. He admits that he received this, but he does not admit he knew it was the property of the Government.

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAGO. I will.

Mr. ELSTON. We will presume the court-martial gave him a trial, and there were witnesses examined and possibly a judgment was had after a full explanation on his part, so far as he could make it. How does he explain that the court-martial made a wrong judgment in the case on the facts?

Mr. CRAGO. That is sometimes a violent assumption in time of war. It is not always true, and a private soldier, even in time of war, has very little chance of defending himself or presenting his side of the case to the court-martial where they consider him technically guilty.

Mr. ELSTON. Did he give an explanation which satisfied the committee that was true?

Mr. CRAGO. The explanation that he gave to me individually was this: That he had this horse, that the organization was preparing to move, and this man had this other horse in his possession—he was a farmer in the locality—that he made this trade in good faith, believing that this other horse belonged to the man with whom he was trading. He was allowed to have this horse by permission of the provost marshal.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. This was a court-martial during time of war. Did the gentleman have any record of the evidence taken by that court-martial?

Mr. CRAGO. We could not get the evidence.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Had the man ever made any application for relief to Congress, or when did he first do it?

Mr. CRAGO. So far as I know—well, I can not give any answer to that.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Did he make the application before the witnesses were dead who were called before the court-martial, or after they had died?

Mr. CRAGO. We had the affidavit of his comrades as to his service and as to the fact that when this was reported to his company there was not a man who was in the company who believed that this man would be guilty of anything of the kind.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. That may be all true; but you did not have any opportunity to go over the court-martial, which always ought to stand unless there is some mistake.

Mr. CRAGO. After all these years it was hard to do that.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Then, after all these years we ought not to entertain a bill——

Mr. CRAGO. One of the things which appealed to the committee was that he had rendered three years of valuable service——

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. A great many people gave valuable service.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, before that is done, let us have the amendment put on.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to ask for recognition——

Mr. CRAGO. If the gentleman will notice, this is the exact form prescribed by the department or suggested, and, if the gentleman will notice, it says "shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged." Now, the ruling under that is that prior to the passage of this act and its approval he is not entitled to any benefits of pension or anything of that kind.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know; the Military Affairs Committee has been bringing in all kinds of bills—some of them with language in them and some without—and we ought to have some uniformity of bill. If we say that no back pay, bounty, or allowance can be paid from the passage of the act——

Mr. CRAGO. It can not be. That is in another form of a bill.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. This last form is what the Secretary of War furnished as being the proper form.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me, if the gentleman will permit the suggestion, this was a finding of a body of fellow soldiers of Mr. Stover.

Mr. CRAGO. Of officers; yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Well, they were fellow soldiers. I believe the gentleman himself was an officer of the Spanish-American War?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Well, officers are soldiers.

Mr. CRAGO. I often went before court-martials and got fellows free from charges when, I think, if I had not appeared they would have been held under the charge of dishonorable conduct.

Mr. RAGSDALE. In other words, the gentleman thinks the tendency of the officers appointed by our Government is to discredit soldiers?

Mr. CRAGO. No; not in all cases; but in some cases very little consideration is given the rights of the individual soldier.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The gentleman thinks men who fought 50 years ago had very little consideration given them by the officers who commanded them?

Mr. CRAGO. That may have been true in certain cases but not in all cases.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Now, this man was tried by his fellow soldiers?

Mr. CRAGO. That is what the record shows.

Mr. RAGSDALE. And the record shows he was found guilty of theft.

Mr. CRAGO. That is the record.

Mr. RAGSDALE. And he is here now after fifty-odd years asking for relief.

Mr. CRAGO. That is a mere matter of argument.

Mr. RAGSDALE. No——

Mr. CRAGO. This is the situation this man finds himself in to-day, and he appeals to us as reasonable human beings after 50 or more years have gone by. This man served for more than three years in the defense of his country, rendered good service—we have letters to the War Department from members of the company who served with him, and not a man of that company believed that this man would be guilty of anything of the kind of which he was charged.

Now, admitting that he was found guilty of having received a horse which his own investigation ought to have shown him was Government property; admitting that he did it, he used it in the Government service. That is all that happened to the animal. Now, technically he may have been guilty. Can not we afford to overlook that matter and put this old man, 80 years of age——

Mr. SLAYDEN. On the pension roll?

Mr. CRAGO. On the pension roll. That is exactly correct.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman pardon me?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The record is that he bought a horse and took it for his own service.

Mr. CRAGO. He bought a horse originally by the permission of the provost officer for his own use. He traded that horse for this horse. This man afterwards alleged——

Mr. RAGSDALE. For his own use?

Mr. CRAGO. In the Government service. He was not a cavalryman.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Where does that appear? That was at the time of his discharge.

Mr. CRAGO. Oh, no; it was while he was in the service.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The record does not show that. It states——

Mr. CRAGO. The record shows that Stover obtained permission from the provost marshal to purchase a horse, which he did, and that the man with whom Stover had traded reported he had gone off with a Government horse. The facts of the case are that he was doing duty which made it convenient for him to be mounted, and he bought a horse at his own expense, and, in continuing this duty, he traded that first horse which he bought for this horse which they afterwards alleged was Government property.

Mr. RAGSDALE. That does not appear in here.

Mr. CRAGO. I am telling you the story that I got from his comrades and himself.

Mr. RAGSDALE. According to the records here, he was permitted to buy a horse; he traded it for another horse, and then he took this horse, which belonged to the United States Government, home with him. His comrades in arms, with whom he served, tried him and convicted him of being a thief. He was convicted, having two years' service.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Penal service?

Mr. RAGSDALE. It does not say. It was remitted, and he served until 1865. This transpired fifty-odd years ago. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO], with that same sort of fairness and desire to protect the common soldier that he referred to this morning when he was a comrade in arms in the last war, I am sure, is led to come forward and ask for consideration for this man. But the question is, What is there to show that this man at that time did not know that he was getting United States property that could not have been shown at that time? And if he could not show it to his comrades in arms at that particular time, and as the country he was fighting for at that particular time was being heavily taxed and he was breaching their trust and carrying their property away, and he was tried and convicted at that particular time, not only with being disloyal to the flag but for a breach of trust, why after 50 years should the man come in, a man of that type, and be put on an honorable footing with the men who were loyal?

Mr. CRAGO. He has paid the penalty for 50 years. He has been kept off the honor roll, and kept from being paid a pension, and if that is not penalty for a man who has served three years for his country—and I ask the indulgence of this House in agreeing to debate the question of whether or not he should be relieved of the stigma that was passed upon him.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I am willing to debate the question of whether a soldier, wearing the uniform of the United States, who by his own associates in arms was convicted of being a thief, and who stole Government property, should ever enjoy the honorable place that a soldier does who served in the same war and who was never guilty of anything dishonorable.

Mr. CRAGO. A soldier may step aside, as a civilian, and do something that may ruin his record for years and years. I say this, that where these years have passed, and he has borne the stigma all that time, it is not very much of a recompense for the service that man gave to the country at this time for us to come here in his old age and restore him to the honor roll.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I would much prefer to give him money compensation than put him in the same position of the men who deserved the confidence that the Union placed in them and who never betrayed it.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania really believe that the records of the War Department—and this does not apply to this particular case, I will say to the gentleman—does the gentleman believe that the records of the War Department should be falsified in the interest of men who deserted?

Mr. CRAGO. We are not changing that feature.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I know you are not, in this particular case. But the gentleman and I have sometimes discussed these so-called charges of desertion, where the records have been made to tell a falsehood and to say that a man was honorably discharged when in point of fact he was dismissed because of the most serious of all military crimes, namely, desertion, and men have been restored purely because they wanted to get a pension and live upon the taxpayers. Here is the case of a man about which I know nothing except that I have heard the facts stated in the discussion by gentlemen here—the case of a soldier who served——

Mr. CRAGO. Yes; he served after the alleged act for which he was tried was committed.

Mr. SLAYDEN. How long did he serve before that?

Mr. CRAGO. About two years.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And then he committed an offense which——

Mr. CRAGO. He denies that he committed an offense. The court found him technically guilty.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Well, they dismissed him for dishonesty, and perhaps because they needed his services they put him back again. Does the gentleman believe that the pension rolls ought to be further padded at the expense of the people by adding the names of men who have been proved guilty, at least, of serious military offenses and personal dishonesty?

Mr. CRAGO. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that of the thousands of cases that have come before our committee we do not favor many of them, but where a case goes to a subcommittee and that subcommittee finds that a man has given one or two or three years' faithful service to the Government, even admitting that the man did what he is charged with doing, we have taken the position in such cases that such a man ought really to be restored to his rights.

Mr. SLAYDEN. "His rights"? I understood you were proposing it a little while ago on the basis of charity. I do not think he has any "rights."

Mr. CRAGO. I think it is a right. In many cases where courts-martial were justified in acting as they did, in 10 or 15 or 25 years afterwards it is not a very great act of graciousness on the part of the Government in restoring them.

Mr. SLAYDEN. When a man deserts, he forfeits his rights.

Mr. CRAGO. There is no charge of desertion here.

Mr. SLAYDEN. And when a man steals a horse, that is an act of dishonesty.

Mr. CRAGO. With all our facilities for keeping our records, and all our bookkeeping, and the millions of money that we have spent in trying to keep track of affairs in the past year or two, thousands of errors, glaring errors, have been made, not only in the records of the War Department but in orders. I have on my desk a death certificate sent to the parents of a boy who was said to have been killed in France, whereas the boy is in Walter Reed Hospital to-day. I told him he should keep that death certificate as a souvenir. Men are certified by the department as having been killed in action when they are alive and well, and others will be reported as absolutely safe, when they have been killed perhaps 60 or 90 days before; so that these records of the Civil War, like those of the present war, are not perfect records, and every now and then a case occurs where, if the facts were presented to a court-martial, the man concerned would not be declared guilty. I have been out with men who have been away from home for two or three years fighting for their country, and who happened in a moment of forgetfulness to do something that we would not want to see them do, and yet in the main they were good men.

Mr. ELSTON. May I inquire of the gentleman if this man is up in years?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes. He is advanced in years.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Simon F. Smith, who signed the affidavit which is filed by the committee in this case of Jeremiah Stover, was the man himself from whom Jeremiah Stover claimed to get the horse?

Mr. CRAGO. He was the man who received the horse on the Jeremiah Stover trade, but I imagine that he did not receive as good a horse as he thought he was getting, and that is the reason why he reported the case.

Mr. RAGSDALE. But if it was not a fact would he have directed the attention of the Government to the fact that this stolen horse was carried away?

Mr. CRAGO. I am in favor of reporting the bill with the recommendation that it pass.

Mr. RAGSDALE. So that the gentleman's position is that although the court-martial's decision was just, and Jeremiah Stover was a thief and stole this property from the Government, he favors action which would put Jeremiah Stover on the level with those who served under the flag of the Union faithfully, and would put that man on the honor roll at this time along with men who served the flag gallantly and honorably until the Nation had been made one again?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Does the gentleman know whether or not at that time all Government horses were branded with the letters "U. S."?

Mr. CRAGO. I asked that question of the gentleman, and he said he did not know. I do not know.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I understood they always had the letters "U. S." branded on the Government horses.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman speaks of incorrect reports being made by the War Department. There is no such thing usually as an incorrect report made in the finding of a court-martial unless it is set aside, is there? The finding of a court-martial is based upon evidence and not merely on such reports as are made ordinarily?

Mr. CRAGO. The court-martial, of course, is a human agency for administering justice.

Mr. BLANTON. Like a court, it is presumed to carry out the law.

Mr. CRAGO. Many findings of courts-martial are such that we would not make them if you and I were on those courts.

Mr. BLANTON. The Congress does not go behind the findings of courts-martial.

Mr. CRAGO. That is the only relief they have—at the hands of Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. But very rarely does Congress go behind the findings of a court-martial.

Mr. CRAGO. I want to give an illustration of how courts-martial are conducted sometimes. I remember the case of a court-martial trying an officer in the Philippines. There were five Regular Army officers on that court and six men who never served in the Regular Army. Those five Regular Army officers were serving with the volunteer forces. When it came to a question of guilt of the captain who was tried—a volunteer officer—every man on the court-martial who had seen service in the Regular Army voted "guilty" and every man who came from the volunteer service voted "not guilty." They stuck to that notwithstanding the court-martial proceedings were sent back three times for revision, by direction of the commanding general, to change the findings.

Mr. BLANTON. The question I am trying to get the gentleman to answer is, Is it not a dangerous precedent for Congress to go behind the court-martial?

Mr. CRAGO. Not 50 or 60 years after it happened.

Mr. BLANTON. The further removed, the more danger there is.

Mr. CRAGO. I hardly think so.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. FIELDS. It is guaranteed to the accused that he will have a fair trial; and if the court-martial knows that there is another tribunal that will review it, it makes a difference.

Mr. BLANTON. Fifty years after?

Mr. CRAGO. My attention has been called to the fact that they went behind the record of the court-martial in the case of Fitz John Porter, and President Garfield was a member of the court-martial and also a Member of the House later.

Mr. SLAYDEN. But the gentleman remembers what Congress did in the case of Fitz John Porter. It was to have the accused retried, and at West Point on the court-martial were three major generals of the Army.

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAGO Yes.

Mr. EMERSON. Is this a case where two soldiers traded horses?

Mr. CRAGO. No; a soldier and a civilian. He found a horse in the hands of a civilian that he liked better, and he traded. After they went away the man charged him with having sold a horse that belonged to the Government.

Mr. EMERSON. Was that in the South or in the North?

Mr. CRAGO. I can not answer the question, but my impression is that it was in the North.

Mr. EMERSON. I did not know that they found them guilty in the South.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there were a good many errors in findings by courts-martial during the Civil War; probably there are a good many errors in the findings of courts-martial in the present war. That is not strange when you consider that the War Department itself officially is constantly making errors. I would like to give one illustration of the fallibility of human endeavor as exemplified by the business methods in the War Department. I received a letter the other day from a lady residing in Texas stating that her son was in the Army in France; that before he went he made an allotment of a part of his compensation to her. The War Department, which has charge of it, informs her that they have no record of the allotment. So she has not received any money, but they have deducted the entire amount of the allotment when they went to pay the son. So he has not received the money. The War Department has received no such notice of the allotment when it comes to paying money to the one, but has full notice when it comes to pay money to the other.

Mr. BLANTON. That is an error of some $100 a month clerk down here in the War-Risk Insurance Bureau who has passed upon the matter without giving it careful investigation.

Mr. MANN. I think the War-Risk Insurance Bureau has nothing to do with it.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, some clerk in the War Department. The error before the House, the error that is claimed, is against the court-martial, which is in effect the judgment of a court. That finding of the court-martial is to be passed on by Members of Congress, who know nothing in the world about the facts, nothing at all about the rules and regulations of the War Department, and it was made 50 years ago in the performance of its duties.

Mr. MANN. I fully appreciate the position of the gentleman from Texas, and yet courts-martial and courts frequently register the opinion of the clerk, who may or may not receive as much as $100 a month. I do not know whether this was a $100 clerk in the War Department or not, but I do know that the records, except for the fallibility of human nature, ought not to show, in the War Department or elsewhere, that a certain fact exists for one purpose and does not exist for another purpose.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I call the attention of the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that during this war there has been a large number of men sentenced to be shot to death by musketry for desertion and the President of the United States has set aside the findings of every one of these courts-martial and the penalty has not been inflicted. So the President has set aside these findings.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, the minority leader, for whom I have profound respect, calls attention to the errors being committed to-day, I suggest that there never was a time when the House ought to be more particular in the findings that condone or encourage those who have been dealing unfairly with the Government. Whatever mistakes have been made by the War Department or in the Army, whatever has been done by any man in this war, certainly this is the time for the American Congress to go on record that where a man in uniform, no matter what his position, has been found guilty of thieving and has been convicted by his associates, his name should not be placed on the roll of honor.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman intend to incorporate in this bill the customary proviso about pension and bounty?

Mr. CRAGO. No; that is not necessary. This is the form that is recommended by the Secretary of War to the committee and it does not require that proviso. Where we use the other form that proviso is necessary.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I desire recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a distinguished member of the Committee on Military Affairs states that it is not customary to add the proviso that no pension, bounty, or allowance shall accrue prior to the passage of this act. The bill considered just previous to this was a bill in identic phraseology to the bill now before the committee, and that bill contained that proviso.

Mr. CRAGO. It was in the old form, and we changed it to this form. I do not believe the gentleman has the facts clearly before him.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes; I have. I direct the gentleman's attention to the bill introduced by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON], which has just been considered.

Mr. CRAGO. Will it be satisfactory to the gentleman if we put that amendment on?

Mr. STAFFORD. We ought to take that precaution, at least.

Mr. CRAGO. Very well. Mr. Chairman, I move that the language "provided that no pension, bounty, or allowances shall accrue prior to the passage of this act" be added to the end on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAGO: After line 11, after the word "sixty-five," add the words:

"Provided, That no pension, bounty, or allowances shall accrue prior to the passage of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill as amended be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. RAGSDALE (interrupting the count). Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina withdraws the point of order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the bill as amended be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

CLEMENT H. COLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3090) for the relief of Clement H. Cole.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Clement H. Cole, who was a private in Company H, Fifty-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of said company and regiment on the 5th day of November, 1864.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, in order to comply with the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], I move that the amendment be inserted at the end of the bill, as in the previous bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has the language at the desk and will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CRAGO moves to amend, on page 1, line 10, after the word "sixty-four," by inserting the following:

"Provided, That no pension, bounty, or allowances shall accrue prior to the passage of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, if there is no explanation desired of this bill, I shall move that it be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to have some statements of the bill.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, the facts in the case are these: This old gentleman, 80 years old, lives up in the northern part of Pennsylvania. He served for two years and nine months and four days in the Army. He became ill. He was in a hospital for a time, and was then given a furlough of 35 days. He was suffering at that time from chronic diarrhea, which, of course, was the curse of the Army. He returned to the home of Mrs. Adaline Metcalf, at Port Allegany, Pa., which is at the headwaters of the Allegheny River of Pennsylvania, practically on the New York State line. He made his home there, having none of his own. He was unable to leave his bed for many months. There does not appear to be any doubt of the facts. The soldier suffered from chronic diarrhea for from 18 months to two years after reaching home. We have the affidavits of the attending physicians. He was wholly disabled for military duty. There is evidence that the soldier stands well in his community, and that he has served five terms as a justice of the peace. The committee thought it to be one of the cases that was deserving of consideration. I therefore move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, this is one of the cases where a man states that he was sick and went home on a furlough and then overstayed his furlough. When I was a member of the Committee on Military Affairs my friend, Mr. Bishop, who served in the Civil War and who lost his arm there, would have nothing to do with such a case. He said: Did the soldier ask for his pay; did he report where he was; did he send a letter saying where he was? If he did and if he were well, he would have been taken to camp. If he were sick, he would have been given a discharge because of illness, if his illness was incurable. He would have been given his pay if he was not shirking, Mr. Bishop used to say, for he would have written for his pay and reported where he was, and the thing would have been settled at that time. I learned from Mr. Bishop, with whom I served on the subcommittee, never to vote for a case where a man said he went home sick and stayed home sick and was not able to get back unless the man had reported where he was.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I will just say to the gentleman that this case comes within the cases where it was decided where a man had had honorable service for two years or more he should receive consideration, even though he did not do what a reasonable man should have done in making his whereabouts known.

Communication was not easy 50 years ago, and these men did not know often where to report their whereabouts. This man had gone home sick. The evidence is undisputed by those who attended him. These affidavits, I would say, were made quite a number of years ago, but they are on record in the War Department, and they show that from 18 months to 2 years after he went home, long after the close of the war, that he was not fit for military duty.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CRAGO. I will.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The gentleman says he did not know to whom to report?

Mr. CRAGO. Many of these men did not.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Does not the gentleman know there were provost marshals in every district of the whole United States looking after fellows who were out of the ranks, and all he had to do was to report, and he would either have been returned to the ranks or else he would have been sent to the hospital or else discharged? It is not a man's business to come to Congress 50 years afterwards——

Mr. CRAGO. We are not passing a strict judgment in this matter. We are simply trying to do what we think is an act of justice on the part of the Government after all these years in view of the man's honorable service in the Army.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRAGO. I will.

Mr. RAGSDALE. If one of the young men who enlisted from the gentleman's own district, who had been conscripted and had gone into the service under the flag in the great war we have just won, had deserted under a condition like this, would the gentleman at this time want him reinstated on the roll of honor?

Mr. CRAGO. I will say to the gentleman if I am spared to be here to plead for him 50 years from now I will do so very gladly.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I am not talking about the future, I am asking the gentleman, when the boys come back who have done so nobly over across the seas, where they have undergone everything that they have been called upon to bear, where they have won battles the like of which were never seen before, if a man had deserted and left them there to die and suffer as they have, the men who have been left in the ranks to undergo all they have, does the gentleman think a deserter who left them there ought to have the same place in the affections of the people of this country and on the rolls of honor of this country as the men who stayed?

Mr. CRAGO. No; but I do say if some innocent country boy got away from his command and was sick and in the hospital, and did not properly report where he was and his whereabouts to the War Department, and the War Department on the records recommend the giving of a dishonorable discharge, I am contending he ought to have an honorable discharge when his comrades know he is no deserter.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Does not the gentleman know at this particular time they are not asking the consideration of any boys, nor will they do it in this Congress, because the Secretary of War has asked that no bill of any kind relieving desertion should be reported since October 15, because of the effect on the boys who are now in the service?

Mr. CRAGO. I do not know anything of that kind.

Mr. RAGSDALE. The Secretary of War has not addressed a communication to your committee asking you not to bring in bills for the relief of desertion since October 15?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a statement to this effect, that several of these desertion bills were submitted to the War Department for report thereon in accordance with the custom of the committee; that the Secretary of War or the Assistant Secretary of War—well, both the Secretary of War and the Assistant Secretary of War—recommended that the committee should not favorably report that particular bill, because at this present time—at the time he wrote—he did not think there ought to be any condonation of desertion cases.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask my colleague if it is not true the Committee on Military Affairs of this Congress, and especially this session or the last session, has declined to report any desertion bill or take up any new cases, and that all of these cases on the calendar are simply bills that have been reported and most of them passed in the last Congress?

Mr. CRAGO. That is true.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I would like to add I happen to be chairman of this subcommittee before which these desertion cases come, and the cases that are now on this calendar are cases that have been previously reported in former Congresses and in many cases they passed the House, were favorably reported by the Senate, but died in the Senate because they could not be reached on the calendar.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will allow me one question for the benefit of my friend from South Carolina, is it not a fact that the Committee on Military Affairs have consistently refused to report any bill where the evidence indicated that the soldier deserted from the Army under fire or when a battle was imminent?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes; or if it was willful desertion.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I am going on the record, and the record states that the Government was sufficiently considerate of this man to give him 35 days' furlough, that he left there and never came back; the showing is that he never returned, nor is there any showing that he made any effort to return, nor was there any effort made by him to advise anybody of his whereabouts; and the question now before this body is, Was desertion fifty-odd years ago a penal offense? Was it a threat against the flag? Was it a danger to the United States? If it was then, is it not now? He deserted fifty-odd years ago at a period of time when the very preservation of the Union was threatened to be set aside, and I wonder, if Benedict Arnold could come on the floor of this House and have our illustrious friend from Pennsylvania to help him, would we receive and reinstate him in the affections of the American people and put him upon our roll of honor?

Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. CRAGO. The gentleman is making quite a speech.

Mr. RAGSDALE. It seems to me there ought never to have been a time nor should there ever be a time when the men who fought for the flag should ever cease to be properly venerated. There ought never to be a time when those who deserted, those who left their comrades in arms in places of danger and exposed them to death ought to receive the same commendation at the hands of this Congress or of the American people as those who stuck by their guns until the end was in sight.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the eloquent argument of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE] I simply want to say this, that if one of these boys over in France, even though he may never have seen more than three months, or six months, or one year of service, should be sent home sick and should fail to report to his commanding officer and in innocence of what was required of him as a soldier should remain at home ill, I know there is no question of what the Congress would do in righting that man's record. And I am proud to say, after we have made an investigation of these cases, that I am doing what I can to help personally all these old men, who for one year, two years, or three years fought for this Union, and technically committed some error. I am willing to help them in the last years of their lives to join their comrades in the Grand Army of the Republic, and to acknowledge that they paid a bigger price than many men pay who fight their cause here in Congress.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I have given a good deal of thought to cases of this character, having been on the Military Affairs Committee for some time and for a while chairman of the committee on desertions. There are a number of cases where men are charged with desertion where the evidence and the records of the case fail to show that there was ever any intent on the part of the man to desert. Now, we all realize, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO] said a moment ago, that means of communication were not good during the days of the Civil War. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] asked why the man did not report to the provost marshal. Why, probably he was 50, possibly 100. miles away from the provost marshal at that time. Men in many instances were captured or were confined to hospitals or were left sick by the roadside.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FIELDS. Not just now. Men who lived in that day know how difficult, and not only difficult but impossible, it was for men to go single handed and alone and reach their commands after their recovery or after their release or escape from prison.

Mr. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Not just now, with all courtesy.

I have in mind a case where a man enlisted and served for two years. He was captured in the Battle of Richmond. He was kept in prison for seven months. He escaped from prison by some means that I do not now recall. The day following his escape from prison he enlisted in another organization, being informed that his own organization was at that time in Texas. He had been detained somewhere in Kentucky. Does it stand to reason that that man could reach his organization in Texas? Would any reasonable man on the floor of this House or anywhere else charge him with desertion because of his failure to reach his organization, which was then reported in Texas? He probably should have reported to the proper military authorities and gotten a new assignment. But we can understand how easy it is for men who are gathered up here and there, who never had any military service or military training, and probably are illiterate, to fail to understand their duties. But the man did the best thing he knew to do. He enlisted in another organization and served until the end of the war, engaged in four or five battles, and was given an honorable discharge. Yet years afterwards when he applied for a pension he was notified by the War Department or by the Pension Bureau that he was a deserter, and the charge of desertion stands against him to-day.

There are many cases along that line, and I feel that the most cruel thing that the Government can do is to call to its service a patriotic man and after months or probably years of service, because of some circumstances for which he is not responsible, he is separated from the service to then charge him with desertion. I have no patience with a willful deserter. I have no sympathy for him. But I say to you that the Government had better pension 99 deserters than to charge 1 innocent man who served his country faithfully with desertion when he did not desert. It is, as I have said, the most cruel thing, to my mind, that the Government of the United States could do. And the officials of the War Department should be careful, and Congress should not consider its functions of too great importance to review these cases. Because it is upon that spirit, the spirit of patriotism, that these men show when they go to war, that the safety and perpetuity of the Republic depends, and it should be protected in the individual the same as in the public at large.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Was not the gentleman very eloquent on the floor and very active the other day in an endeavor to get through a bill here which denied any consideration to deserters? Why, did not the gentleman try to vacate a vote here on the floor this very week because of the fact that some benefits might accrue to somebody that might be charged with desertion?

Mr. FIELDS. Not at all.

Mr. RAGSDALE. What is the reason the gentleman asked for the vacating of that vote?

Mr. FIELDS. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. A vote was had here the other day on a bill, which a good many gentlemen voted against because the words "honorably discharged" had been stricken out of it through mistake, between the gentleman who offered the amendment and the Clerk at the desk. That did not worry me. The bill had to go to the Senate and to conference. I will say to the gentleman that had the words not been restored I, as one of the conferees, should I be one of them, would see to it that the words were restored in conference. And I think I would have no trouble in doing that, because I think every conferee would have been willing for the restoration of the words. So that was no reason in my mind for voting against the bill, though many men voted against it who had probably not thought of that phase of it after the record vote was had on the bill. I asked unanimous consent to restore the language to the bill and then vacate the roll call to prevent putting men on this floor in a false position.

I think that the gentleman from South Carolina should have been fair enough to have agreed for the roll call to be vacated. I want to say to the gentleman from South Carolina that I never found pleasure—and I hope I may never find pleasure—in taking advantage of men on the floor of this House and attempting to put them in false positions before the country because of some unfortunate position that has arisen here. I was not in that position. I voted for the bill, but men who had voted against it because those words were left out of the bill were not given a fair deal, and the gentleman from South Carolina was not fair in his objection to the vacation of the roll call. It did not mean anything to me. It was not worth anything to me to vacate the roll call, but in a spirit of fairness to the men who had voted against the bill because those words had been omitted.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CRAGO. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, I may be unfair, but if I am unfair to men it will be while they are on the floor of the House, and it will not be afterwards. I understood from the gentleman from Kentucky that the matter would not be taken again on the floor that day.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAGSDALE. Yes; I will deal a little more fairly with the gentleman than he did with me. He declined to yield to me.

Mr. FIELDS. I will say to the gentleman that I had no such agreement as that with the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DONOVAN] was sitting right by me, and he heard what transpired, and at no request of mine, but because he understood from the conversation between the gentleman from Kentucky and myself that I was under the impression that the motion would not be made to vacate in my absence from the Chamber, he objected and prevented the gentleman from Kentucky from succeeding in vacating the motion.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think those who have served with me here during the period of time that I have been here know whether or not I have been fair. They know whether or not I have brought sectionalism into the discussions or attempted to arouse any party strife here, or to do those things on the floor of this House that ill become a Member of this House. I have stood here trying not to injure the good name of any Member of this House, nor have I tried to do those things that would create animosity or unkindly feeling between Members. I am sorry that the gentleman from Kentucky should come on the floor of the House and charge me with being unfair merely because I, as a representative of the people who have sent me here, objected to the use by him of a motion to vacate a roll in the House. If I have to defer to him, if I must give up my right to object to the undoing of things that have been done in the RECORD in order to maintain his good will, Mr. Chairman, then, great as the loss must be to me, irreparable as the injury is that I must suffer, I am sorry that I shall have to go from this body with that great loss, for which nothing else can recompense me.

Mr. CRAGO. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I should not reply to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RAGSDALE] had he not charged or intimated that I had an agreement with him that I would submit a request for unanimous consent in his absence.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. RAGSDALE. I did not make any such statement, Mr. Chairman. What I stated was that I had a conversation, and that a listener thought from the conversation that took place that I was under the impression that the motion would not be renewed. Mr. DONOVAN, of New York, made that statement to me.

Mr. FIELDS. I asked unanimous consent to vacate the roll call, and the gentleman objected. I spoke to him over there, or over here, and asked him not to object. I told him that it was only fair to the membership that the roll call be vacated, and he said that he was unwilling that it should be vacated, and later in the day I asked unanimous consent again. I did not say to the gentleman nor did I intimate to him that I would not renew my request that the roll call be vacated. If I had said to the gentleman that it was over for the day, I will say to him now that I would not have asked it at a later time. But I made no such statement to the gentleman, nor did I say anything to him in the conversation from which any man could draw the inference that I intended not to call up or ask for the unanimous consent during his absence. It is true that the gentleman was not on the floor when I made the request the last time, and I will say, Mr. Chairman, that it is so much easier to transact and expedite business in the absence of the gentleman from South Carolina than it is in his presence that no man could be blamed for submitting his request during the absence of the gentleman. If he wanted to object to it, he should have stayed here.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, I just rose for the purpose of expressing the hope that the gentlemen will not delay legislation by settling their grievances here when the Private Calendar, that we so seldom get an opportunity to take up, is under consideration. For the Lord's sake, let us get along with this important business.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I merely desire to ask the gentleman a question relating to the policy of the committee on this class of cases, in order that I may intelligently answer men who occasionally ask me to introduce such bills as these. My recollection is that in the first 10 years of my service in this House it was the invariable rule of the Committee on Military Affairs to report none of these bills under any circumstances. I am not quite clear what the policy after 1914, when I came back to this House, has been. I would like to ask the gentleman what the policy of the committee has been and what it will be in the future in regard to desertion cases.

Mr. CRAGO. I explained to the House the procedure of the committee. All bills are referred to a subcommittee. If the bill meets with the unanimous approval of the subcommittee it is reported back to the full committee, and if the full committee unanimously agrees to it some one is appointed to make a report. This class of cases has received favorable consideration, and they are cases where the man has had a year and a half or two or three years honorable service. There have been hundreds and hundreds of cases where sympathy dictated relief, but the committee did not think they were justified in giving relief.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is that to be the policy in the future? I understood the gentleman from Virginia to say that such cases would not ordinarily be considered.

Mr. CRAGO. That is true during the period of the war. We were not considering desertion cases during the war, for fear it might have some effect on the morale of the soldiers.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I understood that was to be the settled policy of the committee.

Mr. CRAGO. These are all bills considered one or two years ago.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. This question of desertion cases does not seem to be a new question at all with the subcommittee. Hundreds of cases passed by Congress gave relief to men who had been charged with desertion, and it did not seem to be right that any distinction should be made between men that became entitled to it virtually under the same circumstances. And so our committee has been reporting these cases of desertion where there were equitable grounds, although the men may have been shown to have had an honest service for two or three years. But when these cases were sent to the Secretary of War, as all these cases are, the Secretary of War made the request that there should be no further reports made on cases of this character. I prepared a letter and sent them to gentlemen interested in these cases.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Then it will be correct to say that now it is the policy of the committee to report no desertion cases?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. That is the standing policy of the committee.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

MARSHALL M. POOL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2492) to establish the military record of Marshall M. Pool.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause the name of Marshall M. Pool to be entered on the muster roll of the United States Army as captain of Illinois Volunteers under date of August 25, 1864, and to issue to said Marshall M. Pool an honorable discharge as captain of Illinois Volunteers and as aid-de-camp on the staff of Bvt. Maj. Gen. James H. Wilson, under date of April 23, 1865.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who introduced the bill, knows all about the personality of Mr. Pool. The thing that struck me forcibly as a member of the subcommittee on this bill was a letter from Gen. James H. Wilson. Gen. Wilson, as you all know, is probably one of the greatest living officers of the Civil War. He was also an officer in the Spanish-American War. He is said to have been probably the greatest engineer officer in the Civil War and has written one of the most interesting histories, not only of the Civil War but later of the Spanish-American War. He organized for the Army of the Potomac the Cavalry branch of the Army, and it is on the strength of that letter certifying to the services of Marshall M. Pool, reading between the lines, that I would take it for granted that Mr. Pool was a young man, who, in his eagerness to serve the Nation, did not go through the formality of securing a commission in the Federal Army. He was, however, commissioned by the governor of the State of Illinois and was ordered to report for duty at the headquarters of the military division of the Mississippi at Nashville, Tenn., and he did so report. Transportation was furnished him by the Army for two horses and one servant. Gen. Wilson certifies that he served on his staff in the month of November, 1864, as aid-de-camp. He participated in the Cavalry operations against Hood's army from that date until Hood was expelled from Middle Tennessee.

Capt. Pool then continued on my staff at the Cavalry camp of instruction at Gravelly Springs, Ala., till about the 20th of March, 1865, when operations began against Selma, Montgomery, West Point, and Macon, Ga. He participated in all the marching and fighting that was done during that campaign, ending in the capture of Jefferson Davis and various members of his cabinet. Capt. Pool left my staff about the 1st of May, 1865, when the war was entirely ended, and returned to his home in Illinois.

That in brief is about the service of Capt. Poole on the staff of Gen. Wilson, one of the most distinguished officers of the Civil War. Your committee thought it was only just and proper that he should be given a discharge from the service, having served as an officer of the United States Army.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the committee whether there are many instances of persons commissioned by the governors of the respective States who joined the Federal service but did not enlist in the Federal Army, similar to the case of Capt. Poole?

Mr. CRAGO. I have known of other cases where they have been given commissions later.

Mr. STAFFORD. What reason can the gentleman give for Mr. Poole not enlisting in the Regular Army but retaining a commission from the governor?

Mr. CRAGO. At that time not enough attention was given to the technical position in which it placed them. The governors of the States commissioned men to serve in the Federal Army and commissioned them as officers of the volunteer forces in those States.

Even as late as the Spanish-American War commissions issued to volunteer troops in that war were issued by the governors of States for Federal service, and men were simply mustered into the service of the United States by the officers of the company, and the entire company lining up and taking the oath of allegiance to the United States. This young man was commissioned just the same as any other officer, but he was assigned staff duty, and the matter of being mustered in had probably been overlooked, because he was not with any organization. If he had been with the First Illinois or any other organization, he would have gone out and held up his hand and been mustered in, and that would have been his commission, because the only one he would have would be the commission from the governor of the State. Not having been mustered in, he is not on the muster rolls of the Federal Government, but he did this service, and it is certified to by Gen. Wilson, and I think is deserving of consideration.

Mr. STAFFORD. He joined the Federal forces rather late in the war.

Mr. CRAGO. Yes; he was a very young man, and his father furnished him with his outfit, horses, and everything.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inquire whether under the phraseology of this bill he will be entitled to a pension dating back to 1865.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; because no back pensions ever date prior to the date of application.

Mr. STAFFORD. By this bill granting him an honorable discharge as captain of Illinois Volunteers, under date of April 23, 1865——

Mr. MANN. He is entitled to pay and they recommend that he be allowed pay for the time he served.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am more concerned about whether he would have a claim against the Government for a pension.

Mr. MANN. He would not have any claim.

Mr. FOSTER. Has he ever applied for a pension?

Mr. CRAGO. No.

Mr. MANN. If he has, it is not known to me. He would not have had any status for a pension.

Mr. FOSTER. Suppose he had made application for a pension and we should pass this legislation, what then?

Mr. MANN. This would not give it to him. I am not in favor of granting him back pension.

Mr. STAFFORD. No one would be in favor of granting him a pension to date back to 1865 under any circumstances.

Mr. MANN. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

MAJ. CHALMERS G. HALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3299) authorizing the President to reappoint Maj. Chalmers G. Hall, retired, to the active list of the Army.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, the facts in this case have left me just at the present time; but I want to call the attention of the House to the communication from the present Secretary of War dated January 17, 1918, in which he finds that Maj. Hall was not given a fair chance when he was mustered out of the Army. It seems that he had been sick and an operation had been performed upon him, and before he had recovered from that operation, which was performed by a medical officer of the Army, he was mustered out because of physical disability. I quote from the letter of the Secretary of War:

Maj. Hall protested against retirement and requested a delay of six months, to be then again examined to determine his fitness for promotion. This was denied him, but he was assured that if he fully recovered he could be returned to the active list under the law. The application of the law as applied to field officers had expired March 5, 1917. Maj. Hall accepted the action of the board under this misapprehension, and having recovered from his physical disability it seems evident that the retiring board erred in its findings of permanent disability. Maj. Hall was examined January 14 by a board of medical officers and was found physically fit to return to the active list. In view of these circumstances I recommend the passage of this bill.

Very respectfully, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER, Secretary of War.

In view of these circumstances, we think he is entitled to consideration.

Mr. MANN. When was he retired?

Mr. CRAGO. Some time in the year 1916.

Mr. MANN. Is he in the Army now?

Mr. CRAGO. I can not answer that. I will say frankly to the gentleman that the status of this gentleman has slipped my mind. I did not know this matter was coming up to-day.

Mr. MANN. Of course, he would have had an opportunity to get back during this war.

Mr. CRAGO. And I have no doubt that he did.

Mr. MANN. If he did, is it necessary to enact this legislation?

Mr. CRAGO. I would say, to put him back regularly, it is. Under this recommendation made in January, 1918, I think we ought to take action, because if he did go in, he would go in simply as a volunteer officer and would be mustered out. They have no authority to keep in men except Regular Army men, and this would put him in a position so that he could take his status as a Regular Army officer.

Mr. MANN. Here is what was in my mind. I do not see any objection to passing this bill if war had not occurred; but if he did not get back in the Army, to put him back now in the rank he would have had if he had remained in the Army, with the very large promotions, would not be right, I think. I do not know that it would give him anything above a colonel. Plainly it ought not to give him anything except an automatic promotion.

Mr. CRAGO. I suggest that it might be well to let this bill go through, and then we could thoroughly investigate matters before it was taken up in the Senate, before any action was taken upon it. I will say frankly that I do not know this, but I shall endeavor to find it out.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will not have any control. Maj. Hall, if he is around, will look after it himself. I am not going to object.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman from Illinois will remember we did in some Army bill some years ago make a provision returning to the active list officers retired if they were fit to return, but there was a date put upon it.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to letting him go back into the Army, even if we do not need him as an officer. I take it we do not, if he went in the Army during the war. If he declined to go into the Army during the war, it does not seem to me he ought to be retired now and give him the rank that he would have had if he had remained in the Army from the beginning.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to reappoint to the Cavalry Arm as an extra number, with such rank as he would have had if he had never been retired, Maj. Chalmers G. Hall, of the United States Army, retired.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

JENNIE M. HEATH.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10225) striking from the pension roll the name of Jennie M. Heath.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to strike from the pension roll the name of Jennie M. Heath, helpless and dependent child of Charles E. Heath, late of Company G, First Regiment Minnesota Volunteer Infantry, who is now pensioned by special act of Congress approved August 7, 1914.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think some little mention should be made of this unprecedented bill in the history of legislation in the Congress. I do not recall in my 14 years of service where we have ever separated any person from the pension roll of the Government. Here is a case, an exceptional case, one that will go down in the history as a cause celèbre, perhaps, where the Committee on Invalid Pensions recommends the separation of a pensioner who lately became married to a rich person. I suppose if the pension rolls were examined there would be many similar instances where pensions are payable to persons after their pensionable status is removed. I move, if there is no member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions who desires to do so, that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

THOMAS J. ROSE.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 925) for the relief of Thomas J. Rose.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers Thomas J. Rose, who was a private in Company H, Sixth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and a private in Company H, Forty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a private of Company H, Forty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, on the 11th day of November, 1862.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, in view of the remarks which have already been made concerning the other bills, I move you that the usual proviso be inserted at the end of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Before the gentleman moves the amendment and general debate is terminated thereby, I rise for recognition. I do not wish, however, to take the gentleman off of the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman?

Mr. CRAGO. I will gladly yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. I may be misinformed about this case, but the report, as I read it, shows that this soldier was pronounced fit for duty on November 11, 1862, and yet at that time he left the service. I understood from the statement of the gentleman from Virginia that it was the policy of the committee that they would not recommend any bills where the soldier left the service and really was a deserter.

Mr. CRAGO. The gentleman will notice, if he goes into this further, that what we are trying to help out here is really the supplementary service. If the gentleman will let me explain the bill, I will make my motion to amend a little bit later. This soldier did enlist in 1861 and served until September 9, 1862, having been reported in the meantime or pronounced fit for duty. The testimony shows that this soldier suffered with the disease for which he had been treated. He went to Pittsburgh, Pa., to visit a sister, and after partially recovering from said disability enlisted in the Navy at Pittsburgh, Pa., on August 25, 1864, for service on the Mississippi Squadron. The fact of his naval service is borne out by the records of the Navy Department, as follows:

That Thomas J. Rose enlisted in the United States Navy at Pittsburgh, Pa., August 25, 1864, to serve one year; served on the Grampus, Great Western, and Volunteer, and was discharged August 1, 1865, at Mound City, Ill.

So the two services combined make a good and faithful service of more than two years and a half. After his discharge from the service he went to Pittsburgh, and never went through the formality of securing an honorable discharge, but thought that since he was reinstated in the Navy that that would cure everything. The record has stood on that basis up to the present time. Now, I simply want to call attention to the fact that crept into this report from the correspondence that we have, and that is, namely, that the only brother of this soldier—George W. Rose—lost an arm at Antietam; that his father, Daniel Rose, was wounded in the Battle of the Wilderness; and that his mother, Susanna Rose, was a nurse in the Harewood General Hospital, Washington, D. C. This old gentleman has been an honored resident in the district represented to-day in Congress from our State by Mr. HEATON, of Pennsylvania, all these years, and we thought it was only a simple act of justice for the Government to give this man credit for those two services. He has an honorable discharge from the last service, and he wants to connect up the two of them. I, therefore, move to amend by adding the usual proviso at the end of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 12, after the word "sixty-two" insert "Provided, That no pension, bounty, or allowances shall accrue prior to the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

MARY J. LACEY.

The next bill in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8856) for the relief of Mary J. Lacey.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Mary J. Lacey, mother of William A. Stewart, late private, Company E, Fifth Regiment Maryland National Guard Infantry, who died on October 4, 1916, at Indio Ranch, El Paso, Tex., while in the service of the United States, shall be regarded as the duly designated beneficiary of the late Pvt. William A. Stewart, under the act approved May 11, 1908, as amended by the act approved March 3, 1909.

Mr. COADY. Mr. Chairman, I move that this bill be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland moves that the bill (H. R. 8856) be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

THOMAS G. ALLEN.

The next bill in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4610) to compensate Thomas G. Allen for injuries received while employed in the General Land Office of the United States and making an appropriation therefor.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Thomas G. Allen the sum of $3,000 for injuries received while employed in the United States General Land Office, Washington, D. C., December 27, 1915.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Committee amendment: Page 1, line 6, strike out "$3,000" and insert "$1,000 in full settlement of all claims against the Government."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be recognized in opposition to the bill. Unless the gentleman wishes to take the floor I will withhold asking for recognition at present.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a statement. This bill is for the relief of Thomas G. Allen, who was employed in the General Land Office of the United States. It seems while Mr. Allen was working in the line of his duty that some heavy bookcases, containing some large books, fell upon him. He was entirely covered up by this mass of stuff, and it required the work of about 15 persons for 30 minutes to remove the débris from him and take him out from under the things that had fallen upon him. Mr. Allen was in the hospital two or three months, and was considered to be in rather a serious condition. After two or three months he was discharged and returned to work.

I have seen this gentleman recently. This accident occurred about three years ago this month. He is still in an enfeebled condition, claims that he suffers very much from the injuries received on that occasion. He was receiving at the time the sum of $1,000. The bill provided that he should be paid the sum of $3,000, but the committee, after considering the matter, amended it by providing the payment of $1,000 in full settlement of all claims. That amounts to one year's salary. We feel under all the circumstances that this gentleman should be allowed that sum.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I will.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Has this claimant returned to take up his own work under the Government?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Yes. He went back to work there, but he was able to do only very light work. I do not remember that I asked him his age, but he must be 70 years of age.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Is he receiving the same salary now that he did before the injury?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I think he is receiving practically the same salary; yes, sir.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Then his loss, so far as money is concerned, was for being deprived of his salary during his absence in the hospital?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Yes, sir. Then, of course, he had to defray his doctor's bill, and the man has suffered a great deal through all these years.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I speak only of the money loss.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I think the monetary loss is what you say.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. He did not receive a salary while he was absent?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I do not think he was allowed the entire salary. I think, perhaps, he had 30 days' sick leave during that time.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Do you know if the custom of that department is if a man is injured in the service and it necessitates his absence from duty longer than the 30 days' leave that is given, that he is stricken from the roll and not permitted to draw any of the stipend?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I do not think he was stricken from the roll. I think he was allowed to continue in the employ of this department.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If there is any foundation for this claim, it would be in the idea that the Government was to blame for the injury and not the man himself, and under those circumstances, it seems to me, he ought not to have been deprived of his wages during the time he was in the hospital or unable to perform his work.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. It was held, I will say to the gentleman, that this man did not fall within the compensation act of 1908. Some of the employees of the Government when injured are compensated.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. We would have provided a fixed compensation under that act?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Yes, sir.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I was speaking of the burden resting on the Government to continue that man on the roll and pay him wages for the injury, which was the fault of the Government and not that of the man himself.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. It appeared clear to the committee that the injury was the fault of the Government and not of the man.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The amount of money allowed him, then—$1,000—is evidently small enough.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. We thought so.

Mr. FOSTER. How much would he get under the compensation act of 1908 if he received it under that law?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. About the amount, I think, the committee allowed.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the basis of the gentleman's statement? The gentleman is making some statements that are not supported by the report.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I do not understand.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is acquainted with the report. I know he does not do it intentionally.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I do not know what the gentleman means by that statement. I would like to have him say.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman said this man was out of work for several months.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi.. I did not say "several months."

Mr. STAFFORD. Two months?

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Something like that—two or three months.

Mr. STAFFORD. The report showed that he was confined to his bed only three weeks, and he was only disabled from performing his duty from December 27 to February 7.

Mr. FOSTER. He was able to do only a little work.

Mr. STAFFORD. Though the record does not show, and I believe I am not indulging in a wild assumption when I say that he is one of the old men connected with the Land Office who is carried on the rolls as a pensioner.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I will say to the gentleman that the records show he was incapacitated from regular work, and when he came back he was allowed to do very light work, about two months later. For quite a little time he was not in condition to do work of any moment at all. Therefore he was practically out of business, as I said, for two or three months.

Mr. FOSTER. As I understand, under the compensation law for a death they gave a year's salary. Many of them have been denied further compensation than the one year's salary, whatever it might be. This man was not killed, but went back to work to do something, at least, in the course of a few months. It does not seem to me that under that compensation law he would be entitled to a thousand dollars. I have not looked it up; I have forgotten about it. When I served on the Committee on Claims I used to be more familiar with the law than I am now. I do not remember, but it seems to me it would not be a thousand dollars.

Mr. MANN. Under the compensation act he would be paid only for the time he was absent.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes. As to these cases that did not come under the compensation act we have always settled them on the basis of the compensation act of 1908.

Mr. MANN. We have endeavored to settle them on the basis that they should not receive more than a year's pay, which was the utmost allowed by the compensation act.

Mr. FOSTER. That was for very severe injury or death.

Mr. MANN. Even then we paid it on the theory that we would not allow more than that, and we have allowed that in a good many cases where they would not have received it under the compensation act.

Mr. FOSTER. I know we investigated a number of very pitiable cases that excited the sympathy of every Member, but we did not go beyond one year's salary for a death.

Now, if this man was out but a few weeks or a few months and went back and received his salary in full, it seems to me we are doing more for him than we did for those in the past.

Mr. MANN. Of course.

Mr. FOSTER. And I do not think we ought to establish a precedent of this kind.

Mr. EDMONDS. I want to call attention to the fact that the committee has given him this $1,000 on account of the fact that he was permanently injured.

Mr. FOSTER. He is drawing a salary from the Government.

Mr. EDMONDS. Of course. He is permanently injured, and Secretary Lane states in his letter that he is of opinion that he should have some compensation.

Mr. FOSTER. He is drawing the same salary that he formerly received?

Mr. EDMONDS. I think he is.

Mr. FOSTER. It seems to me that giving him a thousand dollars is more than we have been doing in the past for others.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. It has been done time after time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the committee, as stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], based its action, as I understand it, on this language by the Secretary of the Interior:

> Mr. Allen was unable to return to his official duties until February 8, 1916, and he has not entirely recovered to this time from the injuries inflicted and will probably never be restored to his former physical condition.
>
> I am therefore of the opinion that Mr. Allen should be compensated for the injuries he sustained.

Like my friend from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER], I think that the compensation is excessive; I believed that $500 was maximum compensation, in view of the fact that he drew all of his wages. He lost none of his wages while he was out of the office for some time. When he came back he got his pay. I think $500 really is an excessive amount, but I was willing to give that amount. But in view of the fact that all my colleagues on the committee agreed to reduce the claim from $3,000 to $1,000 and all insisted on giving him a thousand dollars, I did not see fit to fight their action in the committee.

Mr. FOSTER. I am not sure that he ought to have anything.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, this is a claim to reimburse an old person, 74 years of age, for some slight injuries that occurred in the performance of his work, from no fault of his, I take it, although the report does not show that. I will concede that. And his injury came not through any negligence of the Government. He was in the filing room of the Land Office and some books and files fell down, which resulted, according to the certificate of the physician, in contusion of the abdomen and an abrasion of the knee. The accident occurred on December 27, 1916.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Nineteen hundred and fifteen.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; 1915. He was confined to bed for three weeks. He resumed his duties on February 8, 1916. He was receiving a salary of $1,200—a man 74 years of age. It is not a radical assumption that he was a pensioner—a clinger-on to the Government pay roll—and is to-day. There are many such men in all our departments. That is one of the great questions before the Government in the administration of its affairs—that we keep on the salary rolls men who are of no value in the administration of its affairs and pay them a salary of $1,200, or thereabouts, because we have no civil pension list. He returns to duty, and the only permanent injury, as disclosed by the report, is that he is nervous. A man suffers an abrasion of the knee.

I want to treat this man as he deserves to be treated, but if he were in private employment he would not have the nerve to ask any such amount as $3,000. He would be glad to receive his salary, such as he receives from the Government, and the expenses of his sickness and hospital charges. But no; he retains his position with the Government and makes a claim for $3,000 upon that statement. This superannuated employee was only out of the service for six weeks and confined to bed for only three weeks, and the only permanent injury is nervousness; the committee reports in favor of paying him $1,000.

I say we should not establish the precedent here to pay any of the Government employees when they are so slightly injured as this man is. There is another bill on the calendar substantially similar in extent, to pay a man $1,000.

I am going to be liberal. I am going, Mr. Chairman, to move—so that they can not say that I have no milk of human kindness toward the Government employees and toward this superannuated old employee—to reduce the amount of $1,000 to $250. We are pensioning him at $1,200 a year. He has not lost any salary at all. I do not believe that he should receive anything. With consummate nerve, suffering only from that slight injury, and the Government keeping him on the pay roll at $1,200, he comes here and asks for reimbursement to the extent of $3,000.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Is the gentleman giving evidence of his milk of human kindness by reducing this old man's claim from $1,000 to $250? Does not that indicate that the gentleman's milk of human kindness is considerably soured? [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. No. That is the kind of logic that the gentleman from Nebraska usually uses in this Chamber, because the gentleman from Nebraska has the reputation of pouring more bitter gall on the other Members of this Chamber than any other Member of this body.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be recognized, being a member of the committee, to speak on this question. Under the law this man is not entitled to a single dollar. Anything that is given him here is merely a bounty given by this Government. I quite agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] that the committee has been too liberal in passing upon this case. I do not think that a precedent should be set here to pay every man who gets injured unless he comes within the purview of the law. We have a law providing for the compensation of injured employees. To get compensation he should bring himself within the provisions of this statute. I do not think we should set a precedent out of the bounty of the people's money by paying every person who gets hurt.

As stated, this man was in bed only three weeks. He was 74 years of age at the time he was hurt. If he had been younger, he probably would not have been injured. Of course, he can not be condemned because he is old, but I take it that he was hurt primarily because he was old, and that if he had been a younger and more active man he would have gotten out of the way when the cases fell. I think $250 would be a maximum amount out of the bounty of the people's money, and I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin will be passed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin, the record shows that this man suffered more than from bruise of the knees. The doctor's certificate states that he suffered contusion of the abdomen, with shock and contusion of abdominal contents, contusion and abrasion of knees.

It is stated further that this man had become very nervous since the accident. It is not surprising that he should become so, because it is stated by the employees in that department that it required them, with the assistance of 15 or more men, 20 minutes to take him out from under the files and books which covered him up. I did not prepare this report, but it happens that there is nothing stated in it in regard to his present condition. Only a few days ago, the first time I ever saw the old gentleman, I did see him, and he was in the same condition that the doctor stated, to wit, he was very nervous. The old man is almost a nervous wreck. As I said a moment ago, it is not surprising that that condition should come upon him, covered up as he was for 20 minutes under these heavy books and file cases, suffering, not as the gentleman says, with some abrasions of the knees, but contusion of the abdomen, shock, and contusion of the abdominal contents.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that the House ought not to allow this old man so small a sum as $250. It is my judgment that he ought to be allowed a reasonable and decent sum or nothing at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The question first is on the committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the figures "$3,000" and insert "$1,000, in full settlement of all claims against the Government."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment. Strike out "$1,000" and insert "$250."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STAFFORD to the committee amendment: Strike out "$1,000" and insert "$250."

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment to the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 6 ayes and 27 noes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes had it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi and Mr. BLANTON as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 2, noes 58.

So the committee declined to rise.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Has the Chair declared that no quorum is present?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not.

Mr. MANN. The point of no quorum was made some time ago.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But the Chair has not declared that no quorum was present.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point of order, and I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the committee amendment by striking out "$1,000" and inserting "$500."

Mr. MANN. That amendment is not in order unless the other amendment is withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has declared the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin as not agreed to, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I understand this is acceptable to the chairman of the committee and his associates.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. The gentleman from Texas is mistaken. I told him to see the author of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I have seen him, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRODBECK] is willing to accept it.

Mr. BRODBECK. I am willing to accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 41, noes 13.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill as amended be reported back to the House with the recommendation that it pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi moves that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that as amended it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. W. E. CRAWFORD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2012) for the relief of Mrs. W. E. Crawford.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Mrs. W. E. Crawford the sum of $140.40 in full compensation for services rendered as auxiliary carrier of mails at Decatur, Ala., from February 28, 1914, to June 28, 1914.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I will make this explanation: This bill is to appropriate $140.40 to Mrs. Crawford for services rendered as auxiliary letter carrier. It is admitted by the Post Office Department that the services were rendered, and the amount is due and unpaid, but that for technical reasons the department did not see proper to pay the claim, because it was claimed that there was a civil-service register from which the postmaster should have selected some one to render this service. It is claimed by the Post Office Department that the postmaster knew that there was such a register and had been notified to make the selection from the register. It was claimed that the notice was given to him by the secretary of the Civil Service Commission. The postmaster says that he did not receive notice. The records fail to disclose any such notice to the postmaster, and even if the postmaster did have knowledge of it, Mrs. Crawford, who rendered the service, had no notice of it. I made this explanation before the committee at the last session of Congress, and the bill passed this House unanimously, but failed to pass the Senate for want of time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I recall the reading of the report, she was paid up to March 28, 1914.

Mr. ALMON. Up to the time it was claimed that the Civil Service secretary notified the postmaster to discontinue her services. The postmaster states that he had no such notice, and that Mrs. Crawford was continued in the service until June 28, 1914, at $1.50 a day.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was not the postmaster compensated at the time when he might have obtained a person from the civil-service register?

Mr. ALMON. She was paid up to the time the claim the civil-service secretary gave the notice to the postmaster; and while it appears there was a civil-service register, the postmaster states that he could not have gotten anyone to serve from that register if he had gotten the notice.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bill states that he was paid for services from February 28, 1914, to June 28, 1914. The Postmaster General's letter in the third paragraph from the end says:

In the settlement of the postmaster's accounts, after very careful consideration by this department and the Civil Service Commission of all the facts in the case, this department allowed the postmaster's claim up to March 28, 1914, the date on which the postmaster was given a clear understanding of the situation by the district civil-service secretary.

Mr. ALMON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. They allowed his claim up to March 28.

Mr. ALMON. I am asking for pay from February 28, 1914, to June 28, 1914.

Mr. STAFFORD. But he was allowed compensation, according to the Postmaster General, up to March 28, 1914, and I am rising to inquire whether the gentleman is not giving him more pay than he is entitled to, paying him for time for which he has already received compensation.

Mr. ALMON. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is surely some confusion here somewhere.

Mr. ALMON. The report says:

This bill is for the payment of $140.40 earned by Mrs. Crawford as temporary auxiliary carrier of the mails at Decatur, Ala., for February 28 to June 28, 1914.

That is in the report.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think this is a mathematical error. The bill itself provides for the payment for services from February 28, 1914, to June 28, 1914. I direct the attention of the chairman of the committee to the statement as contained in the Postmaster General's letter which I just read. There is some conflict there. You are paying him in addition to what he has already received compensation for.

Mr. ALMON. There may be a difference in date there, but there is no question about the amount.

Mr. STAFFORD. The record of the department shows that he was allowed compensation up to March 28, 1914. I go further and I read——

Mr. ALMON. I am only asking in the bill for payment after February 28.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know, but he already received compensation up to February 28.

Mr. ALMON. I see what the gentleman means now.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is a conflict there, whereby you are paying him money for the month for which he has already received compensation.

Mr. ALMON. The bill ought to be amended so as to make it March 28. The amount is correct. There is no question about that.

Mr. MANN. I think he was only paid up to February 28.

Mr. ALMON. That is the way my bill reads.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. On page 10 of the report the First Assistant Postmaster General, Mr. Roper, fixed the time from February 28 to June 28, 1914.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the gentleman is reading from a letter of date March 25, 1915, and I am reading from the latest expression by the department, February 5, 1916, on page 2 of the report, the first letter in the report.

I will continue reading to show that while this postmaster has no technical right for reimbursement after February 28, 1914, notwithstanding the department allowed him compensation up to March 28, 1914, and in support of that position I will continue the reading where I left off a minute ago:

Under a strict application of civil-service rules the postmaster's claim should not have been allowed beyond the date on which the eligible register was established, February 28, 1914, but because of his ignorance and misunderstanding of the rules the Civil Service Commission agreed to approve Mrs. Crawford's employment until the date mentioned above.

What was that date? Originally March 28, 1914. There was one month's compensation for which she has already received allowance. Originally, as the letter of the First Assistant points out, and which is supported by the position of the Postmaster General, he is technically entitled to no money after February 28, but the Post Office Department allowed him compensation up to March 28, 1914.

Mr. WELLING. But if the gentleman will continue reading, and read the next paragraph—

The amount stated in the bill is the amount disallowed in the postmaster's account.

So if there is any confusion in these dates it certainly does not go to the amount that the bill asks for of $140.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. The very next sentence below where the gentleman stopped reading shows that.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is a small matter; I went over it carefully some months ago and I gained the impression from my reading of the full report, which is of some 14 pages—I may have wasted a lot of time, perhaps, on the matter—that he was not entitled to that $140, and I base that upon the statement of the postmaster. This is a letter addressed by the First Assistant Postmaster, January 20, 1915:

I therefore ask that you suspend the small technicality of the law and authorize the payment of this amount; also that the amount already expended, $40.50, from February 27 to March 31, 1914, be paid. The total amount of these sums held up is $140.40.

That confirms what I said originally. The postmaster asks for compensation from February 28 up to June 28 of a total of $140. In that amount there was a claim for $40.50 from February 27 to March 31, and the Postmaster General states he has been allowed that up to March 28. On that basis you are giving her about $35 or $40 more than to which she is entitled.

Mr. ALMON. It will amount to $140.40, at $1.50 a day, for the time the gentleman claims.

Mr. STAFFORD. I read this very carefully, and I could not arrive at any other conclusion but that he had received this by reason of the courtesy of the Postmaster General.

Mr. ALMON. There is no mistake in the amount of the claim.

Mr. STAFFORD. From his own statement he says the total amount, February 28 to June 28, is $140.40. This amount, February 27 to March 31, was $40.50, and the total amount of those sums held up is $140.40. The Postmaster General claimed he receded from his original position and says, "We will pay you up to March 28, 1914."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, probably this claim will be allowed and paid, yet it involves quite an important general proposition. We have had a great many complaints on our side of the House that there has been quite a disregard of the civil-service law in many branches of the Government in recent days, months, and years. Many have been employed for duty, and let us assume they have performed the service, where the law provided they should not have been appointed. We have had complaints of that character. Now, here is a case where the Postmaster General reports—and there is no controversy about it—that the postmaster first ignorantly disregarding the civil-service law appointed his wife as a carrier of mail. She has been paid for the time while he was in ignorance. She was appointed when there was no civil-service register for the place. Afterwards a civil-service register was posted and the department says the postmaster was fully cognizant of the fact and of the law but he deliberately, according to the statement of Gen. Burleson, disregarded the law and continued the appointment of his wife, and—so far as I know there is no reason why he should not have appointed his wife to perform the service; maybe he could not have gotten anybody else to do it as well—deliberately disregarded the law. The Civil Service Commission after consideration of the case authorized the payment of the time while he was in ignorance but declined to authorize the payment of compensation after he knew better. The Postmaster General winds up his letter on the subject in the report on this bill in this way:

There is no question as to the performance of the service by Mrs. Crawford, but this department can not recommend the enactment of this bill because the postmaster persistently and knowingly violated the civil-service rules.

Now, the lady who performed the service was probably as well posted on the subject as her husband who made the appointment. Of course the service so performed would not have cost any less to have it performed by somebody else, but after all it is a question, where the service is required and performed and appointment has been made in flat violation of law, with a willful disregard of law, whether Congress should take special action to pay the person who has not only himself or herself disregarded the law, but whose superior making the appointment disregarded the law. Why should not anybody disregard the law in referenee to appointment if they are to be paid just the same as though the law had been complied with?

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, just another word. The statement of the Postmaster General that the postmaster had notice of the civil-service register is based upon the statement that the civil-service secretary had given the notice to the postmaster. There is nothing in the record, there is nothing furnished by the Post Office Department showing that the civil-service secretary gave the notice to the postmaster. The postmaster states positively that he did not have the notice. Now, if the postmaster had gotten the notice from the civil-service register then there would be something on which the Postmaster General could have based this statement, and if that notice was given by the civil-service secretary to the postmaster there ought to be some evidence of it, and some record of it should have gone into this hearing before the committee.

It is not in there, which corroborates the postmaster when he makes his statement that he did not get such a notice, and for that reason he continued Mrs. Crawford in the service. It is stated the lady who did this work was the wife of the postmaster. That is true, and his predecessor had his daughter in this service for many years. It is usual and customary down there. And besides that, there is no question but that her work was efficient and that she performed it faithfully and well. The hearings show that just before that time by the civil-service register that there were four or five on the register, and the postmaster was unable to get anyone of them to serve. Now, this same question was raised, and my good friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserved his objection when we had it up last Congress, and when I made this explanation he withdrew his objection, and I am quite sure he is not going to oppose the passage of the bill at this time.

Mr. MANN. I am not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman examined the record since I addressed the House as to the amount? I can not, after going over it again, find that I am in error in my position that she was paid this $40 from February 28 to March 28.

Mr. ALMON. No. I have been listening to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I have computed it at $1.50 a day for 93 days, which, of course, is $139.50. She evidently was paid for the extra month, but still has $139.50 under the bill.

Mr. ALMON. The statement shows that the auxiliary letter carrier was allowed $1.50 a day.

Mr. EDMONDS. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin to the fact that in the same letter the postmaster states the amount in the bill is the amount disallowed in the postmaster's account.

Mr. STAFFORD. After he had been given an allowance.

Mr. MANN. This claim is for 93 days.

Mr. ALMON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That would be from March 28 to June 28 and not from February 28. From February 28 to June 28 is four months.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the bill in the eighth line by striking out "February" and inserting in lieu thereof "March."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ALMON moves to amend, page 1, line 8, by striking out the word "February" and insert in lieu thereof the word "March."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALMON. I move that the bill be reported to the House as amended, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, may I ask unanimous consent that the committee take up out of order a bill, No. 144 (H. R. 8473), page 36? It is the only private bill I have introduced. It will take but a minute or two.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I object. I have a bill on the calendar.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I have one bill on the calendar, and it comes next.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlemen object.

IRA G. KILPATRICK AND GUY D. DILL.

The next bill in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8444) for the relief of Ira G. Kilpatrick and Guy D. Dill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the title of Ira G. Kilpatrick and Guy D. Dill, as tenants in common, in and to the west half of the southeast quarter of section 3, township 32 north, range 8 east, in the district of lands subject to sale at Fort Wayne, Ind., in Whitley County, Ind., as assignee from Jonathan Pearson, by conveyance be, and the same is hereby, quieted and confirmed, and patent therefor shall issue to the said Ira G. Kilpatrick and Guy D. Dill as tenants in common.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Committee amendment: After the word "common," in line 11, insert "upon payment to the United States of $1.25 per acre."

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Mr. Chairman, this bill is a bill to perfect the title for 80 acres of land held for something like over 50 years on a tax title. It was found rather a strange circumstance that they taxed the land, sold the tax title, then went upon it and improved it, and ditched it, and to-day the land is worth perhaps $50 or $60 an acre. The bill has passed the House once before, but too late to have action upon it in the Senate. It has been recommended by the committee and also by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question first arises on the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the motion made by the gentleman from Indiana to lay aside the bill H. R. 8444 as amended, with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bills back to the House with the recommendations of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. A motion is made by the gentleman from Mississippi that the committee do now rise and report the bills back to the House with the recommendation, in some instances, that the bills be laid on the table and, in other instances, that the bills, with and without sundry amendments, be passed.

Mr. MANN. Not all of them should pass. They should be reported back to the House, with the recommendations made by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is made by the gentleman from Mississippi. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration certain bills on the Private Calendar and had directed him to report the same back to the House, with the recommendation that as to some of them they be laid on the table, and that as to others, some with amendments and some without amendments, that they be passed.

The SPEAKER. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union reports that that committee has had under consideration sundry bills and has directed him to report the same back to the House, some with amendments and some without, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bills do pass, and three with the recommendation that they lie on the table. The Clerk will report the first of these bills.

STEAMSHIP "CALDERA."

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4988) to authorize the changing of the name of the steamship Caldera.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

COL. DAVID L. BRAINARD.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 979) for the promotion and retirement of Col. David L. Brainard, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will lie on the table, according to the recommendation of the committee.

There was no objection.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW NATIONS.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 329) referring certain claims against the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will lie on the table.

There was no objection.

MARY NEAF.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7715) for the relief of Mary Neaf.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HARRIET FISHER.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 855) for the relief of Harriet Fisher.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ALEXANDER F. M'COLLAM.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1423) for the relief of Alexander F. McCollam.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed

DAVID E. GRAY.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1607) for the relief of David E. Gray.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM M. WILSON.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2635) to authorize the issue of a patent to certan land in Alabama to William M. Wilson.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ALMA HARRIS.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4240) for the relief of Alma Harris.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS CAMPBELL.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1873) for the relief of Thomas Campbell, with amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES LYNCH.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1954) for the relief of Charles Lynch, with amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JEREMIAH STOVER.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 667) for the relief of Jeremiah Stover.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CLEMENT H. COLE.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3090) for the relief of Clement H. Cole, with amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MARSHALL POOL.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2492) to establish the military record of Marshall Pool.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MAJ. CHALMERS G. HALL.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3299) authorizing the President to reappoint Maj. Chalmers G. Hall, retired, to the active list of the Army.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

JENNIE M. HEATH.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10225) striking from the pension roll the name of Jennie M. Heath.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS J. ROSE.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 925) for the relief of Thomas J. Rose, with amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MARY J. LACEY.

The bill (H. R. 8856) for the relief of Mary J. Lacey, reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS G. ALLEN.

The bill (H. R. 4610) to compensate Thomas G. Allen for injuries received while employed in the General Land Office of the United States, and making an appropriation therefor, was reported from the Committee of the Whole with an amendment.

The amendment was agreed to and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

MRS. W. E. CRAWFORD.

The bill (H. R. 2012) for the relief of Mrs. W. E. Crawford was reported from the Committee of the Whole House with an amendment.

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

IRA G. KILPATRICK AND GUY D. DILL.

The bill (H. R. 8444) for the relief of Ira G. Kilpatrick and Guy D. Dill was reported from the Committee of the Whole with an amendment, the amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move to reconsider the votes whereby the several bills were passed and that that motion lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

SALE OF LANDS MISSOULA COUNTY, MONT.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9865) to authorize the sale of certain lands to school district No. 28, of Missoula, Mont.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to sell and convey to school district No. 28, of Missoula County, Mont., the southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 36, township 21 north, range 20 west, on the Flathead Indian Reservation, in Montana, or so much thereof as may be required, for public school purposes, under such terms and regulations as he may prescribe, at not less than its appraised value; and the net proceeds from the sale of said land shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Flathead Indians, to draw interest at the rate now provided by law, and to be used for the benefit of the Indians on the Flathead Indian Reservation: Provided, That the patent therefor shall contain the condition that Indian children residing in the said school district No. 28 shall at all times be admitted to the privilege of attendance and instruction on equality with white children.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBBINS. May I ask at what price these lands are to be sold? This is a quarter section?

Mr. EVANS. No; there is only about 10 acres of the land. The land was appraised by a commission and was turned over to the town of Ronan. But the town of Ronan can not turn it over to the school district, and there is no other way to make it available except by this legislation.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EVANS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MARTIN, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for 15 days on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 11709. An act granting the consent of Congress to Norman County, Minn., and Traill County, N. Dak., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday unanimous consent was given that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next. I ask unanimous consent to modify that so that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next, with the understanding that nothing will be done on Saturday except the filing of the report of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and then a motion to adjourn will be made immediately thereafter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to modify the order of yesterday that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet next Monday so that it will meet on Saturday next. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Saturday, December 21, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Department of Agriculture for the eradication of the potato wart (H. Doc. No. 1605); to the Committee on Agriculture and ordered to be printed without illustrations.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a tentative draft of a bill to prohibit intoxicating liquors and prostitution within the Canal Zone, and for other purposes (H. Doc. No. 1606); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Acting Secretary of State, transmitting copy of a dispatch from the American minister at Panama communicating a copy of the resolution adopted by the National Assembly of Panama on November 11 last, felicitating the Government of the United States and the Governments of the allies on the signature of the armistice on November 11, 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1607); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a statement of the expenditures in the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1608); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. BRUMBAUGH, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11579) to authorize the appointment of a board of engineers to make a preliminary location, survey, and plans for a canal connecting the waters of Lake Erie and the Ohio River on the line of the Miami & Erie Canal from Toledo to Cincinnati, Ohio, and from a point near Defiance, Ohio, to a point in the southerly end of Lake Michigan, and to estimate the cost thereof, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 875), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DENT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 877), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RAYBURN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13306) to authorize the payment of allotments out of the pay of enlisted men in certain cases in which these payments have been discontinued, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 876), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MONDELL: A bill (H. R. 13441) to authorize advances to the reclamation fund, and for the issue and disposal of certificates of indebtedness in reimbursement therefor; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GOULD: A bill (H. R. 13442) authorizing and providing for the purchase of land abroad for military cemeteries, and for their preservation and maintenance, in which to inter the remains of officers and enlisted men of the American Expeditionary Forces killed in battle or who have died abroad; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GREEN of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 13443) to provide for the organization of an army to be used abroad, known as the Army of Occupation, and the discharge of enlisted men in the military service not included in the Regular Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MOTT: A bill (H. R. 13444) to commission members and chief clerks of local and district draft boards; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WELTY: A bill (H. R. 13445) to provide for the registration and Americanization of aliens; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. MORIN: A bill (H. R. 13446) granting the consent of Congress to the county of Allegheny, Pa., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River at or near Sixteenth Street, in the city of Pittsburgh, county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13447) granting the consent of Congress to the county of Allegheny, Pa., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Allegheny River at or near Millvale Borough, in the county of Allegheny, in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH: A bill (H. R. 13448) to amend the act entitled "An act to extend temporarily the time for filing applications and fees and taking action in the United States Patent Office in favor of nations granting reciprocal rights to United States citizens," approved August 17, 1916; to the Committee on Patents.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13449) amending section 4904 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; to the Committee on Patents.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13450) amending chapter 143 of the act of March 3, 1883, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Patents.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BARKLEY: A bill (H. R. 13451) to pension Lettie A. Troutman, dependent mother of Charles Troutman, late of the United States Navy; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PETERS: A bill (H. R. 13452) granting an increase of pension to Elisha S. Perkins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. POLK: A bill (H. R. 13453) granting an increase of pension to George W. Shuck; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SELLS: A bill (H. R. 13454) granting a pension to Nancy Cook; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13455) granting a pension to William H. Hart; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13456) granting a pension to George W. Foust; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13457) granting a pension to David A. Turner; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SLEMP: A bill (H. R. 13458) granting a pension to Hiram Dillon; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH: A bill (H. R. 13459) for the relief of George Deitz; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. VOLSTEAD: A bill (H. R. 13460) granting a pension to Samuel S. Daniell; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WHITE of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 13461) granting a pension to Edward C. Crawford; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ESCH: Evidence to accompany H. R. 13408, granting a pension to Clark Sturdevant; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of A. H. Cohn (Inc.) and Slade, Tenney & Weadley, of Chicago, protesting against a discriminating tax on jewelry, and asking that all industries be taxed alike; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. RAKER: Resolution by military order of Loyal Legion of the United States, Commandery of the State of Illinois, requesting Representatives of the Lower House of Congress from State of Illinois to use their endeavors to have Senate bill 130, or the bill prepared by Congressman Raker, reported out that it may come to a vote; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 20, 1918.

(Legislative day of Sunday, December 15, 1918.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock noon, on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Jones, N. Mex.	Myers	Smoot
Bankhead	Jones, Wash.	New	Spencer
Culberson	Kellogg	Norris	Sterling
Curtis	Kendrick	Nugent	Swanson
Fernald	Kenyon	Page	Thomas
France	King	Penrose	Townsend
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Pittman	Trammell
Gay	La Follette	Poindexter	Underwood
Gerry	Lenroot	Pollock	Vardaman
Gronna	Lodge	Saulsbury	Walsh
Hale	McCumber	Shafroth	Warren
Harding	McKellar	Sheppard	Watson
Henderson	McLean	Simmons	Weeks
Hitchcock	Martin, Ky.	Smith, Ariz.
Johnson, Cal.	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.
Johnson, S. Dak.	Moses	Smith, S. C.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is necessarily absent on important business of the Senate.

Mr. STERLING. I desire to announce that Senators NELSON, OVERMAN, WOLCOTT, and REED are necessarily absent on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] is absent on account of illness in his family. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] are detained on important public business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

BUSINESS OF THE SENATE.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, I wish to state to the Senate, in fact I was requested to state to the Senate, that arrangements have been made for an adjournment for the holidays as soon as the revenue bill is passed; that is to say, if the bill is passed on Saturday or on Monday arrangements have been made to recess until the 2d day of January. Of course that would not be the case if we fail to pass the bill by Saturday night or at furthest by Monday.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

I notice in the Associated Press dispatch to the Washington Post this morning the following statement at the end of the dispatch on page 3:

> President Wilson continues to receive exhaustive reports of what is going on in Washington and the United States, and he has read the 21 points outlined by Senator LODGE in a speech in the Senate.

What particular form of misinformation has been given to the President or what particular form of misrepresentation of the President is implied in that statement I can not tell, but I do know exactly what the misrepresentation is so far as it affects me. I have made no speech in the Senate, and I have not outlined 21 points or any other number of points.

On the 10th of December I introduced a statement from the executive board of the National Committee of Patriotic Societies, representing 46 leading patriotic war organizations, and I asked that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. They were resolutions in the nature of a petition. It is needless to say here that we all introduce resolutions and petitions which may not represent our personal views at all, because it is the duty of a Senator to present petitions sent to him by his constituents whether he agrees with them or not. Those 21 points, many of which are excellent, were not mine nor did they represent my views. It represented the views of 46 patriotic war organizations. I hope to-morrow to speak, and then I shall give my own views in my own way. These resolutions included among them "international arbitration and league of nations as complement to the policy of national defense" and "the control of raw materials by the allies."

I do not think myself that the league of nations or any provision looking in that direction ought to be made a part of the peace with Germany. I feel very strongly it should be treated separately entirely. As to the control of raw materials by the allies and the United States, I have never heard of such a proposition except in this way.

As I said, Mr. President, everybody knows that we all present petitions and resolutions which do not represent in the slightest degree our own opinions. That it is well known here is shown by an article printed in the New York World, which speaks about this matter and the interpretation given it abroad, and says:

> The newspapers began gravely discussing "Senator Lodge's statement of peace terms." He promptly and properly explains that the communication he offered did not represent his personal views.

I stated that to the press some days ago, and it is known, as that shows, to the American press; and now comes back this thing from Paris, I have no doubt misrepresenting the President, utterly misrepresenting me.

This is not a time, Mr. President, for such misrepresentations to be made. This subject is too important, the utterances here in the Senate carry too much weight for such misrepresentation.

I am told it was said that some newspaper correspondent in New York sent it out that I was going to advocate these 21 points. Of course, that is pure misrepresentation and invention.

Mr. President, it is an illustration of the inaccuracy, to use no harsher word, of the reports which we receive from Paris and which Paris receives from us. To such opinions as correspondents choose to put out I have no objection, but no responsible press association has any right to misrepresent facts in this great debate now going on.

I desired to make this explanation and show the utter falsity of what I have quoted, and I hope that the great press association which committed the error will correct it in Paris.

FREEDOM FOR GREEKS.

Mr. SMOOT. I have a telegram from the chairman of an organization of Greek people in the State of Utah, and with it the request of the organization to have it printed in the RECORD. I ask that that may be done.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRICE, UTAH, December 19, 1918.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Kindly present the following resolution to the United States Senate and House of Representatives:

We, 2,000 law-abiding American citizens of Greek descent, residing in Carbon County, Utah, by resolution appeal to the honorable House of Representatives of the United States of America for liberty and unity for the Greek Nationals, all Grecian people residing in Thrace, Asia Minor, Epirus, and the Ægean Islands, who have suffered for 450 years under barbarous Turks. The majority of said territories are Greek. There are in the Vilayets of Konstantinopolis and Adrianopolis 800,000 Greeks, having 658 schools, 1,500 teachers, and 80,000 pupils; North Epirus and Koritsa, 222,000 Greeks, 275 schools, 386 teachers, and 13,000 pupils; Ægean Islands, 105,000 Grecks. All of said population is looking for the great assistance of the United States of America, and depending on the honorable House of Representatives of the United States, whose platform forever is liberty and freedom for all people who are suffering as slaves. We are begging you to protect our brothers there, appealing to our great President, Hon. Woodrow Wilson, to obtain liberty and unity for these long-suffering Grecian people.

STYLIAN STAES, Chairman.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 10225. An act striking from the pension roll the name of Jennie M. Heath, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

H. R. 667. An act for the relief of Jeremiah Stover;
H. R. 925. An act for the relief of Thomas J. Rose;
H. R. 1954. An act for the relief of Charles Lynch;
H. R. 2492. An act to establish the military record of Marshall M. Pool;
H. R. 3090. An act for the relief of Clement H. Cole;
H. R. 7715. An act for the relief of Mary Neaf; and
H. R. 8856. An act for the relief of Mary J. Lacey.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

H. R. 855. An act for the relief of Harriet Fisher;
H. R. 1423. An act for the relief of Alexander F. McCollam;
H. R. 2635. An act to authorize the issue of a patent to certain land in Alabama to William M. Wilson;
H. R. 4240. An act for the relief of Alma Harris;
H. R. 8444. An act for the relief of Ira G. Kilpatrick and Guy D. Dill; and
H. R. 9865. An act to authorize the sale of certain lands to school district No. 28, of Missoula County, Mont.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

H. R. 2012. An act for the relief of Mrs. W. E. Crawford; and
H. R. 4610. An act to compensate Thomas G. Allen for injuries received while employed in the General Land Office of the United States and making an appropriation therefor.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

H. R. 1607. An act for the relief of David E. Gray; and
H. R. 1873. An act for the relief of Thomas Campbell.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3299) authorizing the President to reappoint Maj. Chalmers G. Hall, retired, to the active list of the Army.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 667. An act for the relief of Jeremiah Stover;
H. R. 855. An act for the relief of Harriet Fisher;
H. R. 925. An act for the relief of Thomas J. Rose;
H. R. 1423. An act for the relief of Alexander F. McCollam;
H. R. 1607. An act for the relief of David E. Gray;
H. R. 1873. An act for the relief of Thomas Campbell;
H. R. 1954. An act for the relief of Charles Lynch;
H. R. 2012. An act for the relief of Mrs. W. E. Crawford;
H. R. 2492. An act to establish the military record of Marshall M. Pool;
H. R. 2635. An act to authorize the issue of a patent to certain land in Alabama to William M. Wilson;
H. R. 3090. An act for the relief of Clement H. Cole;
H. R. 4240. An act for the relief of Alma Harris;
H. R. 4610. An act to compensate Thomas G. Allen for injuries received while employed in the General Land Office of the United States, and making an appropriation therefor;
H. R. 7715. An act for the relief of Mary Neaf;
H. R. 8444. An act for the relief of Ira G. Kilpatrick and Guy D. Dill;
H. R. 8856. An act for the relief of Mary J. Lacey;
H. R. 9865. An act to authorize the sale of certain lands to school district No. 28, of Missoula County, Mont.; and
H. R. 10225. An act striking from the pension roll the name of Jennie M. Heath.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 11709) granting the consent of Congress to Norman County, Minn., and Traill County, N. Dak., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Boston, Mass., praying for the submission of a Federal suffrage amendment to the legislature of the several States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented memorials of the Olympia Theaters (Inc.) and sundry other motion-picture theaters in the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against any increase in the tax on admission to theaters and also against the taxation of motion-picture films, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the County Galway Men's Benevolent Association, of Greater Boston, of Local Division No. 9, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Weymouth; of Local Division No. 6, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Gardner; and of Local Division No. 14, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Brighton, all in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the freedom of Ireland, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of the Cadillac (Mich.) city schools, and a petition of teachers and board members of the public schools of Charlotte, Mich., praying for the creation of a department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

SHIP CONSTRUCTION (S. DOC. NO. 315).

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to report a resolution from the Committee on Commerce. It is to print a report from the Shipping Board in pursuance of a resolution passed by the Senate on November 21, 1918. The report should have been ordered printed when it was received by the Senate, but it was simply referred to the Commerce Committee, and that committee desires that it be printed. I therefore report this resolution in connection with it and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 391) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the communication from the acting chairman of the United States Shipping Board, transmitting, in response to a Senate resolution of November 21, 1918, information relative to existing contracts for ship construction, the cost of such construction, in both private and Government shipyards, be printed as a Senate document.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HITCHCOCK:

A bill (S. 5213) to amend the act approved April 18, 1918, to give indemnity for damages caused by American forces abroad; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TOWNSEND:

A bill (S. 5214) granting a pension to William Meyers (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MARTIN of Virginia:

A bill (S. 5215) granting a pension to Floyd B. Daugherty; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 5216) granting a pension to Nellie White (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill which provides for the amendment of the act governing the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. Several similar bills are before the Finance Committee, and I think this one should also be referred to that committee. I have before me a statement in explanation of the bill which has been made by a very practical insurance man, and I believe that it will be of service to the committee. I ask that the bill and accompanying statement be printed in the RECORD without reading, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (S. 5217) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance at the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and amended October 6, 1917, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That article 4, section 400, of House bill 5723, approved October 6, 1917, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 400. That in order to give to every commissioned officer and enlisted man and to every member of the Army Corps (female) and of the Navy Nurse Corps (female) when employed in active service under the War Department or Navy Department greater protection for themselves and their dependents than is provided in Article III, the United States, upon application to the bureau and without medical examination, shall grant insurance against the death or total permanent disability of any such person in any multiple of $500, and not less than $1,000 or more than $10,000, upon the payment of the premiums as hereinafter provided.

"A grace of 31 days shall be granted for the payment of premiums, during which time the insurance shall continue in force; but in the event of the death of the insured during said period the overdue premium shall be deducted from the amount payable.

"The insurance certificate or policy may be reinstated by the insured at any time within six months after the expiration of the 31 days of grace, upon application in writing to the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, and without medical examination, upon payment of all arrears, with interest thereon, not to exceed 6 per cent per annum."

This amendment to take effect as of November 11, 1918.

The accompanying statement was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

There is a very important matter which should be taken up in regard to the United States Government war-risk insurance.

Millions of Americans are now engaged in the military and naval service of the Government, and most of these men have taken out what is known as war-risk insurance. The great bulk of this insurance is kept in force by the payment to the Government of a small amount of money each month, and these payments are generally deducted from the pay of the soldiers and sailors, thus keeping the insurance in force by this automatic method of deducting the amount which is due monthly from the monthly pay.

When the war is over and the armies are disbanded, the pay of the soldier or sailor will cease and the Government will have no funds due those who carry insurance from which to deduct the amounts payable for the insurance.

As a practical insurance man I know that a very large number of the soldiers will fail to pay the premiums which are due in order to keep the insurance in force and it will lapse. Many of those who are insured do not know where to send the money to keep the insurance in force; there are many others who do not realize the great value of the Government insurance; they do not know that they can keep the insurance in force by the payment of small monthly premiums for a period of five years after the war, and that within this five-year period they have the privilege of converting the insurance into regular old-line contracts at net rates without medical examination; that is, that they can secure from the Government a regular policy on the ordinary 10, 15, or 20 payment life plan, or can apply for a policy on the endowment plan. These policies will contain the regular paid-up extended insurance and cash-surrender values.

Something should be done to inform every soldier as to just how he can keep the insurance from lapsing; just where he may pay the premium and the amount of premium; and a campaign should be conducted to post every soldier and sailor as to the great value of this insurance.

As a suggestion, I think a law should be introduced into Congress extending the time for the payment of premiums for six months after the armies are disbanded and allowing every soldier to reinstate his policy within the six-month period without medical examination, so that they all really have an opportunity to secure the benefits of this protection.

It will be the most natural thing in the world for most of the men now engaged in the military and naval service of the country, as soon as demobilization takes place, to start for their homes. The great war will be over; their thoughts will be entirely centered upon seeing the home folks; they will not think of insurance, and I do not know of any provision in the law which will prevent the policies, or, rather, certificates of insurance, from lapsing in the event that the monthly payments are not made.

The Government war-risk insurance not only supplies what is generally known as life insurance but also supplies disability insurance at the same time. The proceeds of the insurance are nonattachable for debt, and the cost to the insured is very low. In fact, the Government is only requiring the insured to pay the theoretical mortality rate in peace times on the term plan without making any expense charge, without charging anything for the disability hazard, and without making any charge for the increased hazard due to war.

Many of the soldiers and sailors will return in impaired physical condition, so that they would not be able to pass a medical examination, and would thus be debarred from getting life insurance anywhere else. These men who are fighting the battles of our country should be given every opportunity to keep this insurance in force, and surely no party would deny them this right.

I have met officers in both the Army and Navy of the United States who had a very vague idea of all of the advantages and privileges contained in the war-risk insurance law, and if this is so in the case of many commissioned officers it will probably be more general in the case of privates and noncommissioned officers.

The certificates of war-risk insurance issued by the United States Government contain the following clauses: "Subject to the payment of the premium required"; "subject to the provisions of the acts of March and October and of any amendments thereto and all regulations thereunder."

MINING CLAIMS IN ALASKA.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Territories. This joint resolution is in lieu of the one I introduced a few days ago covering the same subject, and I think it covers the situation much better.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 198) to suspend the doing of assessment work on mining claims in Alaska for the years 1917, 1918, 1919, and 1920, and extending to that Territory the provisions of public resolution No. 10, Sixty-fifth Congress, approved July 17, 1917, and public resolution No. 12, Sixty-fifth Congress, approved October 5, 1917, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). The Chair will inquire of the Senator from Washington whether joint resolutions of this character do not properly belong in the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. JONES of Washington. This measure relates particularly to Alaska, and therefore should go to the Committee on Territories.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has the Senator any precedent for that request?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think all measures which relate solely to Alaska go to the Committee on Territories. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico submitted six amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. KIRBY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

COMMITTEE ON AMERICANIZATION.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I ask that the report of the Committee on Americanization for the State of New Hampshire relative to the teaching of the English language in public, parochial, and other private schools be referred to the Committee on Printing with a view to having it printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ALLOTMENTS TO FAMILIES OF SOLDIERS.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I have received a great many complaints because of the failures and delays in the payment of allotments to the wives and dependents of enlisted men. I appreciate the fact that there is a great deal of work connected with the payment of these allotments on the part of the War Risk Insurance Bureau, but it would seem that an allotment having been made, and a payment having once been made on that allotment, there is little excuse then for subsequent delays and failures in making the payments.

I have a letter here received from the chairman of the local board for the county of Minnehaha, in my State, and I ask unanimous consent that the communication may be read to the Senate. It occurs to me that the War Risk Insurance Bureau, or perhaps better, the Treasury and War Departments themselves, as well as the country, should know something not only of the inconvenience but of the actual suffering caused the wives and dependents of soldiers because of the failure to pay the allotments on time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to reading the letter?

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall not object, but after the letter is read I shall ask for the regular order.

The Secretary read as follows:

SIOUX FALLS, S. DAK., December 17, 1918.

HON. THOMAS STERLING,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The following are a few instances of nearly a hundred cases of similar kind that have come to the knowledge of the board. It appears to this board that the way these allotments have been handled is a disgrace to the American Nation, the memory of which will remain with the returned soldier as long as he lives.

A lady came into the board office carrying two children aged 2 and 4 years. She asked the board to obtain her allotments and allowance for her, stating that her husband had been in the Army six months and she had received one check only from the War-Risk Insurance Bureau. She had a few hens and had traded a dozen eggs that day for a bottle of milk and a loaf of bread, and that was all they had to eat. Her children were both sick. One of the children had spasms the night before; she thought it would die but did not have enough money to notify a physician.

The board, out of their own pockets, furnished her with some money to buy food and medicine and sent her to a physician, who prescribed free of charge. Her case was then referred to the Red Cross, and afterwards she was taken care of.

Another woman appeared before the board with four small children. Her husband had felt it his duty to enlist in the Army. He had been gone since last May. In July she had received one allotment and had received no more up to the present time. Her husband had made arrangements; with her allotment and with the money he left her she would be able to support herself without any assistance.

Owing to the fact that her allotments did not come, she had reached the point where she could not furnish food for her children or fuel to keep them warm, so she asked the board if we could not hasten her allotment. Her case was then turned over to the Red Cross, and they furnished her support.

Another instance: A mother has three sons in the service and two small children. Each of her boys is making allotment to her. She received one allotment of $25 several months ago and has never received another one. When she reported she was without coal; her children were suffering from the cold, both from lack of fuel and the lack of proper winter clothing. The Red Cross has furnished her with the necessities of life, awaiting the action of the War-Risk Insurance Bureau.

In another case the woman came to us, telling us that her husband had been in the war for months; that they had been able to accumulate sufficient furniture to make a home; that she had been obliged to go to a hospital for an operation. Due to this, she was unable to work; due to the operation at the hospital, she would have to wear a cast for a year or more. So she had been obliged to eat up her furniture until she had eaten up all except the bed, a small oil stove, and a few cheap dishes. When she reached the point where she had no more furniture, she applied to the local board to see if they could not get her allotment for her.

These are a few cases which are typical of about 100 cases which we have had brought to our attention in this county, and we wish to say that we are certainly ashamed of the portion of the Government which handles the allotments of war widows.

Yours, truly,

D. L. McKINNEY,
Chairman Local Board, Minnehaha County.

THE REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I realize the importance of promptly passing the pending bill, and I shall not delay the Senate a great while in submitting some remarks which I have thought the Senate ought to hear.

I realize that it is extremely difficult to get the Senate to consider provisions of such a bill as this independently of the recommendations of the committee, and under ordinary circumstances, involving only ordinary questions, I should feel like voting for a bill recommended by the committee in its entirety, but this bill proposes to raise such an enormous sum of money by taxation that I believe Senators, although not members of the committee, are justified in studying its provisions. Moreover, I believe that it is the duty of a member of the committee who has been devoting a number of weeks to the exclusive study of the provisions of such a bill as this, to give to the Senate the benefit of that study and to let his views be known. I shall not take a great while in giving to the Senate some thoughts which I think the Senate ought to have, and which I believe the Senate will want to have. I shall discuss the matter just as briefly and as concisely as I can. I hope to conclude before Senators feel that they must retire to the lunchroom.

I think it is important that we get a perspective of what this legislation means and what the war has made necessary in the way of finances. This revenue legislation is a principal part of the system for providing revenues for carrying on the war. The war began in April, 1917, during the latter part of the fiscal year 1917, the year ending June 30 of last year; but even during that period the finances of the country felt the effects of the war, and, of course, during the whole of the last fiscal year, ending June 30, 1918. It is feeling the effects of it now, and its effects will undoubtedly extend to the end of the fiscal year 1920. So we have in mind these four years of war financing, and I am sure it will be interesting to Senators to get a short view of what has been done.

For the first fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, the total expenditures of the Government were $2,026,678,446.74. The receipts from revenue for that year were $1,124,000,000. That leaves a deficit of $902,000,000—I will give the figures in round numbers—but of that sum we loaned to the allies prior to June 30 of last year $885,000,000, leaving a net debt increase of only $17,000,000.

In the next fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, the total expenditures were $13,000,000,000 plus, and the revenues were over $4,000,000,000, leaving a debt incurred of $9,000,000,000, but of this we loaned to the allies $4,739,000,000 plus, leaving a net debt increase of only $4,276,000,000.

For the year ending June 30, 1919, it is estimated by the Treasury Department that the expenditures of the Treasury for the year will be $18,000,000,000. We have already loaned during the fiscal year to our allies about one and three-fourths billion dollars. It is thought that the loans to the allies will be increased to at least $3,000,000,000 up to June 30, 1919.

We expect to raise from revenue during the fiscal year by this bill $6,000,000,000. There are other miscellaneous receipts. During the fiscal year 1917 the miscellaneous receipts were $500,000,000, or half a billion. Laying aside the increase which will come from miscellaneous sources, we shall raise in revenue during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, $6,500,000,000, which will leave a deficit of $8,500,000,000.

No official estimate has been made of the expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920; but if we take the estimate of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and place the figure at $10,000,000,000——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, did the Senator from New Mexico say that no official estimate has been made of the expenditures for 1920?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I so stated.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is mistaken. The official estimates are in the reports of the Secretary of the Treasury, and they are, in round figures, $6,250,000,000.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I understood that those were the estimates for appropriations.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; the estimates for appropriations are $7,440,000,000.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then the estimates unquestionably are those just stated by the chairman of the committee; but the Senator from Utah made some statements regarding expenditures which I am inclined to believe will increase the estimates which have been made by the Treasury Department.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from New Mexico that my estimate and that of the department for the regular appropriations amounted to $7,443,000,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is for the appropriations.

Mr. SMOOT. That is to be appropriated for, and then there are the additional amounts for contracts, both obligated and unobligated, on the part of the Government, which must be filled and which can not be canceled. That will drop into the year of 1920, making $10,000,000,000.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I think that the Senate has gotten these various views as to probable expenditures, and while my personal belief is that the expenditures for the fiscal year 1920 will not reach $10,000,000,000, I thought it wise to assume some such expenditure as that. I think the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] included in his estimate some "hangovers" from the expenditures on war contracts which the Treasury Department expected to be included in the $18,000,000,000, and for that reason I am inclined to believe that the actual expenditures will not reach $10,000,000,000; but when I made the remark awhile ago that there was no official estimate I rather intended to be understood by that as saying that there was no official estimate of such a definite character that we could absolutely rely upon it. Assuming, however, $10,000,000,000 to be the sum of expenditures for the fiscal year 1920, we expect to raise in revenue under this bill $4,000,000,000. The miscellaneous receipts, if not increased, would amount to $500,000,000 more, making four and a half billion dollars, leaving a deficit for the fiscal year 1920 of five and a half billion dollars. But we know already of very large sums of money which are going to be derived through the salvage of purchases for the war. What they shall amount to, of course, we can not definitely state at this time, although I should not be surprised to see something in the neighborhood of $2,000,000,000 realized from that source.

But laying that aside, and assuming a deficit of five and a half billion dollars, then we have this showing: During this war for the first fiscal year a deficit of $17,000,000; for the second fiscal year, $4,276,000,000; for the third fiscal year, $8,500,000,000; and for the fourth fiscal year, $5,500,000,000, making a total, in round numbers, of $18,000,000,000. My belief is that through the processes to which reference has just been made the total deficit will be around $15,000,000,000 or $16,000,000,000, not, of course, taking into consideration any sums which have been loaned to our allies. The credits arranged in that connection already amount to about eight and a quarter billion dollars, and probably will reach $10,000,000,000 altogether, which will give us at the conclusion of the war an increase in our bonded indebtedness of about $25,000,000,000 or $26,000,000,000.

I think it will be interesting to know how our financing has compared with that of other countries. Italy and France, of course, have raised by taxation a very small sum, relatively speaking, for the purposes of the war, I think, amounting to about 12 or 15 per cent only of their expenditures. England has done a little better than that; her receipts from taxation have amounted to about 24 per cent of her total indebtedness; but, excluding the amounts of money which England has loaned to the allies, she has raised about one-third of the cost of the war by taxation.

Mr. SMOOT. A little less than 30 per cent.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am putting it at the maximum. It is claimed that it is less than a third, and even less than 30 per cent.

The United States has gone further than that. For the first fiscal year of the war, which was only a partial year, the United States raised in revenue within 1½ per cent of the total cost of the war, including the loans to the allies. For the second fiscal year the amount raised by taxation amounted to just about 50 per cent of the total war expenditures; for the third fiscal year, if the estimates which have been made here are accepted of $18,000,000,000 of expenditure and only $3,000,000,000 loaned to the allies, then we are paying by taxation, even for this fiscal year, at the peak of war financing, 43⅓ per cent of the expenditures; and for the fiscal year 1920, if we assume expenditures of $10,000,000,000 and raise only four and a half billion dollars, and exclude all receipts from salvage, we are still paying 45 per cent of the cost of the war by taxation. Taking that all together, if you sum up the total expenditures of the war and deduct the amount of money loaned to the allies, you will find that, taking the four-year period, the United States through taxation has raised just about 50 per cent of the cost of the war.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds let me ask him if he has made any computation of the percentage, including the advances to our allies?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have not those figures here, except in this way: I have got the amount, but I have not figured out the percentages.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, the percentages, however, which the Senator gives are intended to be percentages exclusive of loans to the allies——

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator said that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Treating them not as an expenditure, but as an investment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes, sir.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator so stated.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that I have been making the same character of investigation that he has made, and I think that his statement is substantially correct.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GERRY. There is no country in the world in the history of war finance that has ever accomplished such an enormous feat as that.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am sure the Senator from Rhode Island is absolutely correct. To my mind, and so far as my information goes, this is unprecedented in the history of the world.

This signifies something more, and something which, I think, will cause a feeling of pride to glow in the breast of every American citizen. These billions of dollars we have been talking about—these twenty-five or twenty-six billions of dollars—do not represent mere currency, but every dollar which has been expended thus far represents commodities, the production of the people of this country. We do not shoot dollars. We have not loaned dollars to our allies. What we have done has been to ship material and commodities, and use those; and when we consider the net income of the United States prior to this war, we get a view of what the country has actually done.

Statisticians tell us that prior to our entry into the war the annual total net income of the United States which was used for new investments was only five or six billions of dollars; so during this war we have not only put into it an amount equal to the total net income of the country prior to the war, but during the first full year of the war we put into it more than twice what was the net income of the country prior to the war, and we are proposing to put into it this fiscal year more than three times what was the total net income of the country prior to the war.

Mr. President, I believe that this thought should encourage the people of this country. It should make them proud of this country. They should realize the latent resources of the country; and I want to say here and now that the brain which visualized the latent resources and the latent energy of this country has furnished the world one of the most monumental conceptions in all history. This enormously increased production has been accomplished by the people of this country. With their patriotism aroused, realizing the enormity of the task which we had undertaken, they were willing to make the necessary sacrifices. It was necessary to divert from peaceful pursuits the vast energy of this country. It is estimated now, I believe, that we have 15,000,000 men engaged in war pursuits who ordinarily are engaged in peace pursuits; and we have done all this with 4,000,000 of the flower of our manhood taken from productive pursuits. I think that the country, for all time to come, will not forget the enormous service that the people of this country—the workers of this country—have performed in this great time of stress.

Mr. President, while that represents production, yet in order to get the production it was necessary in the first place to obtain the money; and this, of course, was raised only from two sources—from bond issues and from taxation. We all know the history of the sale of bonds; and I suppose it may be generally known also that when we entered the war and it became known that our allies would call on us for assistance, the bankers of the country considered the situation, and the opinion was expressed by some eminent bankers that the utmost this country could loan to our allies was four or five hundred millions of dollars. When we came to the first sale of liberty bonds, the bankers of this country predicted that we could not sell over $1,000,000,000 of bonds; that the country would not take them. But some master brain conceived the notion that through arousing the patriotism of this country it was willing to accept more than a billion dollars in bonds, and the result of the recent experience is that in one bond issue there was sold nearly $7,000,000,000 of bonds, or more by far than the total net income of the country for a year prior to the war.

Mr. President, the rest of this money has been raised by taxes, and it is interesting to keep in mind the amount of taxes which has been collected. During the first full year we collected over $4,000,000,000; during this year we contemplate raising six and one-half billions of dollars; and I might say that before the signing of the armistice it was contemplated to raise $8,000,000,000, and a bill which would have done substantially that was passed by the other House and came to the Senate and the Senate committee. It is stated by the chairman that it passed the House without a dissenting vote. When it came here and was referred to the Senate Finance Committee, that committee went to work to prepare a bill which would raise the $8,000,000,000, and had it practically prepared when the armistice was signed, and then we found that the total expenditures during the fiscal year probably would be $18,000,000,000 instead of twenty-four.

This money, raised by taxes, has come from two general sources, the principal source being a tax upon incomes and excess profits, the remainder being a tax which I might term an indirect tax upon incomes, because in the final analysis all taxes must be paid from income. It may not have come in just immediately, but it is income; so, when we talk about consumption taxes, that is only an indirect tax upon incomes.

In addition to this tax which we have raised, measured in dollars, there has been an additional burden upon the people of this country which is unmeasured. The high cost of living by reason of the war has been in effect a tax upon the small incomes of the country. It has been a tax equivalent, I believe, to about 100 per cent, and when people talk about the rich paying the expenses of this war, and assert that we are levying undue tribute upon wealth, I wish to remind them that there has been a hundred per cent tax upon the salaried people of this country during the war. This indirect tax upon incomes, through high living expenses and through the taxes which we have levied upon so-called luxuries or semi-necessaries, has been principally borne by those with the smaller incomes of this country. And so when we come to consider the equities of this bill we should not overlook the tremendous fact that while we make exemptions which seemingly exempt a very great class from the burdens of this war, they have not really been exempted, but in my judgment have been taxed far more, relatively, than any other class of people in this country. Unfortunately it can not be avoided.

Mr. President, we are still proposing to levy taxes upon consumption. We have six titles in this bill practically devoted to that end. I might in the first place, however, refer to the position of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], in which he proposed that a 1 per cent tax should be levied upon all sales of commodities to be used; and he suggested that that ought to be done so as to create a sinking fund for this war debt. I want to say to the Senator from Utah that the people of this country will never consent that the sinking fund shall be taken out of the mouths of the people of this country. If we are going to create a sinking fund—as we must—then, I say, that that sinking fund should be created in an equitable manner, and not imposed upon the poverty and stress and necessities of the country.

There is another title in this bill, Title IV, which is an inheritance tax. The bill as it came to us from the House contained an estate tax. We have changed this to an inheritance tax, and I think it might very properly be called a special form of income tax, because we impose the tax upon the income from the estate which the beneficiary receives. That tax, while some have opposed it in its entirety, is in my belief a just tax. Moreover, I believe that it might very well be increased, and I think that would be one prolific source for obtaining revenue with which to create a sinking fund.

I shall not refer to these consumption taxes or indirect taxes, such as the tax on transportation, the tax on the manufacture of commodities, and so forth. There is no general principle involved, further than that, in my humble judgment, such taxes should be made just as light as possible. But the committee has considered that matter. It is a mere weighing of opinion as to the amount of such taxes; and while I would like to have a great many of them reduced, and while I think I can show before I conclude where we could reasonably bring about some reduction of such taxes, yet in the main I am sure the Senate is going to accept such taxes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to say there—because I think it probably ought to go in his statement right at this point—that the committee has reduced the inheritance or estate tax as imposed by the House to a point that will leave a large margin to the States for taxing inheritances; and I think I ought further to suggest to the Senator, with reference to the tax on transportation, that it is one of the few taxes that the committee has left right where it is in the present law without making any change whatever.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am sure that Senators are glad to hear the remark of the chairman of the committee. Some members of the committee contended that there should be no tax upon inheritances or estates; that all of that should be left to the States; but, for one, I was unable to see any distinction between that and an income tax. There is no reason why the States should not raise their revenue by income taxes; and if we are going to turn over to the States any one source of revenue I do not see why it could not be argued that anyone might be left out of this bill, and have few sources remaining.

Much the greater portion of this revenue, however, has been raised by a direct tax upon incomes; and when we realize that the taxes upon incomes and profits for this fiscal year will amount to $4,600,000,000 we must also realize the importance of imposing those taxes in an equitable and a fair way.

At this juncture I want to call the attention of the Senate to a question which has been discussed at considerable length in the press of the country. I call attention to a discussion of it published in a newspaper in my own State and dated December 9. If that article had appeared during the campaign I should not have referred to it, I should have considered it only as an argument for the purposes of the campaign; but the article appears on December 9 of this year, and I think it well that some excerpts from it may be submitted to the Senate. This article which I read was published and appeared in the Albuquerque Morning Journal of Monday, December 9, of this year. It says:

A gentleman, evidently a lawyer from one of the Southern States, asks the Journal for proof that southern Congressmen who controlled war legislation were guilty of shifting from the South its just proportion of the taxation burdens necessary for the support of the war.

The Journal has complied. The communication by Mr. Sinnons—is printed elsewhere and the figures asked by him are appended. They are taken from official publications of the present administration, therefore should not be questioned by any Democrat.

Not Simmons but Sinnons—

The following States, which constitute what is commonly called the solid South—Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Tennessee, and Arkansas—have wealth estimated by the United States census approximately three times as great as that of the State of Ohio. Yet the State of Ohio paid in taxes for support of the war $75,000,000 more than was paid by all of these Southern States combined. In other words, the revenue bills were so juggled that $16,000,000,000 of wealth in 11 Southern States was left untouched by the tax collector.

And then similar figures are given and comparisons made as to the wealth of Pennsylvania, New York, and other States. It then proceeds as follows:

The southern people did not ask KITCHIN and SIMMONS and Carter Glass and the rest of the southern chairmen of the great committees to exempt them from their just burdens of carrying on the war. They responded readily and patriotically to the draft. They volunteered before the draft. The sons of South Carolina and Texas have fought and died side by side with the sons of Massachusetts and New York.

It speaks of some southern Senators who were left out in the last election.

But both KITCHIN and SIMMONS come back from North Carolina, and Tom Watson was elected to Congress from Georgia.

The article containing the data from which those statements were made was copied from the New York Sun. The date of the article in the Sun I do not know, but the New York Sun is considered one of the reputable papers of this country, and I may say, parenthetically, that the Albuquerque Journal is also ordinarily an ably edited paper. Yet this comes as published in the New York Sun where these various comparisons were made. In quoting the article from the New York Sun the editor of this paper, in parentheses, as an introduction to the quoted article, uses this language:

The Journal always tries to accommodate its readers; therefore it reprints the summary which recently appeared in the New York Sun, the figures of which were taken from the latest reports of the United States as to the wealth of the various States, and from the report of the Treasury Department of the revenues collected from each State for war purposes. As to the statesmen responsible, first of all were Congressman KITCHIN, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, who openly stated several times that the bill was being framed so that the burden would fall on the Northern States, and Senator SIMMONS, chairman of the Finance Committee. Along with these men were all the Congressmen and Senators from the Southern States, except one from Virginia and two from Tennessee.

Why there should have been excluded the one from Virginia and two from Tennessee I am sure I do not know.

After giving a comparison of the estimated wealth of the States, and then the taxes paid, the article from the Sun continues:

Even the border States could not escape the discrimination which the Kitchins exercised against everybody and everything beyond the sacred soil which they were saving from taxes. Missouri, with less wealth than Texas, must pay twice the taxes paid by Texas. Maryland, with less wealth than Georgia, must pay two and a half times more taxes.

Thus the very records of the United States Government show that the Kitchin taxes were deliberately and malignantly rigged so that the solid South oligarchy might not merely sponge, but prey, upon the taxpayers whom KITCHIN had threatened north of Mason and Dixon's line.

Mr. President, it seems to me that such statements are "the limit." The assumption that this Congress, the Senate and the House, are controlled by Members from the so-called solid South is absolutely preposterous. To assume that the Finance Committee is dominated by a few Senators from the South, and to assume likewise that the honored Senators from the South who are members of the committee would so stultify their position as to bring about this alleged unsavory situation, is beyond belief of anyone, and it is likewise beyond the conception of any just being why any such argument as this should be used in this connection in these papers.

I will recite the names of the members of the Finance Committee of the Senate, for the benefit of the RECORD and in the order in which they appear:

SIMMONS, of North Carolina, chairman.
WILLIAMS, of Mississippi.
SMITH, of Georgia.
THOMAS, of Colorado.
GORE, of Oklahoma.
JONES, of New Mexico.
GERRY, of Rhode Island.
LEWIS, of Illinois.
NUGENT, of Idaho.
ROBINSON, of Arkansas.
And of the minority:
PENROSE, of Pennsylvania.
LODGE, of Massachusetts.
MCCUMBER, of North Dakota.
SMOOT, of Utah.
LA FOLLETTE, of Wisconsin.
TOWNSEND, of Michigan.
DILLINGHAM, of Vermont.

Of all these 17 Senators only 4 come from the solid South—SIMMONS, WILLIAMS, SMITH, and ROBINSON—and to try to have the people of the country believe that those four men could, if they so desired, control that committee and accomplish this outrageous purpose is beyond the conception of man. Anyone who knows those four men likewise knows that such a thought never entered the heart of any of them.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In doing so I simply want to develop the fact that I do not think the Senator has given the South the entire credit it deserves. I am not one who finds fault with the preponderance of the South in shaping this and other important legislation. It has always been so whenever the Democrats have been in control of Congress. The dominating strength of that party, which is in the South, has taken charge of the most important part of its legislation. I find no fault with it. The South controls the Democratic Party. But where was the Senator from New Mexico born?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I was born in the great State of Tennessee.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Exactly. And I think the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] was born in Mississippi. When you trace back to its final analysis the geographical strength of the South on this committee you get a pretty fairly generous representation on all committees, and, I think, rather a high-minded representation.

I want to observe in the Senator's time that from the chairman of that committee, the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], to the humblest member of the committee, I do not think the members could have been more patriotic or country loving in their purpose than they have been, even if they had all come from the great industrial centers which I in part represent.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I felt sure that the Senator would make the latter remark.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] was from Georgia. I do not care where Senator THOMAS was born; he is an able, honorable, clean, high-minded man, and brings to the discharge of every public duty an intelligence and patriotism and independence most rare. I hope the Senator is not seriously annoyed over the suggestion that the prepondering influence in congressional legislation is from the South. If it is good legislation and the best that can be devised under the present strained conditions, I do not care where it comes from, and the fact that our party has practically indorsed it in the House as well as here does not leave very much party ground to stand on.

Of course, some of us would have pursued a different course. I would revive the old protective duties which have carried us safely through many severe trials and which I hope to see reestablished under favorable conditions; but this can not be done now, and we must bow to present conditions.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, while this subject is under consideration I ask leave to simply make this statement: There never has been at any meeting when I was there a party vote except on one question. That was the general scheme of the reduction of taxation for 1920. On the items of the bill we split in that committee right straight along without reference to party.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I thank the Senator from Georgia for making that statement, because I was going to try to convey the same idea. I might say not only that with reference to this bill, but with reference to the bill which passed Congress last year, during the deliberations of the committee last year there was not a party vote on any question.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to interrupt just to say I think the record shows as to two distinguished Senators in this body, one representing the State of Washington in part and a Republican in politics, Senator MILES POINDEXTER, and the other Senator, A. A. JONES, representing the State of New Mexico in part, and a Democrat in politics, that both these distinguished gentlemen were born in Tennessee—the first in Memphis and the second in Union City—and Tennessee is very proud of them in every sense of the word. She is proud of the splendid records of both of these progressive and successful sons of hers, without regard to their politics. They are living evidences of Tennessee's ability to produce the best that is in either party.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator let me state one circumstance, which seems to conclude this question, the fact that the bill we are now considering was adopted by the House without a dissenting vote. If there can be anything more conclusive than that in rebuttal of the suggestion that the bill is sectional, I can not conceive of it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, of course, as to the statement made in the newspaper article about the tax paid, it is probably true that the figures were taken from the official document of the Government, but with respect to the amount of the tax annually arising from each State, the figures themselves as stated in the article do not represent the fact. I read from the official document this short paragraph. It says:

> The following table shows the net income and tax reported in the returns by States. The figures do not represent, however, what may be called the geographical distribution of income. They are based upon the returns filed in each State. An individual files his income-tax return in the State in which he resides and a corporation files its income-tax return in the State in which its principal place of business is located. Consequently income reported by an individual or corporation in one State may have been derived from sources in other States. Furthermore, under the provision for the collection of tax at the source the collecting agent filed the return in the State in which the agent was located, regardless of the residence of the person earning the income.

So the figures given do not reflect the inference which is drawn from them. But the vital point in this connection is overlooked. If we were taxing the wealth of the country by a direct tax upon the land and the property itself, then I submit that the inference drawn in these articles might very well be drawn, but it was to escape that kind of taxation, to escape even a tax based upon population, that the Constitution of the United States was amended, and that is why we have the right now to levy a tax upon incomes. There is no contention here that a man in Georgia or North Carolina does not pay the same tax upon an equal income as a citizen of New York. There is no claim that there is any discrimination between the corporation of Georgia or New York. The only deducible result of the argument upon the facts stated is that there should not be an income tax at all.

Mr. President, to my mind the amendment of the Constitution providing for an income tax has enabled the country to carry on this war, and without it we should have met with disaster. The horror of the situation, if any, arises not from the fact that these taxes are sectional in their nature but from the fact that the incomes of the country have become sectionalized so far as location is concerned, through transportation, the control of finances, and the tariffs of the country. Consider for a moment that for the last 50 or 60 years one section of the country has been gathering into its borders the liquid wealth, the liquid assets of the country, and that much the greater part of all the railroads and ocean transportation lines have been made tributary to New York. Until the passage of the Federal reserve act all the finances of the country centered in New York, and we all know that the tariffs, whether for good or ill, have resulted in fostering manufacturing industries which are in great preponderance located in the so-called Northern States.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NUGENT in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. As the Senator has spoken of the South's, and especially of North Carolina's, contribution to the taxes of the Federal Government under the revenue bills which have heretofore been passed, I desire to say that under the present revenue law for the last fiscal year, imposing an aggregate taxation of $4,000,000,000, North Carolina paid into the Federal Treasury something over $50,000,000—$54,000,000, I think; but, at any rate, over $50,000,000. If you will eliminate the great States of New York, Pennsylvania, and Illinois, which because of their great population and wealth are not to be compared in this matter with the other States, North Carolina paid as much as did the average State in this Union.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I should like to state on that point that Pennsylvania paid one-sixth of all the revenues received by the Government.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. And I may add right in that connection, not for the purpose of minimizing the Senator's statement, but for the purpose of emphasizing the fallacy of the position which I have been trying to combat, that the State of New York pays more than three times as much in taxes as does the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, if the Wall Street district, which really belongs to the whole country, is eliminated, Pennsylvania pays a much larger amount of taxes than does the whole State of New York.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator from New Mexico will pardon me, the incomes of the Wall Street taxpayers are not made in New York nor in Wall Street, but they are made in every quarter of this country.

Mr. PENROSE. I have stated that that district admittedly belongs to the whole country.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But if we take the apparent tax paid by that State, simply from the returns made in the State, the facts would seem to be as suggested by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]. However, the distinction made by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] is undoubtedly a just and a correct one, and it also equally applies to other States in the Union.

Mr. PENROSE. But it applies preeminently and particularly to the Wall Street district.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am glad this colloquy has taken place, for it emphasizes more than any expression of my own could have done that these references to the sectionalizing of our revenue bills are without any foundation, and to my mind they are an imposition upon the intelligent reading public of this country.

Mr. President, I am now reaching a point where I feel that I must present to the Senate some views not in accord with the action of the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the folowing Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Henderson	Myers	Simmons
Baird	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Smith, Mich.
Beckham	Jones, Wash.	Norris	Smoot
Borah	Kendrick	Nugent	Spencer
Curtis	Kenyon	Overman	Sterling
Dillingham	King	Page	Swanson
Fernald	La Follette	Penrose	Townsend
Fletcher	Lenroot	Phelan	Trammell
France	McKellar	Pittman	Vardaman
Frelinghuysen	McLean	Poindexter	Walsh
Gerry	McNary	Pollock	Warren
Gronna	Martin, Ky.	Pomerene	Watson
Hale	Martin, Va.	Saulsbury	Wolcott
Hardwick	Moses	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The Senator from New Mexico will proceed.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I have now reached the point where I feel like presenting to the Senate some facts regarding the operation of this bill which, to my mind, can be demonstrated as tending or promising to work very great injustices. In a revenue measure of this magnitude I think the prime question should be, Have we made the measure as equitable as we can? Does the burden bear equally upon all shoulders of the same width? I do not believe I shall have any difficulty in pointing out to the Senate at least some instances wherein the bill will not operate in the way that it should.

Unfortunately we can not treat all incomes just alike; I mean we can not tax them in the same manner. There are individual incomes, incomes from partnerships, and incomes from corporations. The theoretically accurate way would be to have all incomes, all earnings from whatever source derived and to whatever use put, taxed precisely in the same way; and I may say that during the Civil War, with some exceptions, when a tax was put upon corporate incomes, those incomes were taxed as the property of individuals, and all of the earnings of the corporations were considered as divided for the purposes of taxation among the stockholders, precisely in the same way as we are proposing to do now in the case of partners. We say that individuals and partnerships shall be taxed alike. We require the individual partner to make out his return and include in it all of his share of the earnings of the partnership, whether distributed or taken out of the business or not; but we do not do that with corporations; and from that very fact a most confusing and perplexing problem is presented. I do not believe that anybody can ever present a scheme which will bring about exact justice in this situation, but I do say that Senators should exert themselves in every conceivable way to bring about exact justice as nearly as may be.

As between individuals and members of partnerships there is comparative equality in this bill, but there are three exceptions even there. In the first place, this bill exempts from its operations taxes upon interest derived from State and municipal bonds, and of course some of the income from Federal bonds is exempt from taxation. That makes an inequality. If a man who is confronted with high surtaxes sees fit to do so, he can invest his money in State and municipal bonds and the few bonds of the General Government which are exempt from all taxation. There is a great inducement under this bill for that to be done.

The total taxes under this bill in the higher brackets reach 77 per cent of the income, and in the case of a man with an income of $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 or $4,000,000, every dollar of new income means that he must give 77 per cent of it to the Government. If he can invest it in State and municipal bonds, he can afford to carry those bonds for three or four years without getting any interest, rather than add to his income for the taxable year and pay 77 per cent of it in taxes.

What is the result of this? If you will examine the financial columns of the press you will find that the securities market for State and municipal bonds is on the boom. You will also see advertisements of State and municipal bonds calling attention especially to the fact that they are exempt from income taxes and that they are, therefore, an advantageous investment for men of great wealth. You will find further that those bonds are sold to-day upon a rate of interest not exceeding 4½ per cent, and that while those State and municipal bonds bearing 4½ per cent sell at par, even the bonds of the Federal Government bearing 4¼ per cent are to-day discounted almost 5 per cent.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. PENROSE. I simply wish to take this opportunity, with the permission of the Senator, to remind him that in the Committee on Finance I favored taxing these bonds. I think they ought to be taxed, and I believe that a very large proportion of the financial leaders of Pennsylvania, particularly in the western part of the State, also think that these bonds ought to be taxed.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am glad the Senator has made that statement.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator what, in his judgment, would be the effect of a tax upon the salability of municipal bonds? Would it not have the effect to increase the rate of interest on the bonds themselves, and in that way interfere with the financing of municipalities?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator has asked the question.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, before the Senator goes on I should like also to remark that my colleague [Mr. KNOX] addressed the Senate on the constitutionality of a tax on these bonds and advocated that they should be taxed.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, replying to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], the Senator is quite right in intimating that exempting such bonds from taxation will make them bring a higher price in the market. To state it in another way, it would mean that you could sell State or municipal bonds at par bearing a lower rate of interest than if the interest on them were subjected to the taxes which we are now seeking to impose. But, Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Ohio if under all the circumstances he thinks such bonds should be exempted? There are in this country already about $6,000,000,000 of such securities. It would simply enable six or seven billion dollars of the liquid wealth of this country which is subject to these very high surtaxes to bury itself in such bonds.

I am sure the Senator voted for the bill providing for the second and third liberty loans. The Senator will observe that in that bill we exempted the income from Federal bonds only from the normal income tax; we did not exempt them from any surtax; but finally we came to the conclusion that in order to help float the fourth liberty loan, which was so tremendous, the act ought to be amended in some respects. So we provided that a limited amount of Federal bonds, not exceeding $30,000, might be exempt from surtaxes for a period of only two years after the war. And why did we do it? Because the Senate objected on principle to hiding the wealth of this country where it could not be reached to pay the expenses of the Government.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator has addressed his argument to me, and perfectly properly, because I asked the question. I am not entirely clear as to what is the best policy in connection with this matter, but I do know the effect that the taxing of bonds has had in my own State.

For instance, years ago our Constitution provided, and had so provided for many years, that all municipal, county, educational, and township bonds should be made taxable the same as any other credit or security under our Constitution. The result was that when there was a sale of public bonds for a public purpose these bonds were not purchased by Ohioans, or, if purchased, were not held by Ohioans, but they were immediately taken up by the Massachusetts and New England savings banks. Later on we amended our Constitution and provided that these public bonds should not be made taxable. The result of this was that our bonds sold in Ohio for a very much better figure, or, to put it in another way, at a lower rate of interest. Our farmers and people of small means would take up these bonds, and it had the effect of bringing into circulation a lot of money which otherwise would have been kept in private safe-deposit boxes, or in old socks, as we sometimes say in Ohio.

Now, it seems to me that it is hardly a fair proposition to say that six billions of bonds will escape taxation. That is true in one sense of the word; but these six billions of bonds, if they are not made taxable, will be sold at a lower rate of interest, and the income which the holders will have from those bonds will be less than if it was taxed. That is the other side of the proposition.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator has very concisely presented the arguments which I have heard for the other side.

Mr. POMERENE. And if I may add this further, in a great industrial State like my own, where these towns and cities are increasing in population almost fabulously, they are having serious difficulty now to finance themselves, and my fear has been that if you make these bonds taxable you are going to increase the difficulties which the cities and towns of the States would have.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The fact remains, however, that the Federal Government has deemed it wise not to exempt from surtaxes its own bonds; and if it is not wise to exempt from surtaxes its own bonds, is it wise to permit the incomes from State and municipal bonds to escape taxation? It has been thought by the Federal Government that we could afford to pay a higher rate of interest at the present time rather than to permit its bonds, bearing any reasonable rate of interest, to be purchased and hoarded by the extremely wealthy persons of this country.

To illustrate to the Senator just what it means, it is only necessary to call attention to the fact that to-day in the market the 3½ per cent bonds of the Federal Government are selling for nearly par, while the 4¼ per cent bonds of the Federal Government are selling at about a 5 per cent discount. That means that for the present, at least, the Government is paying in interest about 22 per cent for the privilege of making the interest from these bonds ultimately subject to taxation. If the Government is willing to pay that price in order to prevent what appears to be a grave evil, shall we give this privilege of exemption to those who hold the bonds of the States and the municipalities to-day, and not only for those that are already issued but for the billions of such bonds that may be issued in the future?

The House in its bill did not tax bonds presently issued, but it did make subject to taxation the incomes from State and municipal bonds which may be issued in the future. I think that the House might very well have imposed a tax upon all incomes, in the language of the amendment to the Constitution, "from whatever source derived." I believe that is what we should do, but the least we can do is to sustain the provision which was inserted in the bill by the House. The House bill provided that the taxes should be imposed only upon the interest derived from future issues of such bonds, and that the interest from such future issues upon holdings not in excess of $5,000 should be exempt.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, does the House bill apply to bonds already issued or only to future bonds?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Only to the future issues.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does not the Senator think that is thoroughly objectionable? If we are going to tax these bonds at all, ought not the tax to apply to all of the bonds, rather than to those issued in the future alone?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I think it should certainly apply to all issued in the future; and, so far as I am concerned, I think it should apply to the income from all those issued in the past. The bonds issued in the past were sold upon the market in competition with all other securities, and to exempt them from these taxes now is to present to the present holders of those bonds an increase in value of at least 20 per cent.

Mr. President, there is one other injustice which I think exists with respect to the taxation as between individuals. Under this bill, if an individual or a corporation or a partnership owns the building in which he does business he is not charged as income with the rental value of it; and if his competitor does not own the building in which he does business and has to rent it, the competitor is permitted to charge off of his income the amount which he must pay for rent. I think that is fair, but when you come down to the other class of taxpayers who are not engaged in a business we find that they are not put on the same equal basis. If the head of a family owns his home he is not charged with the reasonable rental value of that home as a part of his income, but if he does not own a home he is not permitted to deduct from his taxable income the rent which he must pay for a home. I believe that is a gross injustice to the man who is unable to own a home and who pays rent. I think he, with the same income from his daily wage or from his salary ought to be put on precisely the same level as the man who owns a home, and therefore I offer an amendment providing that the head of a family who pays rent may deduct from his taxable income the amount of rent actually paid by him within the taxable year, but not exceeding $1,000.

These special taxes in the bill operate unequally. They tax some industries and not others, but how to remedy that maze of confusion I confess I have no definite plan. We have to raise some money from some such sources.

Now, with respect to corporations: I do not believe the tax as between corporations bears equally upon all, or as nearly equally as it can be made to bear. All incomes of corporations, of course, are taxed with what we call a normal tax of 12 per cent. That bears equally upon all; but we have provided in this bill what we call a war excess-profits tax. There are two exemptions from the amount of income which is subject to this tax. There is what is called the war-profits tax, but it is not. It is a plan which simply provides that a man may deduct from his income 10 per cent of his invested capital, and on the excess above the 10 per cent he pays a tax of 80 per cent. The other plan is that he may deduct 8 per cent of his invested capital.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, has not the Senator got that wrong? I understood the Senator to say that from his war profits he is entitled to deduct only 10 per cent.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator is quite right; I did not cover the whole field. That blanket exemption of 10 per cent applies to new corporations and those which had no prewar income and to the additional capital which the taxpayer has brought into his business subsequent to the prewar period.

Mr. SIMMONS. And as to the whole business it is only a minimum tax. The minimum is 10 per cent as to the whole business; but the deduction as to the whole business is the full amount of the average prewar earnings.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator is right as to concerns which had prewar incomes. It operates, however—and it was the operation that I had in my mind, and that caused the confusion in the expression—so that the old businesses of the country, the businesses largely capitalized, are exempted as to 10 per cent, whether they earned it before the war or not; and in effect as to a great mass of industries in this country it simply operates as a 10 per cent deduction and a tax of 80 per cent on the amount above that. But if the concern was fortunate enough prior to the war to earn more than 10 per cent, then it is exempt, whatever it earns, from this 80 per cent tax, but not less than 10 per cent.

The next is an exemption of 8 per cent of the invested capital. On the earnings above 8 per cent and not above 20 per cent of the invested capital the tax is 30 per cent. Above 20 per cent of the invested capital the tax is 60 per cent; and virtually, as stated in the bill as it came from the House, the tax is levied on the income measured by whichever one of these plans will produce the most revenue.

Mr. President, to my mind that kind of a tax is inequitable; it is harmful; it is going to destroy the future progress and development of this country. It destroys individual initiative. It absolutely prevents the investment of money in some of the most essential industries of this country. It takes no reckoning of the difference between safe investments and hazardous investments. In my State to-day the merchants and the stockmen are paying 8 and 10 per cent interest on money with which to do business, and to give them only an exemption of the interest rate is simply to discourage and deter business in such circumstances. We all know that prior to the war, and even now, the stocks of some of the old, stabilized industries of the country were and are selling upon less than a 6 per cent basis. Why? Because the experience of years has made the investment absolutely safe. To put money into a concern of that sort is almost equivalent to buying a Government bond; and so the man who does it, who knows that his money is safely invested, is willing to derive only the limited rate of interest. But take the man who is going into a new industry, where the field is unexplored, whether it be in one section of the country or the other. Will he put his money into the enterprise if he can only hope to earn a paltry 8 per cent? Take it in the mining industry. Will a man venture a dollar in a mine if he can only hope to retain 8 or 10 per cent of his earnings? The reason of it is that there is more than a dollar put into the ground and lost for every dollar that is taken out of the ground; and unless there is some unusual reward no man will take the risk of venturing into such an industry.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. Has the Senator taken into account a very important fact, to my mind, in that connection? He has referred to the 8 per cent interest charge paid in his country. Has he taken into account the fact that in addition to the flat exemption of 8 per cent upon the invested capital the 8 per cent interest that the operator he has spoken of who borrows money has to pay is also allowed him as an additional exemption? That is to say, before his income is assessed any interest charge that he may have paid is deducted.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator is quite right; and just in that connection I want to observe that every one of these old, stablized concerns which borrows money has a right to deduct the amount which it pays in interest when we come to consider its income. So in that respect the one industry is on precisely the same plane as the other.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask the Senator to take into account another fact. Where there is a new industry we allow a flat exemption of 10 per cent, but we allow the new industry also the privilege of what we call the earnings of representative concerns—that is to say, we give the new business, whatever it represents, what is allowed to representative concerns engaged in like or similar business.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator is quite right.

Mr. SIMMONS. That enlarges the deduction which a new concern is entitled to.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It helps out in that individual case, and it is one of the remedial measures in the bill to which I intended to call attention a little later. The bill as it comes from the House makes a far greater inequality than the bill now presented to the Senate, and for such remedial measures as the Senator from North Carolina has now referred to I think many concerns in the country will be exceedingly grateful. But that does not alter the fact that there are still inequities and injustices in the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to say, and the Senator is entitled to have it said, that in my judgment when the Senate committee changed the House proposition, which was to allow new business an exemption of only 10 per cent and allowed it the exemption that representative concerns were entitled to, one of the most important relief measures that the Senate committee has provided was incorporated in the bill, and I want to add that it was incorporated into the bill at the instance of the Senator from New Mexico. I think the country is entitled to give to him credit, and ought to give him credit for that very excellent relief amendment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I thank the Senator for his very complimentary reference. I am thankful to the committee for the very many meritorious features of the bill, but I still feel that I would be derelict in my duty to my constituents and my country if I did not call attention to other inequities in the bill which in my judgment could be remedied and ameliorated.

Of course, as is suggested to me, these remedial features are not yet the law; we do not know what may occur in conference, but I do want to make an earnest appeal to the conferees on the part of the House to retain these provisions in the bill. I know the conferees on the part of the Senate will do all that they can in that direction, but for the good of the country and for the good of business, I appeal to the conferees on the part of the House to permit these remedial features to remain in the bill.

Mr. President, that does not alter the fact that a national bank, the good old Chemical National Bank, that we have known of all our lives, with its stock selling for $4,000 a share, and on a basis of a dividend return of only 4 or 5 per cent upon the investment, is entitled to the same exemption from excess-profits taxes under this bill as the other concern which has gone out into the mountains or upon the plains of the country and developed the natural resources of the country which have been so essential in the conduct of this war.

Is that right? There is only one excuse on earth for the provisions of the bill in that respect, and that is absolute necessity. If we have got to raise the money in that way, I say the business men of the country will stand it; they will stand anything to pay the expenses of the war; they will stand it for the year 1918, but I want to say that they will not stand this discrimination for long, and the Representative in Congress or the Senator or the party which tolerates such inequities will soon be deprived of power.

Mr. President, there are a great many remedial measures which have been brought into the bill. I shall not take the time to refer to them. I wish I did have the time, because I think the country ought to know that we have at least tried to do something to equalize conditions and that we have partially succeeded. For instance, under the present law if a man discovers a mine or if he discovers oil he may have made a failure all his life until to-day. He finally makes a strike. He makes a discovery. The cost of the particular discovery may not be large; it may be nominal. Under existing law if he sold the property the next day for a million dollars the whole million dollars would be considered as income and subjected to these high taxes. We have changed that in this bill. We have provided that in such circumstances he shall be credited with its then value, and if he sells it the tax shall not exceed 20 per cent of the proceeds of the sale. But I call attention to the further fact that if he does sell it and a man puts his money into the operation of the mine, puts it in the operation of the oil well, he does not know when the vein is going to stop. He does not know when the flow is going to cease. But under the bill he is entitled to only the same deduction from excess-profits tax as the man who owns Chemical National Bank stock. Is that right? I am willing to bear the burden for the year 1918 because it is almost ended. The business of the year has been done, the money has been earned; it was earned during the war; and we are willing to pay that money to the Treasury. I say "willing"; I think the people will stand it; but I think there will be complaining, and I think there will be just complaining. I wish we might change it.

But for one I am willing to compromise by saying that the provisions of the bill, harsh as they are, shall apply to the earnings of 1918. However, I do not want to say to the hardy manhood of this country, "If you go out into a new enterprise, if you go into a hazardous industry, hoping to derive a reward from your efforts, you shall be treated only upon the same plane as the man who suffers no risk, who sits by his own fireside and clips coupons."

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator would not consider my interruption out of order, I should like to make just one suggestion to him. The Senator has spoken of a case where a mine can be sold and where a flat tax is imposed of 20 cents instead of 25, but he says if the owner of that mine, not having sold it, should operate it, the mine might soon be exhausted and the capital would all be gone. I understood that to be the suggestion of the Senator. I ask the Senator, is it not a fact that one of these amendments which he has so heartily indorsed provides in that case for an amortization to the full extent of the cost of the mine and its development?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am glad the Senator has referred to that again. I think it is just one of those cases which probably points to the reason why we have been unable to get more relief in the bill for the hazardous industries. The question of the Senator contemplates that the mine shall be exhausted in the ordinary and expected course of operation. He loses sight of the fact that you never in the operation of mines know when the ore is going to stop; you never know of a mine when the cost of production is going to be beyond the selling price. There are hazards innumerable in connection with the mining industry which I do not believe Senators from other sections of the country understand. If they did understand them, I am satisfied that they would be willing to grant more relief. It is because, in my humble judgment, these things are not understood that I am here now trying to let the Senate understand and the country understand.

For the calendar year 1919 I have prepared an amendment which I am going to offer. Under that amendment we will raise just as much revenue through what is called the excess-profits tax of the bill as we do under the provisions of the reported bill, and, in my judgment, it would be acceptable to all the interests of the country; at any rate, I believe it will be acceptable to every honest-minded business man in the country. Bear in mind that the receipts of the next year are going largely to pay war expenses. Bear in mind also that thousands and thousands of the war contracts will expire next year; will be settled up next year; the profits will be derived next year. I believe the people of the country will stand an excess-profits tax; they will stand a war-profits tax; but, Senators, if we can raise the amount of money and have the result of it—a war-profits tax proper—then, I say, let us do that. So I have prepared an amendment to this effect, that the exemption from the excess-profits tax shall be the average earnings of the concern for the three years prior to the war. If it is an old, stabilized industry can it not afford to be limited at this time to the average earnings in its experience for three years prior to the war and give the balance, if need be, to the Government? But I do not ask for all the balance. We know that business was prosperous in this country, generally speaking, during those years. We know that the country progressed during those years. We know that there was development during those years; and if our taxes do not touch such profit we have every reason to believe that the business of the country will continue to prosper. I take into consideration that during the year 1919 the earnings of corporations and businesses generally will not be as large as in 1918, but if we give them every dollar that representative business earned prior to the war and tax the additional earnings 70 per cent, we will still raise a billion and a quarter dollars. That is the estimate of the experts.

This proposed amendment of mine allows to every concern its average profits for the three years' period, not exceeding 20 per cent. There is but one other limitation. The limitation is in the other direction. It provides that no concern shall be forced to pay any tax unless its net profits are above 6 per cent. Between those rates the concern will hold exempt from this tax everything that it earned before the war. I believe that concerns which were earning 20 per cent and more before the war are willing that all above 20 per cent may be subject to this tax.

As to the new business, business which was not earning before the war, and parenthetically I wish to say that 25 per cent, or one-fourth of all the corporations in this country to-day, have come into existence since the war, those new concerns are going to be permitted to have exempt from this excess tax just as much as the representative business of the entire industry prior to the war. Is not that fair, when we provide for a tax upon new business only if it is making more than the representative level before the war, and the old business can keep all it made or as much as it made before the war, provided it does not exceed 20 per cent upon the invested capital? The English war-profits tax law permits exemptions in the more hazardous industries equal to 23½ per cent of the invested capital. The tax is imposed only upon strictly war profits and the rate is 80 per cent. The method I propose relieves the Treasury Department of very great embarrassment. As far as invested capital is concerned, of old business you only have to consider two limitations, whether it is under 6 per cent or above 20 per cent. It will be found easy of administration, because under the bill as it is now framed all the new corporations are to receive the exemption of the representative business. You have got to find under the reported bill what the earnings of the representative business were before the war in order to fix a tax upon one-fourth of all the corporations of the country, and while you are classifying and fixing that rate for the one-fourth of all the corporations—over 100,000 in number—why not, after you have found out what it is, apply it to all corporations which fall in those classes under my amendment and let them all be treated alike?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Would it disturb the Senator if I presented here a letter on this subject which I have received from the Calumet & Arizona Mining Co.?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Not at all.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The letter is as follows:

CALUMET & ARIZONA MINING CO.,
Calumet, Mich., December 16, 1918.

DEAR SIR: On examination of House bill 12863, Report No. 617 of the Committee on Finance, being "An act to provide revenue, and for other purposes," I call your attention to section 311, covering the war-profits credit.

Section (a) gives to old corporations a credit equal to the average net income of the corporation for the prewar period. But if the corporation had no income for the prewar period this credit is limited by section (b) to 10 per cent, and if it is a new corporation not in existence during the prewar period it is placed upon the same basis as corporations having prewar income and is allowed a credit of the same percentage as corporations having prewar income.

There are many mining companies that were organized long before the prewar period which had no earnings whatever during the prewar period, but were prospecting and developing their properties and preparing for the time when there might be some income. Such corporations are placed at an undue disadvantage over old corporations and are not allowed a credit which other corporations in like business are allowed before assessing a war tax.

For a concrete example use our New Cornelia Copper Co., which was organized in 1909 as a successor to several corporations which had been developing a copper property in Arizona prior to that time. The new corporation continued to develop the property from its organization, but had no income during the prewar period and was not a producer of copper during that period. Later development both on the property, ore bodies, and in the method of treatment of ores since that time have developed a very valuable mine. As a matter of fact it is the only new producer of copper in the years 1917 and 1918, or during the period since the United States entered the war, to add a considerable tonnage to the supply of copper. It began production on a considerable scale in June, 1917, and since that time has produced about 70,000,000 pounds of copper.

Under section 311 other copper-producing companies will be allowed from 50 to 200 per cent credit before the war tax can attach; in other words, they will pay an excess-profits tax but no war tax. These companies also had the benefit of the high prices of copper prior to the entrance of the United States into the war and prior to the time when the price of copper was fixed at 23½ cents a pound.

This new company has sold all the copper which it produced at the price fixed by the Government and has no war profits; yet on account of the wording of the act it would seem that it would be compelled to pay a war-profits tax of 80 per cent, and if forced to pay such a tax at the present time, it would be practically thrown into bankruptcy, as its income of the past year has been barely sufficient to pay the debts incurred to enable it to become a producer.

Is there any reason why corporations having no prewar earnings should not be placed in the same class as corporations not in existence for at least a whole year during the prewar period?

I suggest the elimination of paragraph (b) of section 311 and the amendment of paragraph (c) to read substantially as follows:

"If the corporation had no net income for the prewar period, then the war-profits credit shall be the sum of one and two."

This would place old corporations having no prewar earnings and new corporations, which, of course, could have no prewar earnings, in the same class, and place them on an equality with old corporations having prewar earnings.

I believe that you will see the justice of this and sincerely hope that you will use your best efforts to secure the amendment of the bill accordingly.

I also desire to register a protest against those provisions of the act which extend these taxes through years subsequent to 1918.

Very sincerely, yours,

GORDON R. CAMPBELL,
Secretary.

Hon. CHARLES E. TOWNSEND,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

I present this letter because it seems to me to have been intelligently written and bears understandingly on the question.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am very glad the Senator has contributed that information to this subject.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, I do not know whether I caught the latter part of the statement correctly or not, the statement with reference to earnings last year——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Of the prewar period, the same as we make the distinction for gas and oil.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does that statement refer to the prewar period or the last year?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The prewar period. All the period up to 1917.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understood the letter read by the Senator to refer to the earnings last year, and the statement, as I understood it, was that the expenses of operation had practically consumed the entire profits of last year.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was going to suggest if that is true the writer of the letter stated himself out of court.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; he does not state that. He states that this corporation was organized in 1909, and up until 1917 it had produced no copper, but at that time it did commence to produce copper on a paying basis and had produced large amounts of it since; that it would have no prewar profit and all its earnings this year would have to be exhausted in paying the debts which were incurred during the time it was not a paying proposition.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am not sure that I understand the case presented, but I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that that particular case in some degree at least seems to be met by the remedial features of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. It would have the benefit of the prewar earnings on like business.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Nineteen hundred and seventeen and 1918 were the only years when it made a profit.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Under my amendment it would have the benefit of prewar earnings on like business, and, in addition to that, if it made an absolute loss in the year 1917, under the provisions of the bill it would be entitled to deduct the amount of that absolute loss from its income of this year before the question of taxes was considered at all.

The amendment which I offer is as follows:

PROFITS TAX FOR 1919 AND SUBSEQUENT YEARS.

SECTION 301.

Page 84, line 21, strike out, after the word "to," through line 3, on page 85, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "70 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the war-profits credit as determined under section 313."

Page 85, line 6, strike out "or (b)."

SECTION 311.

Page 89, line 8, after the word "That," insert the words "for the purpose of the tax imposed by subdivision (a) of section 301."

SECTION 313.

Page 92, after line 2, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 313. (a) That for the purposes of this section the term 'trade percentage' means the percentage relation of the average net income to the average invested capital for the prewar period of corporations engaged in a trade or business of the same general class as that conducted by the taxpayer, but shall in no case be less than 6 per cent or more than 20 per cent. The trade percentage for each class of trade or business shall be determined by the commissioner upon the basis of data contained in returns for the taxable year 1917 made under Title II of the revenue act of 1917 and returns for the taxable year 1918 made under this act, and the determination of the commissioner when approved by the Secretary shall be final.

"(b) For the purpose of the tax imposed by subdivision (b) of section 301, the war-profits credit shall consist of a specific exemption of $3,000 plus the greater of the two following amounts:

"(1) An amount equal to the trade percentage of the invested capital of the taxpayer for the taxable year.

"(2) An amount equal to the average net income of the taxpayer for the prewar period plus or minus, as the case may be, an amount equal to the trade percentage of the difference between the average invested capital for the prewar period and the invested capital for the taxable year. If the tax is computed for a period of less than 12 months, such amount shall be reduced to the same proportion thereof as the number of months in the period is of 12 months.

"A foreign corporation shall not be entitled to the specific exemption of $3,000."

In this connection I wish to emphasize the importance of that remedial feature of the bill. It was discussed on Monday or Tuesday to a considerable extent in the Senate, and I want to call attention to that discussion. Under that provision of the bill, which has already been adopted by the Senate, if there were losses during the year prior to the taxable year, those losses may be recouped from the income of the taxable year before the net income on which taxes are imposed is ascertained, and likewise if they shall pay taxes this year and make absolute losses next year, then the concern may have its taxes for this year readjusted so that during a three-year period there shall be just and equitable balancing of taxes. I think that is a highly commendable feature of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, what the writer of that letter speaks of as a hardship might possibly have occurred under the bill as it came to the Senate, but I think the Senator from New Mexico will agree with me that under the amendment we have made to the bill relating to industries of that kind, and I think the Senator will agree with me further that we have been very liberal to that class of industries, that sort of a result could not possibly happen now.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. It certainly could not. I think that class of cases has been reasonably cared for in the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. By the amendments?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. By the amendments which have been put upon it in the Senate committee and already adopted by the Senate.

I wish to insert at this point, if I may, sections 327 and 328 of the bill without reading them. They cover a great many remedial features of the bill which have not been expressly referred to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the sections will be inserted.

The sections referred to are as follows:

SEC. 327. That in the following cases the tax shall be determined as provided in section 328:

(a) Where the commissioner is unable satisfactorily to determine the invested capital as provided in section 326;

(b) In the case of a foreign corporation;

(c) Where a mixed aggregate of tangible property and intangible property has been paid in for stock or for stock and bonds and the commissioner is unable satisfactorily to determine the respective values of the several classes of property at the time of payment, or to distinguish the classes of property paid in for stock and for bonds, respectively;

(d) Where, as compared with representative corporations, engaged in a like or similar trade or business, the taxpayer would (under sec. 326) be placed in a position of substantial inequality, because of the time or manner of organization, or because the actual value of the assets on March 1, 1913, was substantially in excess of the amount at which such assets would be valued for the purpose of computing invested capital under the provisions of section 326;

(e) Where the invested capital is materially disproportionate to the net income as compared with representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business because:

1. The capital employed, although a material income-producing factor, is very small or is in large part borrowed;

2. There are excluded from the invested capital as computed under the provisions of section 326, intangible assets of recognized and substantial value built up or developed by the taxpayer;

3. The net income for the taxable year is abnormally high due to the realization in one year of (a) gains, profits, or income earned or accrued during a period of years or (b) extraordinary gains or profit derived from the sale of property the principal value of which has been demonstrated by prospecting or exploration and discovery work done by the taxpayer. When the tax is determined under this paragraph proper allowance shall be made for the taxes which would have been payable in prior years if the gains, profits, or income earned or accrued in such years had been taxed at the rates then applicable;

4. Proper recognition or allowance can not be made for amortization, obsolescence, or exceptional depletion due to the present war, or to the necessity in connection with the present war of providing plant which will not be wanted for the purpose of the trade or business after the termination of the war.

SEC. 328. (a) In the cases specified in section 327 the tax shall be the amount which bears the same ratio to the net income of the taxpayer (in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000) for the taxable year as the average tax of representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business bears to their average net income (in excess of the specific exemption of $3,000) for such year. In such cases the commissioner shall compare the taxpayer only with representative corporations whose invested capital can be satisfactorily determined under section 326, and which are, as nearly as may be, similarly circumstanced with respect to gross income, net income, profits per unit of business transacted and capital employed, the amount and rate of war profits or excess profits, and all other relevant facts and circumstances.

(b) For the purposes of subdivision (a) the ratios between the average tax and the average net income of representative corporations shall be determined by the commissioner in accordance with regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary.

(c) The commissioner shall keep a record of all cases in which the tax is determined in the manner prescribed in subdivision (a) containing the name and address of each taxpayer, the business in which engaged, the amount of invested capital and net income shown by the return, and the amount of invested capital as determined under such section. The commissioner shall furnish a copy of such record and other detailed information with respect to such cases when required by resolution of either House of Congress, without regard to the restrictions contained in section 257.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do want to call attention to two special classes of enterprises which are not cared for in the bill, one of them being extremely important; that is, an irrigation company. We are wanting to develop irrigation in this country just as much as we can; but under the existing law and under this bill as now presented the process would be about like this: A man would have a piece of land; he would borrow enough money to construct the irrigation works, which would amount to thirty, forty, fifty, seventy-five, or perhaps a hundred dollars an acre; he would give a mortgage upon the property. The mortgage would provide that all of the proceeds of the sale of land would have to be applied to the payment of the mortgage. That is the usual provision in such mortgages; it is the usual course of business. Under the rulings of the Treasury Department, and I think legally so, whenever he sold his first 80 acres or his first section, if the total proceeds of that, after deducting the actual cost of the land, were more than enough to pay his running expenses for the year, he would be taxed upon the balance as net income. Anybody who has had any practical experience with irrigation enterprises knows that that thing will not work out; that if the law remains in that form there will never be another irrigation enterprise in the West built by private capital.

The truth of it is that when you start in upon an irrigation enterprise it is treated as an entire project; it must be viewed from only one standpoint; and that is the final result. You may sell your land along for years, but you are still in debt; you have not had returned to you the original value of the land; you have not even paid your mortgage until you have sold enough to do those things, and there is not a possible dollar of income or profit in the business until after the mortgage is paid and the original investment is returned.

After that time everything that comes in may very well be considered income, but you never know whether you are going to reach that stage or not. There have been far more failures in irrigation enterprises than there have been successes, and to say that a man makes an income while he is still trying to get people to settle on the land and to pay for it while they are still subduing the wild soil is a great mistake. It is an absolute deterrent upon an enterprise of that kind.

As I have already stated, you will never hear of another such enterprise unless the provisions of the reported bill be changed. The war is over. Let us look to the future; let us encourage these industries; let us at least give the promoters of those enterprises a chance to make homes for the soldiers who are returning from the war.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico whether the Committee on Finance placed the same construction upon this proposed act which the Senator from New Mexico now places upon it, and whether they did not conceive that the result of this act would be as just indicated by the Senator from New Mexico? Let me say that it seems to me manifest that those results will follow, and in view of that fact the Senate, if it wants to deal fairly with this subject, if it wants to permit the development of the West, must of necessity accede to the amendment which the Senator from New Mexico has suggested.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I do not like to discuss in the Senate what occurred in the committee, but I am sure, if the committee could have found some general provision which would have cared for this situation, the committee would have tried to have adopted it, but apparently the committee was unable to do so. Now, what I am proposing to do is to put irrigation company enterprises and town sites, which are handled in the same way, in a class by themselves, and an amendment is now being prepared by one of the experts to do that. I certainly hope that when it is prepared the committee itself will meet and recommend its adoption.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator from New Mexico that the committee considered an amendment this morning that may in a measure meet the objections of the Senator.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am sorry to say, Mr. President, that I could not attend the committee meeting this morning, although I believe I have attended about as many meetings of the committee as has any other member of it, with the possible exception of its chairman. I was busy collating data for the present discussion.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator's statement in that regard is correct.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I am very much interested in the discussion of the Senator from New Mexico. He is a member of the Committee on Finance, and, of course, thoroughly understands this bill, but it is possible that I misunderstood his statement.

In speaking of an irrigation enterprise and of one who might own the project, is it not true that under the provisions of this bill the owner of the project would be allowed credit for whatever interest he pays?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. Is not the Senator from New Mexico overlooking that fact?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No; I am not overlooking that fact at all. Of course the mortgage itself would provide that the interest would have to be paid; and that concern in that respect is on precisely the same plane as are all other business concerns.

Mr. GRONNA. Now, if the Senator will pardon me further, the Senator is, however, overlooking the fact that all throughout the country, whether it is in the West or in the East, he will find persons who may own real estate which may be mortgaged practically for what it is worth, and yet the payments, when they are made, will be taxed; in other words, the owners of the property will have to pay the tax upon those payments, and no deductions will be made because they are indebted practically for the full amount on the real value of the land. The only deductions which will be allowed them will be for the interest upon the debt. In what different position is the man on the irrigation project from other people, I ask the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota has presented a most interesting question, and I do not know how to deal with it; I mean I do not know how that matter should be dealt with, generally speaking; but the case mentioned by the Senator is different from that of an irrigation enterprise or a town-site company, for the reason that the total income in the case of the irrigation concern and of the town-site company is derived from the sale of a part of the investment, a part of the property, while, in the case of the farmer, the return comes from the cultivation of the soil. The farmer is not selling any part of the land; he is not parting with it. The question which the Senator raises is a very important one, and I can give him other illustrations.

A man will buy a herd of cattle and may mortgage the herd for three-fourths of what it is worth. When he makes a partial sale of the cattle he has got to apply all of the proceeds of the sale to the payment of the mortgage. And you find the same difficulty where you are selling in the usual course of business; you may apply that to a case where a man will buy a thousand shares of stock and will sell only a hundred shares of it. He may have a mortgage on the balance for nearly its full value. So the Senator must realize that there are situations which can not be relieved against without bringing about other abuses which are much greater, and this is one of them. I wish I could deal satisfactorily with the problem which the Senator from North Dakota has presented, but I do not know how to do so without bringing about a situation which would be worse than is the evil complained of.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not wish unduly to disturb the Senator from New Mexico in his argument, but I desire to say that I do not think I made myself quite clear to him.

I am very glad to hear that the Senator is willing, as he always is, to remedy any evil which exists; but suppose the owner of real estate does not himself farm the land, but sells it on crop payments, which is the custom in nearly all of the Western States. The owner of the land is in debt for practically all the land is worth, but when payment is made to him, he must pay the taxes on that money. Now, in what different position is the owner of an irrigation project from that of the owner of the land to which I refer?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. May I inquire of the Senator from North Dakota whether he is now referring to the man who purchased the land under the circumstances which he has stated?

Mr. GRONNA. No; I refer to the man who sells the land and gets no return from it except the payment. He sells it on time.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. But if he sells it on time he gets the interest on his mortgage?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; that is true.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. And he gets his share of the crop?

Mr. GRONNA. The only share he gets of the crop is the payment, or at least a part of his payment, which is applied to the principal, and while he gets interest, he also pays interest, just as a man does who may own an irrigation project.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Well, if he gets interest he is entitled to have any payments of interest deducted.

Mr. GRONNA. He receives the interest from the party to whom the land is sold, but he also pays interest.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then the payments would undoubtedly offset each other if they were of like amount.

Mr. GRONNA. I am not speaking of interest, I am speaking of the capital. That will be assessed as income, and whoever receives it must pay the tax upon it, according to the pending bill.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do not know that I have the case in mind as the Senator from North Dakota presents it or as the Senator has it in his mind. I really do not see where there would be much injury in the case he cites, because there must be absolutely net income before there can be any tax collected on it, and the exceptions in this bill from the gross income are very great, indeed. I think they cover the case mentioned by the Senator from North Dakota. I think the payer of interest would be entitled to deduct that from any of his income before the tax would apply; but if he receives interest, of course that interest would become a part of his income.

Mr. GRONNA. I am referring to the capital.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Well, if it is capital, then it is not considered as income at all, unless there is a profit in the transaction. When a sale is made and the proceeds are received in payment, there is no tax upon that unless it is sold for more than was paid for it.

Mr. GRONNA. That is exactly it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. And if the man sells it for more than the difference, of course it becomes income and is subject to tax.

Mr. President, I am sorry to have consumed so much time, and I am going to hasten just as much as possible with the other points which I have in mind.

I desire to call attention at this point to certain injustices as between corporations and individuals. I think I have shown, in certain cases, at least, discrimination. Now, I propose a remedy for that, and one which I believe will be very far-reaching in its effect. No man up to the present moment has suggested any reason which is convincing, to me, at least, as to why it should not be adopted. Last year under the present law we imposed excess-profits taxes upon individual business, upon partnership business, and upon corporate business all alike, so there is no obstacle to imposing an excess-profits tax upon partnerships and individuals. We also provide in this bill that certain corporations, where personal service is the principal source of income, may make a return as partnerships. Is there any reason on earth why partnerships which are discriminated against and why an individual in his business who is discriminated against should not make their returns as a corporation? I do not know of any. If there is a discrimination as between corporations and partnerships, why should not the corporation be permitted to make a return as a partnership? I do not know of any reason why it should not be done.

I can give you concrete cases where one business, which is a corporation on one side of the street, will pay one tax under this bill, and where a business concern doing a similar business on the other side of the street as a partnership will pay another, and where the discrimination is over a million dollars. Why not permit a partnership to make a return as a corporation, so far as its business is concerned, and if the inequity is the other way, why not permit the stockholders of a corporation to make return as a partnership?

Under this bill it may very well be said that, taking corporations as a whole and taking individuals and partnerships as a whole, one class of enterprises will bear probably as much taxes as the other, but the trouble comes from the fact that in the case of corporations only a small percentage of them will pay any excess-profits tax. Take the old stabilized industries, which make normal earnings but which are not earning above 10 per cent. They pay no excess-profits tax, or, if they pay any, it is very small; but the same kind of a concern doing business as a partnership on the opposite side of the street will pay surtaxes reaching up to 50 or 75 per cent. Is that right? Should not the one be able to make the same kind of a return as the other if it wants to do so? Give it the right to elect. By that process you will simply put competitors upon the same footing, whether they are partnerships or corporations or individuals. If they are competitors and earn the same amount of profits, simply put them upon the same basis. Can anybody suggest a reason why that should not be done? There is no difficulty in administration. The effect of this reported bill is to discriminate against the partnership which does not earn any excess profits and against the individual who does not earn any excess profits. Why not put them on the same plane? Therefore, I have prepared a couple of amendments dealing with that subject, providing that a corporation may make a return as a partnership, and that individuals and partnerships may have the right to make returns on the same basis and be subjected to the same tax as a corporation.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. If a partnership should make a return as a corporation, then you would exempt the individual partners from any income tax?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Precisely.

Mr. KELLOGG. Would you consider the sums paid out to the partners as dividends?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That would be the effect of it.

Mr. KELLOGG. But they would pay an income tax on their dividends.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Yes, sir; whatever they withdrew from the business would be the same as dividends from the corporation.

Mr. KELLOGG. Under the present bill, as a whole, I do not see how it can be said that partnerships are discriminated against, because we simply tax the income as an income derived by the individual partners, but do not attempt to levy upon them an excess-profits tax.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will explain the matter to the Senator in just a moment. I was going to call attention to a very great advantage in making returns as a corporation. Under this bill, if a corporation pays no excess-profits tax, all the tax that it pays is the normal tax. If a partnership has a large capital and earns precisely the same amount annually as the corporation, all the individual partners must pay high taxes. As an illustration we will take two concerns with a capital of $1,000,000, one a partnership and the other a corporation. Each earns $100,000 or, we will say, $80,000 because of the excess-profits exemption.

The corporation will pay only 12 per cent on that $80,000, or $9,600, while in the case of the partnership, if there are two partners, each partner will be taxed on $40,000 of income whether taken out of the business or not, and on an income of $40,000 under this bill the taxes reach up to 30 per cent, and each one of them would pay up to 30 per cent on his return.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is only in case the corporation does not declare any dividend; but if it declares dividends the stockholders have to pay their individual taxes on the income derived from the dividends.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The Senator is quite right; but I wish to tell the Senator that experience shows that, taking all the corporations in this country during last year and the year before, at least 50 per cent of the earned profits were not distributed in dividends; or, in other words, last year out of total profits of corporations amounting to $10,000,000,000, $5,000,000,000 remained in the treasuries of the companies and paid no surtax on the part of the stockholders, and, unless they paid an excess-profits tax, paid no tax at all other than the normal tax.

I call the attention of the Senator to the further fact that not only can a corporation fail to distribute its income and avoid any tax except the normal tax, but under this bill and under the present law it can add the retained income to its capital and receive exemption upon that for the next year. The fact is that last summer I called the attention of the Senate as graphically as I could to that situation. Unfortunately it was noised throughout the country that I wanted to impose a tax upon all accumulated surplus and undivided profits. Senators know that I did not want to do anything of the kind; that I proposed to put a tax simply upon current income so as to meet that situation, so as to have it operate as at least a partial surtax on the undistributed profits to equalize them with the surtaxes which individuals would pay or which individual stockholders would pay if that money were distributed. That retained income amounted to $5,000,000,000 last year, and under this bill that $5,000,000,000 now is added capital, and will have an exemption from the taxes this year of 8 or 10 per cent, whichever it may be.

So I appeal to Senators here to consider the question whether the House provision should not be adopted. Acting upon the case which I presented here last year, the House has partially met the situation. It imposes a tax of 6 per cent additional to the normal tax of 12 per cent on undistributed corporate income, but took the substance away by providing that it should not apply to earnings paid out on indebtedness or profits invested in Government bonds. It would not give an individual the right to pay his debts out of his income before his income is taxed, but it gives to the corporation the right to retain its income and to pay only a normal tax on the amount which remains after paying its debts or paying off its bonded indebtedness.

Mr. President, I am going to vote for the House provision of this bill in that respect; and I will propose another amendment to this bill which will meet the situation partially. Under this bill, as I have said, the undistributed dividends are added to the capital as a basis of exemption the next year. What I propose is that earnings since December 31, 1916, and up until the end of this year, shall not be added to capital for the purposes of exemption. That little amendment will add to the revenue of the Government a little over $100,000,000. The corporations retained the earnings in the first place for the purpose of preventing surtaxes being paid upon them. They have not only done that, but they have been adding that to capital, and they are now claiming their exemption of 8 or 10 per cent upon it from the taxes imposed under this bill. I say that is not right. If you have raised enough revenue without it, take the taxes off of commodities and leave that tax of $100,000,000 upon those earned profits which have been undistributed and which have only paid a normal tax.

Mr. President, it is said that ultimately these profits will be distributed. We have taxed stock dividends, but I want to say there will never be any stock dividends, the corporations will not declare any if they are subject to tax, and my judgment is that it will not be long before the Supreme Court will declare that such a tax is unconstitutional, for a stock dividend is a division of capital and not of profit or of income.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to close; but I do want to say just a word about the provision in this bill for taxes for the calendar year 1919.

In England, where they have had an income-tax law for over 60 years, the income tax has always been provided in advance of the earnings, so that anybody who was going to earn profits subject to an income tax knew at the beginning of the year just what he would have to pay on his profits earned during the ensuing year; and everybody knows that when a business man begins business the very first thing he does is to estimate the taxes he will have to pay. When he goes to mark his goods he includes in the mark upon every piece of goods the estimated tax upon conducting that business. Now, why should he not know it in advance?

I have here a little clipping, which says that last year the United States Steel Corporation overestimated its tax for the year by $36,500,000. Do you want to have anybody doing business as blindly as that—so blindly as to make a mistake, not against themselves, of course, but against the consumers, of $36,500,000?

Mr. President, I do think that for the year 1919 if we raise $4,000,000,000 that amount will be ample; and while it is a heavy load to carry, I believe the industries of the country will bear it, provided you can convince them that it is just. But I do want the committee and the Senate to consider the amendment which I have provided with respect to excess profits. I believe that if you adopt that amendment you will give hope to enterprise, you will give some encouragement to business initiative, you will enable the country to develop, you will enable new enterprises to come into existence. I do not believe, however, that we should work an injustice in any case where it can be avoided; and I appeal to Senators to give thought and consideration to these measures, to the end that enterprise may go forward, that our country may again become prosperous during this reconstruction period, and that no American citizen shall suffer an injustice through taxation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Jones, Wash.	New	Sheppard
Curtis	Kellogg	Norris	Simmons
Fletcher	Kenyon	Nugent	Smith, Ga.
France	La Follette	Page	Smoot
Gerry	Lenroot	Penrose	Spencer
Gronna	McKellar	Phelan	Thomas
Hale	McLean	Pittman	Trammell
Henderson	McNary	Pollock	Warren
Johnson, Cal.	Martin, Ky.	Pomerene	Watson
Johnson, S. Dak.	Moses	Saulsbury
Jones, N. Mex.	Myers	Shafroth

Mr. McKELLAR. I announce the absence of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. HARDING, Mr. KIRBY, Mr. KNOX, Mr. LODGE, Mr. McCUMBER, Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. SMITH of Arizona, Mr. VARDAMAN, and Mr. WALSH answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, before the bill was reported out of committee I offered an amendment in the nature of a substitute for Title III, which deals with what are known as the war-profits and excess-profits taxes. The amendment, with one or two exceptions, is a rescript of the law of 1917 upon that subject of taxation as first reported to the Senate, as I now recall, in the month of July of that year. Owing to the very sudden increase in estimated expenditures, the Finance Committee then requested that the bill be returned to it for further consideration, it being necessary to provide for a larger amount of revenue than at first contemplated. When the bill was rereported and passed and went to the conference committee and was there considered the original plan of taxation upon war profits was completely transformed, and the Senate on final vote accepted the report of the committee and enacted the present so-called excess-profits system of taxation.

I did not then, nor do I now, find myself convinced of either the wisdom or the justice of the method of taxation upon which the excess-profits tax is founded; and I am somewhat gratified in having the support in this particular of the President of the United States and the late Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo. So fortified, I felt that the least I could do regarding the matter was to make an effort to substitute for the so-called excess-profits tax a system of war-profits taxation founded upon and analogous to the British system.

The original Senate bill of 1917 was largely modeled upon the British method of taxation. We had, therefore, and we still have, the experiences of the British Government in the administration of that law, and particularly as regards its effect upon business conditions. I am more than ever convinced, therefore, that we should adopt that system of raising extraordinary revenues, based upon unusual profits, rather than a system which in the very nature of things must be of an arbitrary nature, and which, therefore, must operate unequally and unjustly upon different corporations and individuals if the tax is carried to individuals and partnerships.

The distinction between war-profits and excess-profits taxes is nowhere stated better than by the Secretary of the Treasury before the House Committee on Ways and Means last summer. He then said:

> The distinction between a war-profits tax and the excess-profits tax is not a matter of form, but of substance. By a war-profits tax we mean a tax upon profits in excess of those realized before the war. By an excess-profits tax we mean a tax upon profits in excess of a given return upon capital. The theory of a war-profits tax is to tax profits due to the war. The theory of an excess-profits tax is to tax profits over and above a given return on capital. A war-profits tax finds its sanction in the conviction of all patriotic men, of whatever economic or political school, that no one should profit largely by the war. The excess-profits tax must rest upon the wholly indefensible notion that it is a function of taxation to bring all profits down to one level with relation to the amount of capital invested and to deprive industry, foresight, and sagacity of their fruits. The excess-profits tax exempts capital and burdens brains, ability, and energy. The excess-profits tax falls less heavily on big business than on small business, because big business is generally overcapitalized and small business is often undercapitalized.
>
> The war-profits tax would tax all war profits at one high rate; the excess-profits tax does, and for safety must, tax all excess profits at lower and graduated rates. Any graduated tax upon corporations is indefensible in theory, for corporations are only aggregations of individuals, and by such a tax the numerous small stockholders of a great corporation may be taxed at a higher rate than the very wealthy large stockholders of a relatively small corporation. The object of a graduated tax should be to make taxes fall upon the rich, who are best able to pay them. The graduated excess-profits tax disregards this and often produces the reverse result.

On the 27th day of May last the President of the United States, addressing a joint session of the two Houses of Congress, directed attention very briefly but very significantly to this unequal and unjust system of taxation. He did not, of course, go into detail, either by way of description or of definition, as the Secretary of the Treasury subsequently did, but I have no doubt that the reasons which actuated the President in condemning this method of taxation must have been the same which were afterwards stated by the Secretary of the Treasury before the Ways and Means Committee.

The excess-profits tax is a tax which must necessarily comprehend a profit over and above some fixed rate or percentage. The very term "excess" presupposes the necessity of such a condition; and the necessity of fixing an exemption percentage, to be called a normal profit, requires a definition of invested capital, and no definition of invested capital is possible for the purposes of such a tax which can satisfy everyone or operate equally and with a fair degree of justice.

To illustrate how the present law operates, Mr. President, in a single instance, public opinion for years has been aroused by, and has condemned, the undue and fictitious issue of capital stock. What is generally termed "watered stock" is banned by good business sense and by good public morals. We have enacted statutes, both State and National, to reach and control in part this tendency, but we have not been able to control it much. Now, the excess-profits tax, strange to say, so operates, under the definition of invested capital which is a part of it, as to encourage and reward the company which is overcapitalized, which is heavily capitalized, which is watered, and to punish the corporation whose capital stock is moderate in its amount, and therefore properly represents its actual capital value or investment. As a result, many corporations which have defied public opinion, many corporations whose stock consists more largely of a fictitious than of an actual issue, pay less taxes under this system than other corporations which have kept within the law, which have been conservative in their capital issues, and which have sought to harmonize the amount of their capitalization with the actual value of the capital and property invested in the business.

Upon the face of things, Mr. President, a system of taxation which in its practical operation will so result is wrong. It is fundamentally wrong; and I know of no way in which it can be corrected except by some definition of invested capital which the genius and the capacity and the experience of the Treasury experts have not yet been able to devise.

I may say here, Mr. President, that the country is under a great debt of obligation to three or four gentlemen connected with the Treasury Department, thoroughly experienced in all questions of taxation and of revenue, and who have given an amount of time and who have exhibited a capacity and an ability to handle these questions and have so handled them as to entitle them to the appreciation and the gratitude of the whole American people. I do not know what their personal opinions of an excess-profits tax may be; they have had enough to do without indulging in expressions of opinion; but I dare say that some of them who have been connected with the administration of the existing law feel just as I do regarding it.

Mr. President, the British theory of war-profits taxation does entirely away with the definition of invested capital except in so far as is necessary to reach corporations which have gone into business subsequent to the prewar period. That tax is levied not upon percentages of profit but upon actual amounts of profit regardless of the percentage as compared with invested capital. To illustrate, if during the three years which form the prewar period the normal profit of Corporation A was $25,000, and if during the taxable year the profit of the same corporation was $50,000, the war tax attaches to the addition $25,000. It takes no note whatever of the amount of capital invested. It merely considers the prewar profit, the normal profit, and the profit of the taxable year, which is the war profit, or rather the difference between which is the war profit; and the tax is then placed upon that amount without regard to the capital invested.

Of course, Mr. President, I have no idea in the slightest that anything which may be said by myself or by anyone else against so important a provision of the bill as this will have the slightest influence upon the action of the Senate. We have before us a bill which imposes a tax of $6,000,000,000, more than the amount of money in circulation, upon the productive energies of the American people; but as I discuss this very important feature I am able to count upon the Republican side five Members of the Senate and upon the Democratic side four Members of the Senate, exclusive of the occupant of the chair. That being the case, there can be no possibility, Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. Give us credit for the number who are here.

Mr. THOMAS. I do. I give Senators ample credit for their presence. I am not complaining in the slightest degree.

Mr. POMERENE. But there are six on this side.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Ohio says that my calculation is wrong and that there are six Democratic Senators present. Neither am I complaining of these things. Whatever may be said of unpleasant and inconvenient things in the Senate, we are not obliged to stay and listen to each other's speeches. That is something from which we are fortunately relieved. Hence, Mr. President, I know I am simply wasting my sweetness upon the desert air when I attempt to give reasons for the substitute which I have offered, but I feel that, inasmuch as a permanent record will be made of what I have to say, it may possibly be that somewhere in the country the merits of the one and the demerits of the other system of taxation may be realized and to a certain degree fully understood.

Mr. President, I am not going to ask to have the amendment which I have offered read, because I think I can state the substance of its requirements and recitals with a sufficient degree of clearness and by that means very materially abbreviate the length of time that I will occupy the floor.

This proposed amendment takes the place of Title III and wipes out excess profits entirely, leaving the title to deal exclusively with war-profits taxes, and these taxes are to be levied not only upon corporations but upon partnerships and individuals as well; that is to say, upon all so-called war profits, whether they are realized by workmen, by farmers, by capitalists, by manufacturers, by partnerships, by individuals, or by corporations, because I take it that what we call a war profit as defined in our assessment and revenue laws is a war profit regardless of who may be the recipient of that profit; and wherever any individual or corporation or partnership has made a profit in excess of the prewar profit, such partnership, corporation, or individual should pay his, their, or its proportion of this extraordinary tax, because since war conditions have made these profits possible, the needs of war conditions should require the payment of a very considerable part into the Treasury.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. Generally speaking, what the Senator says about an excess-profits tax is in equity doubtless true; but is it not a fact that under the bill substantially 90 per cent or more of the taxes paid will be under war profits instead of excess profits?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not think so.

Mr. KELLOGG. Because wherever the war-profits tax would yield more the war-profits tax applies.

Mr. THOMAS. On the contrary, we have wiped out, or supposed we had wiped out, that alternative condition by consolidating the two forms of tax. I do not want the Senator to misunderstand me. I do not say that the committee has done that. I have some doubt about it. But the committee attempted to do it, and in the opinion of a majority they succeeded.

But, Mr. President, it may be true, and for the sake of the argument let me concede that it is true, that it is the war profits rather than the excess profits which will pay 90 per cent of the revenue to be derived from this particular title; I am as much concerned about the 10 per cent as I would be if the proportions were reversed. My objection is rather to the method than to the amount of tax which may be realized under it. The one has reference to an artificial, extraordinary, and unnatural financial situation; the other is one which, without regard to war profits, levies a tax upon everything above an arbitrary percentage of profit, and it will affect corporations making more than 8 per cent or 10 per cent plus the $3,000 prior to the war quite as much as corporations making more than that since the war. In other words, it affects not war profits alone, but is liable to affect all profits whether they are war profits or not. That may be all right under the income-tax provisions of the law, but for the so-called extraordinary tax it is indefensible, in my judgment, and ought not to disfigure a great bill like this, as I am satisfied it must.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] spent a good part of the day in calling attention, in behalf of his amendment to this title, to the injustice which must result to many enterprises, and particularly speculative ones, from the statutory allowance by way of percentage of normal profits, which fixed at 8 per cent is applicable to institutions whose earnings of 6 per cent would be more than enough, whose earnings of 8 per cent are plenty, but also to those whose earnings of 8 per cent are not the equivalent of the risk taken by the capital invested, and which, of course, should be much greater. As you know, Mr. President, in the section of the country from which we hail [Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair] there are many enterprises sufficiently hazardous in their nature to offer no temptation whatever to capital yielding only 8 per cent net profit. If such a statute had been in existence 25 or 50 years ago, the tremendous development of that section would have been impossible through the absence of capital there. Because of the hazardous nature of the enterprises the promise of profit was not sufficient to make the risk justifiable. That, under the provisions of this bill, however, as drawn will unquestionably exist for some time and will affect parts of the country where mining of all kinds is carried on, where irrigation schemes must necessarily depend upon an extraordinarily good market, and where new enterprises, the pathway of which must be blazed in the future, may through experience realize certain profits, and therefore small ones, and which would attract capital, or large profits which need the extra inducement to secure the required investment.

The only argument I have heard to justify the excess-profits tax feature of the present law or of the proposed bill is that the war-profits tax will not reach a large number of corporations whose profits during the prewar period were abnormally large, and that as a consequence some other method of reaching them must be enacted into law. To meet that I have changed the text of the old bill by introducing on page 9 the following clause:

(d) That if the Secretary of the Treasury finds that a corporation, partnership, or individual had a net income during the prewar period in excess of the average net income of representative corporations, partnerships, and individuals engaged in a like or similar trade or business, the war profits of such corporation, partnership, or individual shall for the purposes of this title include the amount of such excess.

In other words, if any corporation enjoying extraordinary profits because of war contracts given to them by the allies before our entry into the war would for that reason be exempt from any tax under the war-profits system of taxation, this clause will make them equally liable, since it fixes the normal profit of the representative corporations during the prewar period as the standard for the corporation which prior to the prewar period because of these extraordinary circumstances was enjoying extraordinary profits.

That feature, Mr. President, is not a unique one in this bill. We resort to that in other instances; indeed, in three or four, as I now remember. Consequently it is not an innovation. Indeed, the feature appears in the House bill in at least one instance that I recall, and I am inclined to think in two or three others. It does away with the only possible objection that could be made to the elimination of the excess-profits tax from the bill.

So much, Mr. President, for this particular amendment. I am not going to elaborate, as I intended to do, because the holidays are approaching, the Senate is impatient and a final vote upon this bill is desired, and also because the condition of my voice is such as to make it impossible, however important I may personally regard this substitute, to speak upon it as extendedly as I might desire.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. As the Senator has not read his amendment and I have not seen it, I want to ask him a question to see whether I understand it.

Mr. THOMAS. I have several copies of it here. A page will distribute them to the Senators who are present. I think he will find there are more than enough copies to go around.

Mr. POMERENE. Assume, for the sake of the argument, that during the prewar period, if you provide for a prewar period——

Mr. THOMAS. I do; for three years prior to the war.

Mr. POMERENE. Assume that the net profits were 100 per cent on the capital stock, and that was technically what might be called an excess profit. Suppose another corporation with a similar capital stock during the prewar period had made a net profit during the three years of 10 per cent, and that during the war and due to the war it made a net profit upon that same capital stock of 25 per cent, 10 per cent of which would be due to the usual routine business, and 15 per cent of which would be due to the war. Under those circumstances, would the Senator by his amendment take a greater proportion of the 15 per cent than he would of the 100 per cent?

Mr. THOMAS. No; the same proportion. There is no graded tax provided for in this substitute. There is a flat rate of 70 per cent upon the war profits.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me ask the Senator a further question, so that I may understand the principle that is involved. I confess that theoretically there is a clear distinction between an excess-profits tax and a war-profits tax, as the able Secretary of the Treasury defines it, and I can arrive at a theoretical definition which satisfies my mind; but when it comes to the application of that definition to the business of each particular institution, I have always feared that there would be very great difficulty in the administration of the law; in other words, that it will be extremely difficult to say what shall be regarded as excess profits of a given corporation under the definition and what part of the earnings would be a war-profits tax under the definition.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the difficulties of administration of this title for the most part arose from the excess-profits division of it, not from the war-profits division of it. We have the experiences of the British Government to guide us with regard to war profits. The difficulties which the Senator apprehends have not for the most part materialized, if I am correctly informed. Their difficulties arise for the most part when they come to deal with institutions which have gone into business after the prewar period, and where a definition of capital is necessary in order to determine what their tax must be. So I think I can answer with perfect safety that, with the experiences of the British Government plus our own experiences under the existing law and with the known and acknowledged difficulties and complications which necessarily confront us under the excess-profits system, this amendment eliminates instead of increases and aggravates the difficulties with which the Treasury Department must contend in their attempt to apply the law to the taxpayers of the country.

Mr. President, I filed a minority report to this bill on my own account. I was as much alone, perhaps, in that respect as I am alone on the floor of the Senate in calling attention to it. Among the recitals of that report are outlined some objections to another title of the bill, which deals with taxes on inheritances or taxes upon estates. I voted for a motion to strike that title from the bill, which motion was rejected. I did so because I do not believe that the Government of the United States should extend its taxing power to the estates of individuals; not because I have any hesitation about taxing estates, not because I do not believe estates should be required to pay certain percentages to the Government, but because I think that that particular subject of revenue should be left to the States of the Union.

The Senator from New Mexico referred to that subject before taking his seat, and he said it would be quite as logical to insist that the tax on incomes should be left entirely to the States. It may be true that that might be done, but the reasons upon which my objection rests would not apply to any other title of the bill.

In the first place, it is the States which are endowed with power to enact laws of descent and distribution. The Government of the United States, powerful as it is, has, up to this time, not even pretended to be invested with power to define and provide for descent of estates in Massachusetts or Colorado, and if such an attempt were made I believe that even in these days of liberal construction the Supreme Court of the United States would hold that such a power did not exist. Inasmuch as it is the States and the States alone which can prescribe rules and conditions of inheritance, therefore it is the States and the States alone which should have the power to determine what amounts of such estates shall, when called in, be paid into the local treasury.

Mr. President, taxes upon inheritances have been sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States largely upon the ground that they are not taxes at all, but rather conditions of inheritance. Being conditions of inheritance, a fortiori should the States and the States only be permitted to determine what those conditions are. I am aware, of course, that the Supreme Court has also held that a Federal estate tax is constitutional, although I never have been able to reconcile the decision in the case of Magoun versus the Illinois Trust Co. and in the Knowlton case with each other, since, if it be true that this is not a tax but a condition of inheritance, then it certainly should logically follow that only the sovereignty which has the power to impose this condition of inheritance would have the power to collect the so-called tax. So the subject matter of the tax being sui generis, I believe that the Federal Government should leave this item of taxation to the local sovereignty instead of arrogating that subject to itself.

There is another reason, Mr. President. Federal tax laws are constantly encroaching upon the domain of State powers of taxation. The imposition of Federal taxes comes in conflict—not legally, but practically—with the imposition of State taxes, and inasmuch as the Government is supreme as compared with the States, Federal taxation must necessarily supersede in time State taxation wherever the two shall so seriously conflict as to threaten the source of taxation with extinction.

The States must have revenue just as well as the United States. The municipalities created by the States must have revenue just as well as the States. It is impossible to conceive of an Anglo-Saxon community having any sort of existence without the power to levy and collect the revenues necessary to pay its actual expenses.

What are the sources of State taxation thus far left uninvaded by the Federal authority? I know of but one, and that is real estate, and even there taxes upon the incomes derived from real estate under the amendment to the Constitution are also subject to Federal taxation so far as they are regarded as incomes. The States raise a good deal of money by the imposition of licenses, principally upon cigars, tobacco, and intoxicants; but intoxicants are about to disappear and as a consequence the power to raise revenue through licenses is restricted to that extent.

Apart, therefore, from the raising of taxes by license, the raising of taxes from the sales of public property, which is so inconsiderable as not to be worth mentioning, and real estate, I know of nothing that is left excepting estates. We know that the expense of State administration is growing by leaps and bounds. I venture to say that there is not a State in the Union, I care not how economically its affairs are administered, whose actual expenses are not 30 or 40 per cent higher to-day than they were 20 years ago. I know that in the matter of municipalities, consequent upon borrowing money and making municipal improvements, taxes are very much heavier than they were even 10 years ago, and the tendency to increase is quite as obvious as our tendency here to increase the burden of our expenditures.

Mr. President, we have only begun in the levying of taxes upon estates. We have taken but one or two strides in the direction of progressively increasing rates of taxation. In all probability the next step, and it is bound to be taken, will be so considerable as to make it difficult, if not impossible, to provide for the collection of the Federal as well as the States' taxes upon inheritances. In the conflict the States must yield, and the ultimate outcome will be the imposition of all State taxes upon real estate only, and the burden of that State tax is liable to be so great as to give ground for all those social and industrial controversies and contentions which inevitably arise from the discontent of a too heavily taxed people.

This, Mr. President, is a legitimate ground for State taxation, and the Federal Government, in my judgment, is not justified in invading it, since it must necessarily, by restricting the sources of State taxation, not only increase the burden because of that fact but the burden must be increased also because of the growing expenditures. I think, therefore, that we are making a mistake, and particularly since the war is over, in not retracing our steps with regard to this basis of taxation, and leaving it, as it ought to be left, to the States to determine what the tax shall be and to collect it.

I know many fear that the great estates will escape the due burden that ought to be placed upon them unless the Federal Government imposes the tax. I have no such fear, Mr. President. The theory upon which American tax laws, State and National, is based is to impose the tax in such wise as to offend the least number of voters possible. I have heard a good deal about the theory of this bill. That is the theory of this bill. Let us levy this enormous tax so as to create as few resentments, and therefore subject ourselves to as little political danger, as possible. There is no danger of taxing the estates of dead men; they can not vote; usually speaking, their children are not old enough to vote; we consequently are within a sphere of taxation that seems to give immunity to the lawgiver; and the States will be quite as cognizant of that fact as is the Congress of the United States. Hence that circumstance, coupled with the natural tendency to place taxes upon wealth, which is perfectly proper, should rob the most apprehensive of any real, substantial fear of such a consequence if this field of taxation is not invaded by the General Government.

Mr. President, while I am on my feet—I have said practically all that I care to say with regard to the amendment and the report which I filed—I want to refer to two or three other subjects which are either in the bill or are closely related to it.

I have stated what I thought the theory of this bill was. I have heard some statements about its general policy. The only policy involved in this bill that I have been able to clearly perceive is the policy of raising $6,000,000,000. A great many objections—and I thought substantial objections—to various parts of the bill during its consideration by the committee were met with the query, "How is that going to affect the revenue? We have got to raise $6,000,000,000." I entertain an old-fashioned notion, Mr. President, that the equity and justice of the tax is quite as important as is the amount which we propose to raise, and that, in the event of a conflict between the two, equity and justice should be given first place.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] proposed to raise a large part of the amount which this bill covers by what is called a general sales tax. His idea was to impose a tax of 1 per cent upon retail sales throughout the country, and by that means not only raise a very considerable revenue—something over a billion dollars—but enable us to do away with those specific taxes which are more or less irritating in their operation, and which, consequently, produce much unpopularity and much resentment, and I think justly so. That proposal was not only voted down, but it is to-day objected to by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] upon the ground that it is placing a tax upon the mouths of the people—I think that was his identical expression—in other words, it is a tax upon consumption. Mr. President, I know of no tax in this bill, with the possible exception of the income tax—and that may be transferred so far as the recitals of this bill are concerned—that is not ultimately a tax on consumption. The difference between the proposition of the Senator from Utah and the provisions of this bill is simply that the Senator from Utah proposes not to make two or three bites at a cherry, but to put the tax where it will ultimately go, while the provisions of the bill by an indirect process, of which the taxpayer may be wholly unconscious, reaches the same result.

Mr. SMOOT. Only multiplied.

Mr. THOMAS. Only multiplied as it passes from hand to hand, for every man who passes the tax on—I will not say every man, but many men who pass the tax on—takes advantage of his power to pass it on by adding a little something to it for extra measure, so that he gets not only the tax which passes on but gets a profit besides.

Mr. President, the man who invented the system of indirect taxation is the real inventor of chloroform and all other methods of bringing about a blissful unconsciousness during surgical operations. I have always objected to the protective tariff, among other grounds, because of its indirect processes, through which the taxpayer is hypnotized and then robbed. The other titles of this bill do the same thing. They hypnotize the ultimate consumer, and then they place the tax upon him.

Why, Mr. President, nine out of every ten—I do not think I exaggerate—of the men coming before our committee and objecting to this, that, and the other tax, placed their objections specifically upon the ground that they did not see how they could pass the tax on; and every man who was in a position to be able to pass on the tax, if he made any objection at all, objected to it for other reasons, and his objections were not so loud and so insistent and so painful as were those of the gentlemen who did not see how they could pass the tax on.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the way to make the people take some concern about the manner in which public moneys are expended is to place the tax right upon their shoulders in the first place; to let them understand that they, and they alone, must "pay the piper." It is not only the best way to tax, it is the only honest way to tax, and honesty in taxation, Mr. President, in the long run, is perhaps more profitable even to the politician than that indirect process which bleeds the man to death while making him think that he is dreaming about paradise and happiness here and hereafter.

I am sorry that the tax proposed by the Senator from Utah was not incorporated in the bill in place of the taxes upon freight rates and passenger rates, in place of taxes upon candy and similar commodities, in place of taxes upon sales of automobiles and a great many necessities of life appearing in these other schedules. The committee, however, thought otherwise, and I have no doubt that the people will be told that this so-called sales tax, having for its purpose the taxing of the mouths of the people directly, was rejected so that the tax could be placed upon wealth, where the mouths of the people would in no manner be concerned or interested. I therefore voted for that tax as I understood it.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] called attention to the fact that the practical operation of that tax presented a great many difficulties, but that is true, Mr. President, of every important feature of taxation, either National or State wide in its scope, particularly if it is in an invasion either of some new field of taxation or the application of some new method of assessing the tax.

Mr. President, I have heard a number of estimates of the expenditures of the Government for the next year. The chairman of the committee having charge of the bill, and following the estimates submitted to him, fixed our expenditures for the year 1920, if I recall the figures properly, at something, in round numbers, like $8,000,000,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. Not $8,000,000,000 for the expenditures for 1920.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. The department estimates the expenditures for 1920 as being about $6,250,000,000, in round numbers.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, I got it a little bit too large.

Mr. SIMMONS. The estimates of appropriations are $7,440,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, my figures, Mr. President, were sufficiently comprehensive. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is equally certain that our expenditures for that year will exceed $10,000,000,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, before he goes on further I desire to say that the Secretary of the Treasury stated to the committee that whether or not the estimates which were presented covered the entire estimates, he thought $4,000,000,000 was as much money as we ought to raise by taxation.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I am aware of that.

Mr. President, a good many years ago Mr. Garfield, afterwards President of the United States and before then a Member of the House of Representatives, demonstrated that the peak of expenditures caused by a great war is only reached some months after the war has ended; in other words, the momentum of expenditures goes beyond the time of peace and projects itself into a part of the adjacent peace period. I forget what Mr. Garfield stated the average to be, but it was certainly not less than 12 or 14 months; and that, I am sure, will be our experience. I am inclined, therefore, to think that, unless we practice some sort of economy, the figures presented by the Senator from Utah may be verified by events.

What I am concerned about, however, Mr. President, regarding that feature of this discussion, is not so much what our expenditures are going to be but what our economies should be. I have not heard so far any discussion about retrenchment. I have heard much about probable expenditures, and I want to say that if this Congress and the succeeding one, recognizing the enormous burden of this war debt, will, regardless of party or party advantage, unite in effecting some system of substantial reform, we can reduce our expenditures for 1920 by perhaps $1,500,000,000, if not by $2,000,000,000. Will we do it?

Mr. President, primarily retrenchment is possible upon a large scale only by the adoption of a budget system. Just so long as I can introduce a bill for an appropriation of money which my constituents demand I am going to do it, regardless of the condition of the Treasury; just so long as the Senator from Utah, or the Senator from North Carolina, or the Senator from Texas, or the Senator from any other State, or the Representative from any other State can do the same thing, just so long, Mr. President, will the Treasury of the United States be utilized for the purpose of paying our political debts and replenishing the money in our respective districts and among our constituents. Indeed, Mr. President, that has grown into such a habit that the man who fails to bring home a sufficient amount of "swag" stands in great danger of being kept at home forever. The measure of a Senator's service in these degenerate days is the amount of money or the number of contracts he can get for his constituents, whether it be for the making of cottage cheese, the killing of prairie dogs, the treatment of boll weevils, the erection of public buildings at our various crossroads, or the payment of unnecessary pensions—it makes no difference what, so long as you get the money.

A budget system, Mr. President, will make that sort of thing absolutely impossible; and not only so, but it will relieve Members of Congress of both Houses of the embarrassments which necessarily result from getting money for one project in a State and failing to get it for another. It was not so in the olden days. I remember that Robert Toombs, of Georgia, once said that his proudest boast was that while in the Senate of the United States he never asked nor received a dollar for the benefit of his State or of its people. If he should get up before a Georgia community or any other American community to-day and make a statement of that kind he would simply read his own political death warrant. I regard it as he did, as a chaplet surrounding his brow and something that would look well as his epitaph upon a monument.

Now, we can make a great many reductions, Mr. President.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. THOMAS. Always.

Mr. KENYON. I am interested in what the Senator is saying about a budget system. Does the Senator believe that so long as the condition which he has described exists, this local representation and this measure of service of a Representative or a Senator by what he can get out of the Public Treasury for his State or for his district, there can be any budget system adopted by Congress?

Mr. THOMAS. I will have to answer that question like the Yankee by asking another one. The Senator asked me whether I thought that so long as that condition existed there could be a budget system?

Mr. KENYON. Whether we would not have to start the leaven working at the other end of the line so as to cause the people to demand a budget system?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not think there will be any budget system so long as the present condition exists. I was going to put my answer in the form of a question, but I will say that I do not believe that a budget system is possible until public opinion gets behind it, until the taxpayer wakes up to the fact that we are squandering his money.

Mr. KENYON. Exactly.

Mr. THOMAS. About the only quarrels we have here now grow out of controversies as to how much we shall tax him.

Mr. KENYON. When he comes to realize that by taxation it is all coming back on him to some extent he may change his views as to how to measure the services of a Representative or a Senator. I wish to say to the Senator that I have been working for some time here in my feeble way to get even consideration for a budget system.

Mr. THOMAS. I know the Senator has.

Mr. KENYON. And there is a resolution now on the calendar proposing to create a commission to report a budget system to Congress, which would be under no obligation to adopt the report unless it wanted to do so. When the resolution was before the committee, and when I urged its adoption, the statement was made: "We do not know anything about a budget system; we do not know what it is." When it was replied that this commission would bring in outsiders who would give the information, the answer came back: "We do not want any outsiders to come and tell us our business." So the situation is almost impossible. I am glad that the Senator is for a budget system, and I hope that we may get the resolution to which I have referred adopted and have a commission appointed to report to the next Congress some form of a budget system.

Mr. THOMAS. I am very much in favor of it, because I think that without it the United States is going to be bankrupt within the next 15 or 20 years.

Mr. KENYON. Of course it is.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from Colorado that his criticism, if it does apply to Congress, certainly applies in a greater degree to the heads of the departments of our Government. I say now that there has never been a Congress which has appropriated the amount of money that has been asked for by the heads of the departments, and if the Appropriations Committees of the House and the Senate had appropriated all that has been asked for by the different departments of this Government our appropriations would have been at least 20 per cent greater than they have been.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, that is true; but the department heads are extravagant because Congress permits them to be. They would not spend the money if they did not know that we not only permit it but, by the enactment of deficiency bills, make good all that sort of thing. We have got to begin here. In the old days in Great Britain the principal controversy raging around the throne was the power of controlling the purse, and the assertion of the right to control the purse by the people's representatives, or the claim of that right, culminating in the Cromwellian wars, limited the right of expenditure by royal prerogative to such sums of money as might be granted by the people. In those days it was supposed that the people, who earned and raised the money as well as paid it, would see to it that economy was everywhere practiced, due regard being had to the public welfare; but no monarch of Great Britain, in his wildest dreams of extravagance, could compare to the modern American Congress, which, as representatives of the people, controls the public purse, and in these days not only welcomes but invites access to it by every combination that controls a sufficiently formidable number of votes.

Mr. President, we heard from the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] a day or two ago an estimate of appropriations for 1919–20, amounting in all to $8,089.667,298, of which $2,644,307,000 was for the Navy. I do not believe that one-half of that sum, that one-third of that sum, is necessary, actually necessary, for the Navy in 1920. We have a naval program that ought to be carried out, but I do not believe that that program should be amplified. I believe that every dollar placed in a battleship is so much money wasted. I do not believe, Mr. President, that 20 years from now a battleship will exist in the seven seas. This war has revolutionized naval conflict, and out of the welter and stress two great engines of warfare survive—one the submarine and the other the naval airplane—and between them the wars upon the seas in the future will very largely be waged. To spend money to-day upon new battleships and dreadnaughts is simply to provide quarter decks for naval officers, and in all probability the generation which succeeds this one will recognize it and act accordingly.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. GERRY. Does the Senator mean to say that the first-line battleships did not have the effect of keeping the German merchant marine off the seas, and that we could have won this war if we had not had first-line battleships, both of the English Navy and our own Navy, which gave us the freedom of the seas?

Mr. THOMAS. I have not said anything of the kind. The first-line battleships in this war were very, very valuable, because Germany had a lot of first-class battleships that had to be kept in check. The first-line battleships and the other battleships were very, very essential in the protection of the English mercantile marine, but I want to say to the Senator that if when this war began Germany had had 150 submarines instead of having only half a dozen, we never would have heard of the first-line battleships or, much more, about the merchant marine of England. Fortunately, during the war the development of defensive measures against the submarine, and the multiplication of submarines by the allies, practically upon a line with their multiplication by the Germans, held that method of warfare in check.

Mr. President, I believe that if this war had continued six months longer every German battleship at Kiel would have been destroyed by American airplanes. I believe that airplane squadrons would have visited that rendezvous in quick succession, with the consequence that everything upon which the law of gravitation could operate would either have been disabled or swept out of existence, because of the myriad airplanes which, bearing the American colors, by that time would have had the supremacy of the air. I think that we should develop our submarines, our torpedoes, our aircraft, but I think, Mr. President, that the effect of this war upon the battleship will be precisely what the effect of the Civil War was upon the old wooden battle frigate—it will be retired and in length of time forgotten.

But whether that be true or not, Mr. President, if we are going to have, as I trust we shall have, a permanent peace—permanent for half a century at least—why should we, a year and a half after the war is ended, during a time of profound peace, spend more than two and a half million dollars for the increase of our Navy, when we have at the same time this gigantic burden of debt to carry, which our children, our children's children, and their children's children will never live long enough to pay?

We can cut out a great many other things, such as river and harbor bills and many appropriations in our Agricultural bills. We can do away entirely with the very foolish and expensive practice of erecting public buildings in little towns throughout the country; we can put a quietus here in Washington to enormous expenditures by serving notice upon the heads of the departments, to which the Senator from Utah referred, that these vast expenditures will no longer be tolerated. We can close up, and ought to close up, a very large percentage of the so-called bureaus and divisions not only in this city but their ramifications all over the country, and, above all, Mr. President, we can reduce the membership of our civil service by 40 per cent, save hundreds of millions of dollars, and at the same time increase our efficiency of service.

Why, Mr. President, a bill was introduced here the other day by a very enthusiastic and patriotic Senator, providing for three months' pay to every soldier in the United States Army upon his discharge. That appeals to the average man as something delightful; but I wonder if the Senator made a calculation as to what that would cost the Treasury of the United States. I have. It is considerably more than $400,000,000; but it has been introduced here, and it is not the only one. I simply cite it as a sample. The chances are that in our desire to secure the political support of these 4,000,000 of gentlemen when they come home the two great political parties will see which can get to its goal first and cast the most votes for that bill.

I do not know to what extent these things are going, but I do know that the watchword of this Congress and the next Congress should be retrenchment, frugality, economy—cheeseparing, if you please—and if we do that, $4,000,000,000 will be enough not only for the next year but for the year thereafter, and that is what I want to see in connection with this bill.

I hope, therefore, that before the conference committee passes upon this bill we will have an estimate of economies as well as an estimate of expenditures, and see how they look, publish them, let the people consider them, and let them contrast some of the various means to which we are proposing to resort to get money out of the Treasury. I do not know of anything that would make more interesting news than a collation of two weeks' introduction of bills in the House and the Senate calling for appropriations for this, that, and the other thing. I am inclined to believe that it would furnish a sort of a kaleidoscopic object lesson to the people of the manner in which the legislative department of the United States regards the money of the people, and perhaps, by its very extravagance and ludicrousness, awaken a public sentiment which up to this time, I am sorry to say, seems to be entirely dormant.

Mr. President, I had intended to discuss some other features of this bill at this time, but my failing voice warns me, to say nothing of the frowns of my very much beloved friend, the Senator from North Carolina, who has this bill in charge and who up to this time has displayed wondrous patience and forebearance with men like myself.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not frowning; I am smiling.

Mr. THOMAS. I will, therefore, for his sake, if not for my own, to say nothing of the large and enthusiastic audience with which I have been honored during my discussion, leave the floor, in the hope that when my amendment is submitted for a yea-and-nay vote it will at least get the votes of the Senators who have honored me with their attention.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I give notice that I shall ask for a separate vote on the postal-zone amendment, when it comes up in the Senate. It is section 1402 of the bill, amending section 1101 of the revenue act of 1917.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have placed in the Secretary's hands some amendments adopted by the committee which I should like to have read and acted upon. Most of them are pro forma amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota in the chair). The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 7, line 15, the Senator from North Carolina proposes to reconsider the votes by which the amendments on that line were agreed to, and simply to strike out the numeral "1" in parentheses, and the numeral "2" in parentheses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, in cases where amendments are proposed to portions of the bill where amendments have been heretofore agreed to, the votes will be reconsidered. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, line 24, strike out all after the word "amounts," down to the words "net income," on page 9, line 1, and insert "allowed as a deduction under paragraph (6) of subdivision (a) of section 234."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 31, line 14, after the word "income," and after the amendment already inserted at that place, insert a comma and the following: "and amounts received as dividends from a personal-service corporation out of earnings or profits upon which income tax has been imposed by act of Congress."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 55, line 24, after the word "income," and after the amendment already inserted at that place, it is proposed to insert a comma and the following: "and amounts received as dividends from a personal-service corporation out of earnings or profits upon which income tax has been imposed by act of Congress."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, after line 18, it is proposed to insert a new section, as follows:

PARTS OF INCOME SUBJECT TO RATES FOR DIFFERENT YEARS.

SEC. 206. Whenever parts of a taxpayer's net income are subject to rates for different calendar years, the part subject to the rates for the most recent calendar year shall be placed in the lower brackets, the part subject to the rates for the next preceding calendar year shall be placed in the next higher brackets, and so on until the entire net income has been accounted for.

For purposes of the normal tax any personal exemption or other specific exemption allowed in any preceding year shall not be again allowed against that part of the taxpayers' net income for the taxable year which is subject to the rates for such preceding year.

Any deductions not otherwise allocable to any preceding year shall be applied against the income subject to the rates for the most recent calendar year; and any balance thereof shall be applied against the income subject to the rates for the next preceding year or years until fully allowed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 62, line 12, after the word "corporations," it is proposed to insert the words "subject to taxation under this title."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, after line 14, it is proposed to insert:

In the case of a device which the taxpayer has invented and which has been accepted by the War or Navy Department since April 6, 1917, for use in the present war, and which has been put into actual use as the basis for successful major operations by the United States Government in said war, and the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy shall so certify to the Secretary of the Treasury, no tax shall be imposed for the year 1918 on the royalties received or any amount received in lieu of royalties by the taxpayer for use of said device, and the expense and deduction properly allocated to such exempt income shall not be deducted from any remaining income of the taxpayer subject to taxation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, line 17, strike out the words "the last annual," and in lieu thereof insert the word "any."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 33, line 18, strike out the words "prior to the close of," and in lieu thereof insert "ending within."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 36, line 18, strike out the period and insert a comma and the following: "except that in determining the net income of the estate of any deceased person during the period of administration there may be deducted the amount of any income properly paid or credited to any legatee, heir, or other beneficiary."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 36, at the end of line 22, insert the following: "and in the case of any income of an estate during the period of administration or settlement permitted by subdivision (c) to be deducted from the net income upon which tax is to be paid by the fiduciary."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, line 6, strike out the words "the last annual" and insert in lieu thereof the word "any."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, line 7, strike out the words "prior to the close of" and in lieu thereof insert the words "ending within."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 64, line 26, after the period, add a new sentence, as follows:

When return is made under section 226, the credit provided in subdivision (c) of section 236 shall be reduced to an amount which bears the same ratio to the full credit therein provided as the number of months in the period for which such return is made bears to 12 months.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 73, line 5, after the word "abatement," strike out the comma and insert "such sum of 5 per cent shall not be added, and."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 97, line 8, after the word "income," where it first occurs, insert the words "for the purposes of this title and of Title II."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 97, line 9, strike out the word "the" and in lieu thereof insert the word "such."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 207, beginning on line 19, strike out all of section 907, down to and including line 3, on page 208, and in lieu thereof, on page 259, after line 10, insert the following:

(c) Under such rules and regulations as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe, the taxes imposed under the provisions of Titles VI, VII, or IX shall not apply in respect to articles sold or leased for export and in due course so exported. Under such rules and regulations the amount of any internal-revenue tax erroneously or illegally collected in respect to exported articles may be refunded to the exporter of the articles instead of to the manufacturer, if the manufacturer waives any claim for the amount so to be refunded.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 251, lines 24 and 25, strike out the words "internal-revenue" and insert "income-tax and war excess-profits tax."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 273 strike out lines 1 to 15, inclusive, and insert:

SEC. 1320. That wherever by the laws of the United States or regulations made pursuant thereto any person is required to furnish any recognizance, stipulation, bond, guarantee, or undertaking, hereinafter called "penal bond," with surety or sureties, such person may, in lieu of such surety or sureties, deposit as security with the official having authority to approve such penal bond United States liberty bonds or other bonds of the United States in a sum equal at their par value to the amount of such penal bond required to be furnished, together with an agreement authorizing such official to collect or sell such bonds so deposited in case of any default in the performance of any of the conditions or stipulations of such penal bond. The acceptance of such United States bonds in lieu of surety or sureties required by law shall have the same force and effect as individual or corporate sureties, or certified checks, bank drafts, post-office money orders, or cash, for the penalty or amount of such penal bond. The bonds deposited hereunder, and such other United States bonds as may be substituted therefor from time to time as such security, may be deposited with the Treasurer or an Assistant Treasurer of the United States, a Government depository, Federal reserve bank, or member bank, which shall issue receipt therefor, describing such bonds so deposited. As soon as security for the performance of such penal bond is no longer necessary such bonds so deposited shall be returned to the depositor: Provided, That in case a person or persons supplying a contractor with labor or material as provided by the act of Congress approved February 24, 1905 (33 Stat., 811), entitled "An act to amend an act approved August 13, 1894, entitled 'An act for the protection of persons furnishing materials and labor for the construction of public works,'" shall file with the obligee, at any time after a default in the performance of any contract subject to said acts, the application and affidavit therein provided, the obligee shall not deliver to the obligor the deposited bonds nor any surplus proceeds thereof until the expiration of the time limited by said acts for the institution of suit by such person or persons, and in case suit shall be instituted within such time shall hold said bonds or proceeds subject to the order of the court having jurisdiction thereof: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall affect or impair the priority of the claim of the United States against the bonds deposited or any right or remedy granted by said acts or by this section to the United States for default upon any obligation of said penal bond: Provided further, That all laws inconsistent with this section are hereby so modified as to conform to the provisions hereof: And provided further, That nothing contained herein shall affect the authority of courts over the security, where such bonds are taken as security in judicial proceedings, or the authority of any administrative officer of the United States to receive United States bonds for security in cases authorized by existing laws. The Secretary may prescribe rules and regulations necessary and proper for carrying this section into effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I ask that we now return to the amendments that have not been acted upon.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, an amendment was passed over at the instance of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], whereby the committee proposed to strike out all of line 3, down to and including line 9, and to insert two subdivisions, "(a)" and "(b)." Also, on page 47, at the bottom of the page, an amendment passed over at the instance of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], under the head of "Corporations—Tax on corporations," all passed over down to and including line 13 on page 49.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina wish to have the amendments simply stated?

Mr. SIMMONS. That can go over. I am just trying to see if I can find any amendment that has been passed over that we can act upon this afternoon.

The SECRETARY. On page 65, under the head of "Consolidated returns," section 240 was passed over at the request of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, yesterday that section was disposed of, as far as the request made by me that it go over was concerned, after the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] had offered his amendment, and it was accepted.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, if that be true, I ask for its reconsideration now, so that it may remain open and go over. I wish to offer an amendment to section 240.

Mr. SMOOT. To the consolidated-returns section?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Then it can go over again.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask that there may be a reconsideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to the reconsideration?

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no objection, if the Senator desires to offer a further amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the action whereby the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered, and the section will be passed over until tomorrow.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over will be found on page 84, beginning with the subdivision "(b)."

Mr. SIMMONS. Let that go over.

Mr. SMOOT. That may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again passed over.

The SECRETARY. The second bracket, also; and there were passed over the amendments which follow in section 302, proposing to strike out and insert.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over, too, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again passed over.

The SECRETARY. On page 105, under "Miscellaneous," section 335 was passed over at the request of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again passed over.

The SECRETARY. On page 107, at the bottom of the page, Title IV, "Estate tax," was passed over at the instance of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, that was with a view to the motion that I submitted to strike out, on page 123, beginning with line 23, after the word "decedent," the remainder of the sentence. I should like to take that up in the morning.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, that is all right. I am going to move to take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. THOMAS. Just a minute, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have not yet made the motion.

Mr. THOMAS. I am going to suggest to the Senator that there is a very important meeting of the Committee on Foreign Relations called for 10 o'clock to-morrow morning to consider two resolutions, one introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] and the other by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. They are both of great present importance, and I do not think it would be possible for that committee to finish its consideration of those resolutions and be able to attend the session of the Senate at 11 o'clock.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator that I was just about to say that the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has given notice that he will make a speech to-morrow upon a resolution which he offered, I think, this morning. I have conferred with him about the matter of taking a recess until 11 o' clock and he does not offer any objection to it, as he will speak immediately after the Senate assembles and probably will occupy about an hour. By that time it will be the usual hour of assembling. I simply wanted to make that statement preliminary to making the motion—that the Senator from Massachusetts will speak in the morning when the Senate meets at 11 o'clock.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in reply to what the Senator from North Carolina has said, I will state that it makes very little difference to me at what hour I speak; but there is a meeting of the Committee on Foreign Relations to-morrow at 10 o'clock which is of very great importance. It would be rather embarrassing for that committee to have a meeting of the Senate at 11 o'clock, and it would be rather difficult for me to be here. I could leave the committee, of course. My presence there is not essential.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then the Senate might take up this bill and continue its consideration at 12 o'clock.

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to the Senate meeting at 11 o'clock, and I can arrange myself to be here at that time.

RECESS.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, December 21, 1918, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, December 21, 1918.

(Legislative day of Sunday, December 15, 1918.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The Vice President being absent, the President pro tempore assumed the chair.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, S. Dak.	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Jones, Wash.	Moses	Smith, Mich.
Culberson	Kellogg	Myers	Smoot
Curtis	Kenyon	New	Spencer
Dillingham	King	Norris	Sutherland
Fernald	Kirby	Page	Swanson
France	Knox	Penrose	Thomas
Gay	La Follette	Pittman	Townsend
Gerry	Lenroot	Poindexter	Trammell
Hale	Lodge	Pomerene	Underwood
Harding	McCumber	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Henderson	McKellar	Sheppard	Warren
Hitchcock	McLean	Simmons
Johnson, Cal.	McNary	Smith, Ariz.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. I will allow this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. KING. I wish to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] on official business.

Mr. McKELLAR. The senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], is absent owing to illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] on account of illness in his family. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] are detained on official business.

I wish also to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is detained by illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I have a telegram here from the Business Club of Deadwood, S. Dak., on the important subject of the Government ownership of railroads and express companies. I should like to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEADWOOD, S. DAK., December 10, 1918.

Hon. E. S. JOHNSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Resolved, That it is the sentiment of the Deadwood Business Club that railroads, express companies, telegraph, telephone, and cable lines, which were taken over for operation by the Government as a war measure, should be returned to their respective owners for operation with least possible delay, and that the country be restored to an industrial peace basis as soon as possible.

DEADWOOD BUSINESS CLUB.

Mr. NELSON presented memorials of the J. N. Collins Co., of Minneapolis; the A. M. Ramer Candy Co., of Winona; of the Roach Tisdale Co., of Minneapolis; and of the Schuler Chocolate Factory; and McCussick Towle & Co., of Winona and Minneapolis, all in the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against a tax on candy as proposed in the pending revenue bill, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Janney, Semple, Hill & Co., of Minneapolis, Minn., remonstrating against the proposed tax of 10 per cent on sporting goods, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition from the Albert Lea Publishing Co., of Albert Lea, Minn., praying for the repeal of the present zone rate on second-class mail matter, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Marshall Hardware Co., of Duluth, Minn., remonstrating against an increase in the tax on guns and ammunition, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Raw Fur Merchants' Association of New York City, N. Y., and a memorial of the Fur Merchants' Credit Association of New York City, N. Y., remonstrating against the proposed 10 per cent tax on furs in the pending revenue bill, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of William White & Co., of Moline, Ill., remonstrating against the passage of the pending revenue bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Minneapolis Auto Trade Association of Minnesota, remonstrating against the proposed tax on automobile parts and accessories, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the North West Haynes Auto Co., of Minneapolis, Minn., remonstrating against the proposed tax of 5 per cent on automobiles and trucks, which was ordered to lie on the table.

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 4733) requiring the filing of copies of all contracts for services rendered or materials furnished to the United States or certain contractors and agencies of the United States, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 627) thereon.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 5218) granting an increase of pension to Alonzo R. Cole (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 5219) granting a pension to Edwin W. Gordon; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BANKHEAD:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 200) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture certain war material suitable for improvement of highways, to be distributed among the several States; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

EPIDEMIC OF INFLUENZA IN ALASKA.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the governor of Alaska has called to my attention a situation in Alaska that I think requires early and prompt action by the Government. That Territory, especially the southeastern part, is being ravished by the influenza, which is taking off natives by the hundreds. All the Territorial funds, the educational and medical funds, and the Red Cross funds are exhausted, and the governor has incurred obligations to the amount of seventy-odd thousand dollars more than he has money in taking care of the situation there, and the demands are increasing. From what he tells me, I think Congress ought to take action without delay, and, looking to that end, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution, to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, in the hope that the committee may meet soon and hear the governor and take proper action to meet the situation.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 199) proposing an appropriation to combat the prevailing influenza in Alaska, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EXCESS WAR DEPARTMENT SUPPLIES.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I submit a resolution of inquiry, and I desire to ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has consented to yield for that purpose, if it does not take any time, and I am satisfied it will not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. PENROSE. Let the resolution be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 392) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be instructed to inform the Senate:

1. What amount of clothing, boots and shoes, leather, wool, cotton, and supplies of food the department has on hand that will not be necessary for the use of the Army under present conditions.

2. What action, if any, does the department contemplate in regard to the sale of such excess of supplies.

3. Is any additional legislation necessary to authorize the department to sell such supplies not necessary for the use of the Army?

SHIPS OF WAR SURRENDERED TO THE ALLIES.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 393), which was referred to Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas it is reported that plans are being formed by the naval authorities of the United States and the allied Governments to sink and destroy the vessels of war surrendered by Germany, according to the terms of the armistice; and

Whereas the destruction of such vessels is unnecessary and would serve no good or useful purpose, but, on the contrary, would be an unwarranted act of waste and improvidence: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that said vessels of war be disposed of equitably between the United States and the allied powers, and that the same be adapted to proper use as vessels of war or be altered and adapted to proper use in maritime service.

THE REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] if he is ready to go on this morning?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Has the Senate disposed of all of the committee amendments?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; they are not all disposed of yet.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will wait until they are disposed of before I offer a substitute.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I propose an amendment? I do not care to discuss it to any extent. It was discussed before the committee, and I should like to have a vote of the Senate upon the proposition.

Mr. SIMMONS. There are some committee amendments left over and I will call them up.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have no objection to taking up committee amendments. I know, of course, we have not disposed of the 1920 amendment, and it has to be debated, and I desire to discuss it when it comes up, but there is another amendment, a provision which was adopted by the committee, which I should like to have stricken from the bill. I am willing to reserve the matter until the proper time.

Mr. SIMMONS. There is some Senator, I do not now remember who it is, who desires to present an amendment to the section with regard to consolidated returns.

Mr. LENROOT. I desire to offer that amendment. I move to amend section 240, page 65, line 22, by inserting before the word "shall" the words "engaged in the same kind of business."

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no objection to that amendment if the Senator will, after the word "same," insert the words "or related," so as to include everything.

Mr. LENROOT. What would be the Senator's idea in inserting the word "related"?

Mr. SIMMONS. Where the work was in a coal mine, and in transporting it they were working in cooperation.

Mr. LENROOT. I have no objection.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no objection to the amendment modified in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to hear the amendment read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair could not hear it himself. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 65, section 240, which was reconsidered last evening, line 22, after the word "corporations," insert "engaged in the same kind of business," so as to read:

(b) For the purpose of this section, two or more corporations engaged in the same kind of business shall be deemed to be affiliated—

And so forth.

Mr. PENROSE. That is not the way it was put. The word "related" was offered by the chairman.

Mr. SIMMONS. The word "related" should be inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin will please send his amendment to the desk in writing.

Mr. PENROSE. There is really no difficulty about the amendment. The Senator from Wisconsin offered it, and the chairman of the committee suggested another word which the Secretary failed to read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has been barely able to hear either of the Senators in regard to this amendment, and the Secretary has not been able to do so. The rule requires an amendment to be reduced to writing.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have the amendment in writing at hand here. If the Senator from Wisconsin will give me his attention, I desire to say I think the amendment should read in this way:

For the purpose of this section two or more corporations engaged in the same or related business shall be deemed to be affiliated.

That is the amendment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 65, line 2, after the word "corporations," it is proposed to insert the words "engaged in the same or related business."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator this question: Suppose one corporation is engaged in a manufacturing business and it finds it necessary, say, to construct a building for its use, or partly for its use, and it does so through another corporation, would that other corporation come within this limitation which the Senator now proposes to prescribe?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly not if the building were only partly for the use of the corporation, and it ought not to; but if it were wholly for its use I should say "yes."

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SIMMONS. The trouble with the suggestion of the Senator is that this would not apply to any one transaction, but it must be related in regular business.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As the law has been heretofore, Mr. President, and as I think this bill proposes to leave it, any corporation could form a subsidiary corporation for some such purpose as that; but if I understand the Senator's amendment correctly, such a corporation, so formed, would not be subject to a consolidated return if it had in any degree any outside interest.

Mr. SIMMONS. Oh, no.

Mr. LENROOT. I will say in reply to the Senator that my understanding of the present regulation of the Treasury Department is that the consolidated return is now permitted only if the two corporations are engaged in the same kind of business.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator from Wisconsin is entirely mistaken in that. I have known of cases in which the consolidated return has been required where concerns, either mercantile or manufacturing, had constructed buildings, as in the instance I have given. The construction of a building and the operation of a building are not allied, are not similar, and are not the same business; it is only a subsidiary business, in a degree.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator think, in that kind of a case, a corporation should be relieved from the payment of a war-profits tax because of the ownership of a building which it is renting to tenants?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not understand that this is for the purpose of relieving such a corporation from the payment of the war-profits tax——

Mr. LENROOT. I understand it is.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But it is for the purpose of requiring a consolidated return instead of two separate returns.

Mr. LENROOT. No; but it does, Mr. President, if I may give to the Senate my understanding of this provision as it now exists. Here is a corporation making tremendous war profits, and but for this provision it would pay a war-profits tax based upon the invested capital and income of that corporation; but if that corporation, or the individual who may own the stock in the corporation, is also engaged in some other business, or, in the instance such as the Senator from Nebraska now speaks of, an individual has erected a building and rented it to tenants, out of which there are no war profits at all, out of which he receives but a normal return, under this consolidated return section he may include all of the capital that the other corporation has invested in that building out of which it is receiving a normal return, and may have that capital included in the capital of the corporation making war profits, and thereby greatly reduce the war-profits taxes that the corporation shall pay.

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. KELLOGG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wish to say that the experts who have been assisting the Finance Committee in the structure of this bill informed us that this consolidated system of returns will increase instead of decreasing the revenues of the Government. I do not think, therefore, that the construction which the Senator places upon the effect of this proposed consolidated return is a correct one.

Mr. LENROOT. I desire to ask the Senator this question: It does not require an expert to determine the fact that, if a corporation is engaged in making large war profits and it also owns stock in other corporations making only normal profits, under this consolidated return the corporation making war profits will be relieved from paying on war profits.

Mr. THOMAS. If the returns were to be made for the purpose indicated by the Senator from Wisconsin, of course the result would be as he claims; but the purpose of the consolidated return is largely as a matter of convenience, and the affairs of the different subsidiary corporations are set out in the consolidated return precisely as they would be if there were separate returns for each. It is a matter of administration, simplifying and expediting the business of the department.

Mr. LENROOT. Well, if the Senator please, the purpose in making the return can have no effect upon the results growing out of the return. The consolidated return is made compulsory.

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. KELLOGG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield further; and if so, to whom?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield further to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wish to say, if the Senator will permit me to make another statement—and that is a matter, of course, with which he is as familiar as myself—the consolidated returns, which are now permissible, result from departmental regulations and not from the statute; and the manner in which they have been made conforms to the process provided for in this proposed amendment. As made they have not had the effect, if I am correctly informed, now predicted by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Colorado——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] has been attempting to get the floor, and the Chair has asked the Senator from Wisconsin if he yielded to the Senator from Minnesota. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Chair that I thought the Senator from Wiconsin had yielded to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin has yielded to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SMOOT. Excuse me. I did not know that.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, if I understand the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], what he wishes to accomplish is this: The Senator does not object to a consolidated return in the case of what may be called an integrated business. If a manufacturing corporation must have a separate company to produce its raw materials and another company to transport the raw materials, and perhaps another company in this or in a foreign country to sell the manufactured materials, the Senator does not object to such a company rendering a consolidated return and the tax being paid on such consolidated return; but what he does object to is a corporation organizing or having stock in an entirely unrelated business simply for the purpose of reducing its taxes. If the amendment will accomplish the object which the Senator seeks, it would seem to me it would be a fair amendment if the Treasury Department believes that to be the result of the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I did not understand that the Senator from Wisconsin was particularly opposing the consolidated return in the original section of the bill, but that he was proposing to amend it so as to make it better, in his judgment.

Mr. LENROOT. I am not opposed to the kind of a case which the chairman of the committee in his opening speech gave an illustration of, where a corporation was really engaged in the same kind of business. The Senator from Utah, I think, gave an illustration of a chain of stores, where, for convenience sake or possibly because of State laws, they were organized in different States, but were really one business.

Mr. SIMMONS. Where they were really one business.

Mr. LENROOT. I am not objecting to that; but I am objecting to the case where a corporation engaged in one line of business, making very large profits, may utilize the capital and returns of another corporation not making large profits to reduce the tax that it pays to the Government.

Mr. SIMMONS. In that, I think, I agree with the Senator. I think his amendment is very helpful, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator from Wisconsin in the statement that he has just made suggests a limitation that goes too far. I do not think that in the case of two corporations controlled by the same forces or the same individuals, and engaged in the same business—for instance, the manufacture of munitions—one in one town and one in another, one of which is profitable and the other is unprofitable, the losses of the unprofitable should be subtracted from the profits of the profitable for the purpose of diminishing the taxes. There they would be engaged in the same business; that is, the same character of business; but it does seem to me that it would be wholly improper and certainly unfair to the Government to permit the unprofitable concern to subtract its losses from the profits of the profitable one.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that when this amendment is disposed of I shall offer another amendment striking out from the paragraph the provision authorizing consolidated returns in the case of individuals holding the stock of two or more corporations, even though they are doing the same kind of business. If one corporation has subsidiary corporations engaged in the same kind of business I think it is proper that a consolidated return be permitted; but if one man owns a dozen corporations in different States, although they are engaged in the same business, the fact that an individual owns the corporations should not permit consolidated returns, thus relieving those corporations from just taxation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me invite my friend's attention to the fact that in the mining districts can be found an exemplification that may result from the interpretation which I think can legitimately be placed upon this section. A and B may incorporate to operate a copper-mining claim and may also incorporate to operate a lead mine. From the copper property they may derive enormous profits, while the lead property, perhaps a hundred feet away, will be very unprofitable. The ownership is the same. It seems to me that it would be very unfair and very unjust to the Government for those individuals to take from the profits that they have made from the copper property the losses that they have sustained in the lead property for the purpose of diminishing the taxes which ought to be paid by the copper property corporation to the Government.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I will repeat that I expect to cover that question when the pending amendment is disposed of by offering another amendment to the committee proposal.

Mr. KING. I think the entire section is so dangerous that perhaps, in the interest of the Government, it ought to go out altogether.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. LENROOT. I offer another amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senator's amendment to the same amendment reported by the committee?

Mr. LENROOT. It is another amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the bottom of page 65, line 25, after the word "others," it is proposed to strike out the words "or if substantially all the stock of two or more corporations is owned or controlled by the same interests."

Mr. KING. May I ask the Secretary to state the amendment again?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The amendment was again stated.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, this amendment reaches the question just raised by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. Under the language of the amendment as reported by the committee, if adopted, we will have this kind of a situation: There may be three or four corporations in a given locality and three or four other competing corporations, some of which are making money, some of which are making war profits, and some of which are making only normal profits. If one man or one group of men own the three or four corporations, some of which are making exorbitant profits, others of which are making normal profits, and some of which may be making no profits at all, the amendment reported by the committee will permit consolidated returns of all of those corporations, depending upon the ownership by an individual of the corporations. In other words, it does this: The very wealthy man who may own several corporations will pay very much less taxes to the Government, and the Government will receive very much less revenue from those corporations by reason of the ownership of those corporations by an individual than it would receive from those same corporations if they were owned by different individuals.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I am in sympathy with what the Senator is trying to accomplish, and perhaps his amendment will accomplish exactly what he expects it to do; but this idea has occurred to me: Suppose the Senator's amendment is agreed to, would it not be possible for these same individuals to incorporate and let the parent corporation own the stock rather than the individuals and thus avoid the effect of the provision which the Senator seeks to incorporate in the bill?

Mr. LENROOT. I think that is true, except that these very high taxes are levied for the year 1918, and they could not incorporate to escape the taxes that are really levied by this bill. That is the answer to the question.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is a good answer, at least so far as the year 1918 is concerned; but they might adopt some such procedure for the next year.

Mr. LENROOT. As to the other proposition, I think that I can see within proper bounds for permitting consolidated returns. In some cases benefit may actually result to the Government by such a consolidation, while, of course, in others it will not; but we ought not by an amendment to offer a premium to enable a corporation or an individual owning a corporation to escape war profits.

Mr. President, the language of the amendment as reported by the committee does just this: It gives a premium, it gives a bonus, to the man who has control over a large number of corporations, tending to monopoly and tending to trusts in restraint of trade. The Government would take from the corporations owned by that man very much less in taxes than it would take from the same corporation if owned by separate individuals. It seems to me, Mr. President, that such a course can not be justified. Merely because Mr. Rockefeller, for instance, may own the stock of half a dozen corporations ought not to relieve those corporations from paying the same tax to the Government that those corporations would pay if they were owned by different individuals.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that this question of consolidated returns has been a very much mooted question. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue under the present law, although it was not expressly authorized, provided by regulation for consolidated returns in the case of the excess war-profits tax. The question was raised, first, as I understand, in the appropriate committee of the House as to the effect of that practice upon the revenues of the Government. Admittedly it is in the interest of easy and expeditious administration. It was contended, however, that possibly it might reduce the revenues of the Government because of the situation that the Senator from Wisconsin has presented.

The House did not authorize the continuance of this practice by the commissioner. It expressly prohibited it, and it did so upon the idea, as I am advised, that the result would be a diminution in the revenues of the Government. When the matter came before the committee of the Senate for revision we requested the authorities of the department to make a thorough investigation, based upon the experience of the department with reference to these consolidated returns as practiced under the present bill; and as a result of that investigation—very thoroughly made, as they have advised us—they found that instead of reducing the taxes of the Government it increased the taxes of the Government. Of course, we were advised that there would be cases in which the revenue would be less and that there would be cases in which the revenue would be greater; but, taking the average, we were informed that the returns to the Government were greater under this system than under the method provided by the House.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator two questions. First, I should like to ask him whether, under the present practice of the Treasury Department, the department permits a consolidated return depending upon the ownership by an individual of the stock of corporations?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am advised that it does.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator think that there is any authority in law for doing that?

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator repeat his question?

Mr. LENROOT. My question was whether the Treasury Department now, in permitting or requiring consolidated returns, permits or requires them, not depending upon the ownership of one corporation by another, it being a subsidiary corporation, but permits or requires a consolidated return depending upon the ownership of the stock of two or more corporations by an individual or group of individuals?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, it is very clear that if the stock of two corporations is substantially owned and controlled by one individual or a number of individuals, that is a unity of interest, and that is the basic principle of this amendment—that where there is a substantial unity of interest in both corporations or in both concerns, whatever may be their character, there may be a consolidation of their returns, because it is substantially the same interest, however owned. I do not conceive that it makes any difference whether it is owned by an individual or owned by a corporation. If the individual, as a matter of fact, owns a sufficient amount of the stock of the corporation to absolutely control that corporation, and owns a majority of whatever profits it makes, I do not see that that changes the situation at all. How does that differ from the case of a number of individuals joining their stock and controlling a corporation? Here you have, in the case of one individual, the same condition that you might have in another case as applied to five individuals interested in identically the same thing.

Mr. LENROOT. If I may answer that, there is just this difference—that you are offering a premium to large aggregations of capital, and saying to those large aggregations of capital: "The Government will take from you in taxes less than it will take from competing individuals." That is the answer.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, you would be offering that premium, as the Senator says, provided as the result of actual experience it is shown that you are granting a privilege to them, that you are permitting them to escape with a less tax. But when the proposition is sustained by the experience of the department, showing that, taken as a whole, it is not a privilege, but it is a burden, you do not reduce, as the result taken as a whole, the taxes that have to be paid and that the Government receives, but you increase the taxes to be paid and which the Government receives.

But, Mr. President, there is even a stronger argument than that in behalf of this general proposition. I think it requires only a little bit of analysis and reflection to see that if you permit separate returns for these great concerns that are substantially owned and directed by the same interest, you open the door to all sorts of manipulations, both as to capital and as to income. They may assign capital excessively to one concern, if it is to their interest to do it; they may assign income excessively to one concern, if it is to their interest to do it; and by manipulating the income and the investment of these affiliated corporations they may avoid and escape just taxation. Now, if you can treat them as a unit, the department can protect the Government against that sort of manipulated returns.

I am told—I do not know whether it is true or not—by representatives of the department that the department is in possession of information, since the passage of the bill through the House prohibiting consolidated returns, that there is a system being developed right now in this country, that some of the shrewdest talent of this country is being engaged in developing it, by which that can be made the means of so manipulating the returns of the taxpayers as to escape taxation upon a broad and big scale.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the Senator states that experts of the Treasury Department have advised the committee that the committee amendment would increase rather than decrease the revenue of the Government. In reply to that I will say that that can not be so if the Treasury Department performs its duty in allocating invested capital and incomes. It can only be true if the Treasury Department permits a corporation to assign to another corporation a greater proportion of income than belongs to that corporation, or a greater amount of capital than belongs to that corporation. But even if that were so, it would only come about through an increase—for the Senator states that he is speaking of the average—in the taxes of some corporations, thereby making up a deficit that will be created by the exemption from taxation of the war profits of other corporations. Even though that be true, it ought not to be a correct policy to lay down the rule that the wealthy corporation shall be permitted to escape its fair share of taxes if we make it up from some smaller corporation, so that the Government in the end does not lose revenue.

It is very plain, Mr. President—it must be plain to every Senator—that if there is a wealthy group of men, who of course own many corporations, a wealthy group of men making enormous profits out of this war, if they shall be permitted to include the stock, the capital, and returns of every other corporation that they may own—and of course they own a great many, some of them perhaps making losses, some of them making only a normal return—they will be permitted to utilize those corporations to escape their share of the tax on the war profits.

I have no hesitation in saying that if this provision remains in the bill, considering the fact—as fact it is—that most of these great corporations engaged in war activities are owned and controlled by a small group of men also owning and controlling many other corporations, it will readily be seen that the loss to the Government in revenue from the incorporation of this provision in the bill will run into hundreds of millions of dollars. It is one of these instances where, on the face of a bill, we seem to be exacting a very large share of the profits of corporations engaged in war activities, but in other parts of the bill there are concealed—I do not say intentionally by the committee, but nevertheless found there—provisions which it is difficult for any Member of the Senate, especially one who is not a member of the committee, to ferret out and find out whereby these war-profit-making corporations may escape their taxes on war profits. It is very difficult to ascertain the loopholes in this bill which do permit them so to escape. Nevertheless, they are there; and this provision that I seek to strike out is one of them. I say that if it does remain in the bill, the war profits that seem to be imposed upon these corporations would be very greatly reduced, without any justice and without any equity.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin asserts very vociferously that the taxes will necessarily be reduced. The experts of the department say that they will be increased, and that was the testimony that was given before the committee—that the result of this change will be to increase and not decrease the taxes.

Mr. SIMMONS. That was the result of testing it out on the returns of last year.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; that was the result of testing it in connection with the returns of last year.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Now, the Senator from Wisconsin assumes that, in the majority of cases at least, the subsidiary corporations will not be making good profits; that there will be normal profits, or very little profits, or no profits, or losses; and that those will necessarily be deducted from the gains made by the principal corporation. But let us suppose, Mr. President, that you have here a corporation that makes a hundred million dollars, and that that is the principal corporation. It has 10 subsidiary corporations, each of them making $10,000,000, we will say. That would be another $100,000,000. Now, add those together and you have $200,000,000; and if in a consolidated return you base your excess profits upon the $200,000,000, the Government is going to get more money out of it than the Government would get out of it if you were to allow each one of the subsidiary corporations to make its exemptions and then pay on a basis of a very much less income. So the result will be, on the whole, that you would lose rather than make.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to ask the Senator before he takes his seat what would be the effect if in the one company the owner or principal owner was making $100,000,000 and in each of a dozen subsidiary companies he was losing a million or two or three millions?

Mr. McCUMBER. Necessarily, Mr. President, there would be a loss; but inasmuch as the facts show that practically all of our corporations are doing well and making money, and making more money than they ever did before, and practically all of them are making excess profits, if you will add the excess profits of the subsidiary corporations to the excess profits of your principal corporation you will have a very much bigger tax for the Government than you would get if you should allow each one of the subsidiary corporations to make its deductions which are allowed by law and then to pay a less percentage upon a less amount of income.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from North Dakota, before he takes his seat, whether it is not true that in the illustration he has given he has not taken into consideration the capital of the subsidiary corporations? Even though they all make a profit, I desire to ask him whether, in the aggregate, the tax would be greater than though they paid their tax separately? Would it not depend upon the size and the capitalization of these various subsidiary corporations?

Mr. McCUMBER. Whether they would make profits, or whether they would make losses, or whether they would break even, necessarily would depend upon the amount of capital invested as compared with the income received; but I am assuming that they are making a fair return upon their capital in most instances.

Mr. NORRIS. So am I. I am assuming that that is true, and I am just trying to get the real meat in the coconut if there is any. But the Senator, in adding the excess profits of the subsidiary corporations to those of the mother corporation, has said that that would make a largely increased profit, which would be true, and the rate would be higher as you go up.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. But it would be reduced by the amount of the capitalization, and the other deductions that each separate corporation would be entitled to make. They could take it out of the consolidated amount, just the same as though they made individual returns; so that that would be an element to consider, as to whether it would be an increase or a decrease.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but if you will take a total of $200,000,000, and take $100,000,000 that will make a certain profit, we will say of $50,000,000 over the prewar conditions, and you take the other $100,000,000 which is earned by 10 other corporations, which is only $10,000,000 apiece, and then allow them their amount of exemptions, placing them in lower brackets than they would be placed in if they were added to the other $50,000,000, the Senator can easily see that there would necessarily be a loss to the Government.

If the hypothesis of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is correct—that in the majority of cases, even in those that he mentions, where an individual interest owns the stock in a great many corporations, it would lower the taxes—of course, his argument would be good; but the evidence before the committee was just exactly to the contrary, and what we know of business in 1918 is that practically all corporations have made excess profits.

THE COMING TREATY OF PEACE.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I regret to interrupt the debate, but I asked permission of the Senate a day or two ago that I might address them to-day on the question of the peace, which is the greatest question now before the world.

In the field of battle the great war has come to an end. The fighting with the German armies has stopped. An armistice, which amounts to an unconditional surrender on the part of the Germans, has been signed and is in course of fulfillment. But the peace is yet to be made. We must not lose in the terms of peace the fruits of the great victory which the armies of the allies and of the United States have won. A heavy responsibility, therefore, rests upon everyone who is to have any part, no matter how small, in the making of peace. The share of the Senate of the United States in that great work is very large and of decisive importance. No treaty can become binding upon the United States or be made the supreme law of the land without the consent of the Senate. The Constitution also gives to the Senate the right to advise as well as to consent, and it is the clear right of the Senate to offer its advice, whether invited or unasked, at any stage of the negotiations. Cases are not lacking in our history where Presidents have consulted the Senate before taking action in our foreign relations.

In 1902 I wrote an article on the treaty-making power of the Senate, and I there gathered together, I think, all the instances in which the Senate advised with the President before entering upon negotiations or upon any diplomatic transaction. They are very many. I am going to call attention to only two or three of them. The first one does not relate so directly to the situation now existing as some of the others.

In 1813 President Madison sent in a nomination for minister to Sweden to open diplomatic relations with that country and the Senate appointed a committee to confer with the President upon the subject. The discussion turned upon the President communicating through a committee of the Senate, but he makes a general statement, which I desire to read, because I think it is not without interest. He said:

> Without entering into a general review of the relations in which the Constitution has placed the several departments of the Government to each other, it will suffice to remark that the Executive and Senate, in the cases of appointments to office and of treaties, are to be considered as independent of and coordinate with each other.

How queer and old-fashioned it sounds to hear a President speak of the Senate as "an independent and coordinate body," and yet Mr. Madison was one of the framers of the Constitution, one of its principal authors, and in his day was considered a very able man.

On March 3, 1835, the Senate passed the following resolution:

> Resolved, That the President of the United States be respectfully requested to consider the expediency of opening negotiations with the Governments of other nations, and particularly of the Governments of Central America and New Grenada, for the purpose of effectually protecting, by suitable treaty stipulations with them, such individuals or companies as may undertake to open a communication between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans by the construction of a ship canal across the isthmus which connects North and South America, and of securing forever, by such stipulations, the free and equal right of navigating such canal to all such nations, on the payment of such reasonable tolls as may be established, to compensate the capitalists who may engage in such undertaking and complete the work.

There the Senate advised the President to enter on certain negotiations, and the President was Andrew Jackson, a man usually reputed in history to have had a somewhat determined will and to be at times perhaps a little arbitrary. Did he resent it? On the contrary, on January 9, 1837, nearly two years afterwards, President Jackson replied to this resolution stating that in accordance with its terms an agent had been sent to Central America but that from his report it was apparent that conditions were not such as to warrant entering upon negotiations or treaties relating to a ship canal.

President Van Buren, on June 7, 1838, sent in a message announcing that he intended to authorize our chargé d'affaires to Peru to go to Ecuador and, as agent of the United States, negotiate a treaty with that Republic. Before doing so, however, he thought it proper, in strict observance of the rights of the Senate, to ask their opinion as to the exercise of such a power by the Executive in opening negotiations and diplomatic relations with a foreign State.

President Polk, on June 10, 1846, sent to the Senate a proposal in the form of a convention in regard to the Oregon boundary submitted by the British minister, together with a protocol of the proceedings, and on this he asked the advice of the Senate as to what action should be taken. The message then continues as follows:

> In the early periods of the Government the opinion and advice of the Senate were often taken in advance upon important questions of our foreign policy. Gen. Washington repeatedly consulted the Senate and asked their previous advice upon pending negotiations with foreign powers, and the Senate in every instance responded to his call by giving their advice, to which he always conformed his action. This practice, though rarely resorted to in later times, was, in my judgment, eminently wise and may, on occasions of great importance, be properly revived. The Senate are a branch of the treaty-making power, and by consulting them in advance of his own action upon important measures of foreign policy, which may ultimately come before them for their consideration, the President secures harmony of action between that body and himself. The Senate are, moreover, a branch of the war-making power, and it may be eminently proper for the Executive to take the opinion and advice of that body in advance upon any great question which may involve in its decision the issue of peace or war.

On August 4, 1846, President Polk, by message, consulted the Senate as to entering on peace negotiations with Mexico and advancing to that country a portion of the money to be paid as consideration for the cession of territory.

On February 21, 1861, President Buchanan asked the advice of the Senate as to entering into a negotiation with Great Britain for a treaty of arbitration in regard to a controverted point in the Ashburton-Webster treaty of 1846. His own words are: "The precise questions I submit are three: Will the Senate approve a treaty," and so forth.

On March 16, 1861, President Lincoln, in his first message to the Senate, repeated the questions of his predecessor as to entering upon this negotiation for an arbitration with Great Britain, and said, "I find no reason to disapprove the course of my predecessor on this important matter, but, on the contrary, I not only shall receive the advice of the Senate therein, but I respectfully ask the Senate for their advice on the three questions before recited."

Lincoln, I think, could hardly be described as a poor-spirited man, and yet that was the view he took of the relation between the Senate and the President.

May 13, 1872, President Grant sent a message to the Senate relating to differences which had arisen under the treaty of Washington, and said: "I respectfully invite the attention of the Senate to the proposed article submitted by the British Government with the object of removing the differences which seem to threaten the prosecution of the arbitration, and request an expression by the Senate of their disposition in regard to advising and consenting to the formal adoption of an article such as is proposed by the British Government.

"The Senate is aware that the consultation with that body in advance of entering into agreements with foreign States has many precedents. In the early days of the Republic Gen. Washington repeatedly asked their advice upon pending questions with such powers. The most important recent precedent is that of the Oregon boundary treaty, in 1846.

"The importance of the results hanging upon the present state of the treaty with Great Britain leads me to follow these former precedents and to desire the counsel of the Senate in advance of agreeing to the proposal of Great Britain."

On March 3, 1888, the Senate passed a resolution asking President Cleveland to open negotiations with China for the regulation of immigration with that country. President Cleveland replied that such negotiations had been undertaken.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator has referred to this as an article prepared by him. Will he give the title of it and where it can be found?

Mr. LODGE. It is printed as a Senate document, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, Document No. 104.

It will be observed, Mr. President, that nearly all the Presidents have consulted the Senate in advance of negotiations, and they lay stress on the fact of the importance of the two branches of the treaty-making power consulting together before diplomatic negotiations of great moment are entered upon. No diplomatic negotiation ever entered upon compares in importance with that now pending.

President Polk, President Van Buren, and President Jackson, who was a soldier, Gen. Grant, who had been a great commander, all thought it expedient, and we have above all the precedent of the action of Washington and Lincoln, and, although I know a good deal of time has elapsed since they died, I think they are still considered two very great men.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am loath to interrupt the Senator, but I should like to quote right in connection with what the Senator has been saying with reference to the position of Washington and Lincoln the views of President Wilson as set forth in a brief paragraph——

Mr. LODGE. I think I was about to quote it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. LODGE. If it is not, the Senator can add it to mine.

I was going to say, Mr. President, in concluding my precedents, that even our present President recognized the possibility of original thought on the part of Congress when he said in his message of December 4, 1917:

> If I have overlooked anything that ought to be done for the more effective conduct of the war, your own councils will supply the omission.

I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin if what he has is different.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The quotation I wish to present is very different from that. It presents tersely the views of Mr. Wilson a year or two before he became President. In his work on Constitutional Government in the United States, published in 1911, Mr. Wilson clearly defined his views as to the unlimited and exclusive prerogative of the Executive in dealing with foreign affairs. I now quote a short paragraph from that work. He said:

> One of the greatest of the President's powers I have not yet spoken of at all—his control, which is very absolute, of the foreign relations of a nation. The initiative in foreign affairs which the President possesses without any restriction whatever is virtually the power to control them absolutely. The President can not conclude a treaty with a foreign power without the consent of the Senate, but he may guide every step of diplomacy; and to guide diplomacy is to determine what treaties must be made if the faith and prestige of the Government are to be maintained. He need disclose no step of negotiation until it is complete, and when in any critical matter it is completed the Government is virtually committed. Whatever its disinclination, the Senate may feel itself committed also.

Mr. LODGE. Let timid souls then take courage and be cheerful. There is nothing either in law or good manners or custom which stands in the way of advice from the Senate to the Executive charged with initiating and carrying on negotiations when the Senate thinks advice desirable. Let me not be understood in saying this as reflecting in any way upon the President's failure to give the Senate representation among the delegates charged with the work of formulating the peace. While I think it a grave mistake on the part of the President to ignore the Senate, because our ultimate responsibility in making the peace is quite equal to his own, I have no fault to find with his not appointing Senators as delegates to the conference. There is no obligation whatever upon him to make such appointments. It has been done, I believe, only once in our history, and that was when President McKinley sent three Senators to Paris as delegates to make the peace with Spain. The fact that three Senators signed that treaty certainly helped in its ratification, which was strongly contested, and it seemed to me at the time that this was a fortunate circumstance, because it is extremely desirable that peace treaties should be promptly ratified and with general approbation.

This, however, is something wholly different from the proposition that the Senate should know nothing about the treaty or the considerations which led to the adoption of its terms until it is actually laid before them. It is equally distant from the sister proposition that it is an impertinence on the part of the Senate to dare to have or to express opinions upon the terms of a peace which involves the fate of the civilized world. After all, Senators are men of voting age and not devoid of responsibility. In the present situation, which is grave beyond comparison, I think it is of the last importance that those concerned in the actual negotiation of the treaty should at least know the views of the Senate so far as the Postmaster General, in control of the cables, and Mr. Creel, in control of the news, will permit the opinion of the Senate to be transmitted to Paris.

In the present unparalleled situation the right of the Senate to advise as to a treaty becomes a solemn, an imperative, duty. We can not compel information, but we are abundantly able to make our own opinions known not only to the President but to the allies, who have a very clear and even acute idea of the power of the Senate in regard to treaties. They must know that the Senate can reject and often has rejected treaties. Others the Senate has refused to ratify and held without action. Many others have been vitally amended. The allies should not be kept in the dark as to the views of the Senate nor should the Senate keep silent as to its own opinions or as to the wishes and demands of the American people. The plan seems to be to project upon the Senate the most momentous treaty ever made without any information as to the steps which led to it or as to the arguments and conditions which brought about its adoption. This scheme, which is indicated by all the facts known to us, rests on the theory that the Senate, although possessing the power, would not and could not dare to reject a treaty of peace. This unworthy calculation is perhaps sound in practice, and yet I have seen a peace treaty bitterly opposed and ratified, after the exertion of the most powerful influences, with only two votes to spare. But if a treaty of peace might not be rejected it can be debated and amended, and I can conceive of extraneous provisions wholly needless for a peace with Germany being unwisely added, provisions which would surely be stricken out or amended, no matter how many signatures might be appended to the treaty. Protracted opposition and amendments mean long delays, and delay is only less unfortunate than rejection. All these untoward results can be avoided if the Senate frankly expresses its views beforehand on certain leading points for the consideration of the allies and of the President himself.

We have had already some important, able, and illuminating debates upon at least one question with which it is supposed the peace delegates will be called upon to deal. I repeat that I should be glad if those debates could be supplemented by some definite resolutions expressing the views of the Senate tersely and simply on some of the most important points. Whether the Senate will take such action—although I know that we have very definite opinions—I can not tell because there seems to be a feeling among some Senators that it is an act of intolerable audacity for the Senate even to suggest to the Executive that it has opinions which ought to be considered. Personally I do not share that view. It appears to me more becoming to an autocratic government or to a dictator than to the constitutionally representative democracy which has thus far made the Government of the United States so successful and which has raised the country to the peak of greatness to which it has attained. But if the Senate is not ready to take action as a body, which I earnestly hope they may determine to do, I desire at least to express my own views of the situation.

We have had a great deal of eloquence expended here on the beauties of peace and the horrors of war. We have had flaming appeals to the God of justice and all the usual rhetorical accompaniments which go with an earnest desire to shun unpleasant facts. I have no fault to find with the rhetoric or the eloquence of the eulogies of peace and the denunciations of war. They have all been uttered many times and will be said over many times more. They have one distinct advantage. Everybody agrees with them. They have one very great disadvantage. They lead nowhere except into a pathless jungle of words. The mighty questions which confront us can not be settled or even intelligently dealt with by words and phrases or by setting forth in glowing terms, consecrated by long use, what are called ideals. We must deal with human nature as it is and not as it ought to be if we are to have any beneficial and effective results or if we are to convert ideals into realities. Let me therefore assume what is undoubtedly true, that we are all agreed in a fervent desire for peace and in an ardent hatred for war, and that we all hope to have justice and righteousness prevail, and that we are all alike seeking to secure a durable peace. This agreement effected, let us come down to facts. In what I am about to say I shall confine myself to stating the facts which I believe are beyond dispute as simply as possible without ornament and without any attempt at eloquence or epigram.

Peace being our object, the first step toward peace is to make a peace with the country with which we have been and are at war—that is, with Germany. If the peace with Germany is to be durable, terms must be exacted which will make it, so far as human foresight goes, impossible for Germany to break out again upon the world with a war of conquest. This can not be done merely by treaty engagements and signatures to documents. At this juncture of affairs Germany would sign anything, and her pledge would be as worthless as the guaranties she gave to Belgium. It is well also to remember that Germany did not change her nature overnight when the Kaiser ran away to Holland. The deep-rooted ambitions, the evil principles carefully instilled for half a century, the barbarous methods and doctrines all remain unaltered. Physical guaranties which when taken would make signatures to treaties negligible can alone assure a durable peace with Germany. I do not need to rehearse what those physical guaranties should be, for I have stated my views upon them more than once to the Senate, and I think there is general agreement upon them not only in the Senate but among the American people. They include the restoration of Belgium, the return of Alsace-Lorraine to France, of the Italia Irredenta to Italy, the establishment of a Jugo-Slav State, and of an independent State formed by the Czecho-Slovaks. They include also the security of Greece, the settlement of Albania and Montenegro, the restoration of Roumania, the consolidation of all the Roumanian people under one government, as well as the neutralization of the straits, the putting of Constantinople under international protection, with Greece perhaps as the mandatory of the powers to administer the affairs of the city, the independence of Armenia, the return of those portions of Asia Minor where Greeks are predominant to Greece, the protection of Syria and Palestine from the Turks, a large, powerful, and independent Polish State, the independence of Russia's Baltic Provinces, the return of Danish Slesvig to the Danes, and the neutralization of the Kiel Canal. These physical guaranties which I have thus far suggested all have one object, and that is so to hem Germany in that she can not attempt conquest in Russia or in the East, and that the Slavic populations, which she has mercilessly used in her wars, can never be so used by her again. In addition to these guaranties, there must be heavy indemnities paid by Germany for the ruin she has wrought in Belgium and northern France and in Italy and for her destruction of vessels, both neutral and belligerent, through the use of submarines. In those indemnities the United States must have its proper and proportional share, not only direct indemnity for its ships destroyed by submarines and its people murdered on the Lusitania and other vessels, but a suitable restitution, in part at least, of the vast expenses forced upon us by Germany.

It will be for the peace conference to determine what disposition should be made of the German colonies, but one thing is essential, and that is that they should not be returned to the tyrannical misgovernment of Germany and that she should be deprived of those means for extending her commerce and building up military outposts in all parts of the world. The payment of the indemnities will be a work of time, and it will be necessary to take and hold ample security for the extinction of these debts. It is the duty of the allies and the United States to meet and determine what terms they will impose upon Germany, and then, and not until then, call in the representatives of Germany and impose the terms upon them. When this is done, the first great step will be taken toward the establishment of the world's peace. If we eliminate Germany from the opportunity to make war, the only source from which a great war is likely to come would be closed for generations.

Such in outline are the necessary steps demanded by exact justice, upon which, I think, the United States and the allies are substantially agreed, in order to make a lasting peace with Germany. But making peace by imposing the terms which we think proper upon Germany is only half the work which at this moment must be done. The peace must not only be made and agreed to, but it must be effective, and to render the peace effective there is much more to do than can be done by ink and paper. The first thing needful is to face the situation and look facts in the face. Nothing can be accomplished unless we work in complete harmony with those who are associated with us in the war against the central powers. I know very well that technically we had no treaty of alliance with the allies by whose side we fought, but technicalities are of no consequence in the presence of facts. No treaty of alliance could have caused a greater unity of action than was established between us and the nations with whom we joined in the war against Germany. Binding arrangements were made for common action in regard to food supplies, in regard to fuel, in regard to munitions of war, for the building of railroads and docks and everything concerning the supply of the armies in France. Our Navy worked in close alliance with the navies of Great Britain, France, and Italy. Our troops served under the command of a French marshal. All these things were vitally necessary, and these relations must be continued if we are not to lose at the peace table what we won in the field. To attempt in any way to separate us from our allies now or to prevent perfect unity of action is as harmful as such efforts were when we were fighting in northern France and on the plains of Flanders. To encourage or even to permit any serious differences to arise between the United States and Great Britain, or with France, or Italy, or Belgium, would be a world calamity of the worst kind. Any serious difference among English-speaking people would be deplorable in the highest degree. Any thought of war among them would be as abominable as it is inconceivable. To differ greatly with France, bound to us by so many ties of faith and affection, or with Italy or Belgium, is unthinkable.

Do not forget, however, that German propaganda with this object in view is as active and poisonous to-day as it has ever been. The people here and in the allied countries who were favorable to Germany are again busy in the effort to part the allies and the United States from each other, and their efforts find expression in dispatches in the newspapers and in the thousand and one forms with which we have been painfully familiar in the years just past. We must have common action now in making the peace as we had in carrying on the war, and this unity between us and the allies is the first essential condition for a successful peace.

We are also confronted with the great difficulty of finding a government in Germany capable of making a peace and fulfilling its international obligations. This is a problem which must be faced and which will require the greatest wisdom and caution of which the united peace delegates of the allies and the United States are capable. These are the two vital conditions precedent to a successful and truly victorious peace.

If these are fulfilled, then comes the practical work of making the peace effective. In other words, the terms of the peace must be carried out and executed. The United States did not enter this great war simply to vindicate its rights at sea, which had been invaded and disregarded by the German use of submarines, although that may have been the last drop which caused the cup of wrong and outrage to overflow. It was no doubt the technical point on which relations were broken, but it was trifling compared to the really great objects with which we entered the war and which alone justified our doing so. We took up arms against Germany because we were determined not only to protect our own safety and independence against her attacks but because the people of the United States believed that if the world was to be a possible place for free, law-abiding people to live in, the autocratic system and the organized barbarism of Germany must once for all be eliminated from among the nations. We went to war to save civilization. For this mighty purpose we have sacrificed thousands of American lives and spent billions of American treasure. We can not, therefore, leave the work half done. We are as much bound, not merely by interest and every consideration for a safe future but by honor and self-respect, to see that the terms of peace are carried out as we were to fulfill our great determination that the armies of Germany should be defeated in the field. We can not halt or turn back now. We must do our share to carry out the peace as we have done our share to win the war, of which the peace is an integral part. We must do our share in the occupation of German territory which will be held as security for the indemnities to be paid by Germany. We can not escape doing our part in aiding the peoples to whom we have helped to give freedom and independence in establishing themselves with ordered governments, for in no other way can we erect the barriers which are essential to prevent another outbreak by Germany upon the world. We can not leave the Jugo-Slavs, the Czecho-Slovaks, and the Poles, the Lithuanians, and the other States which we hope to see formed and marching upon the path of progress and development unaided and alone.

These are some of the tasks which the war has brought and which peace demands. They involve no alliances. They are specific questions, the settlement of which has been imposed upon us by the war, and they all are vital to an enduring peace. They ought to make the peace of the world. And behind the work of occupation to insure the payment of indemnities, behind these new States, whose existence we have recognized and whom we have helped to call into existence, lies the great problem of Russia. We can not shirk the Russian question. The whole civilized world has been shaken and torn by the convulsion of the war, the greatest war in recorded history. As one of the greatest and most powerful of the civilized nations, if we are to have a lasting peace now, we can not avoid the problems which the war has bequeathed to us. Of these problems that of Russia is probably the most difficult. Moreover, we have been committed to this work by the statement of the President on the 8th of January. In stating his sixth point, he said:

> The evacuation of all Russian territory and such a settlement of all questions affecting Russia as will secure the best and freest cooperation of the other nations of the world in obtaining for her an unhampered and unembarrassed opportunity for the independent determination of her own political development and national policy and assure her of a sincere welcome into the society of free nations under institutions of her own choosing, and, more than a welcome, assistance also of every kind that she may need and may herself desire. The treatment accorded Russia by her sister nations in the months to come will be the acid test of their good will, of their comprehension of her needs as distinguished from their own interests, and of their intelligent and unselfish sympathy.

The evacuation of Russia by the German troops, although postponed, is required under the armistice, but the President went much further than that. In the statement I have just read he in effect pledged the United States to aid Russia in rising from the chaos and disorder which had come upon her to the place which she ought to occupy in the family of nations. The restoration of Russia is essential not only to the peace but to the economic life of the world, in which we have so large a share, and the difficulties presented by Russia are in the last degree formidable. We have troops now in the northern part of western Russia, and other troops in Vladivostok. Unfortunately they are so few in number that it is greatly to be feared that they are wholly inadequate for the work they may have to do. Nevertheless they are there and must be sustained and very probably increased. We have at present no government in Russia with which anyone can deal intelligently. The thing that calls itself a government is no more fit to be dealt with in negotiation, no more capable of carrying out agreed terms, than a band of anthropoid apes.

We hear the condition of Russia spoken of as if it resembled that of the French Revolution. The only resemblance between them is that they were both revolutions. Russia is a welter of disorder, feebleness, and destruction. The French Revolution, it is true, was stained with great crimes and many executions, but the world has seldom seen a stronger government than that of the Committee of Public Safety. They consolidated France with a ruthless thoroughness which would have terrified the despotic kings like Philip the Fair, Louis the Eleventh, and Louis the Fourteenth, who devoted their lives to the same object. They put down civil war with one hand and threw back and defeated banded Europe with the other. Whatever the defects of the Government of France during the Revolution may have been, weakness was not one of them; but Russia within two years has spun round the whole circle from despotism to anarchy, and the most conspicuous feature is the utter inefficiency and feebleness of everyone concerned. They overthrew the autocracy, and the Duma established a provisional government, the natural step to be taken toward ordered liberty. The provisional government fell before Kerensky and his followers, who lacked every quality necessary to meet the situation. They had nothing but words to offer, and they fell in turn before men who were backed by German money and whose object was not to give freedom to Russia, but to destroy their fellow citizens and every element which was necessary to a social fabric under which men could live and prosper while they themselves profited in money and in power from the ruin they wrought. They have indulged in murder and massacre. They have destroyed property and all the instruments of industry, and the unhappy and ignorant people of Russia, in whose name they undertook to act, are to-day suffering from famine and disease and are in a worse condition than they were in the days of the Romanoffs. There is nothing to indicate that the Russian people have the power among themselves to extricate the country from this condition. It seems as if they had come full circle and had reached the point where nothing could rescue them but the strong man at the head of an army. Whatever the solution finally reached, however, it is perfectly clear that they will need the help of the civilized nations who have beaten Germany to her knees. It would be discreditable, indeed, to the United States if it failed to recognize its duty to this great country, a duty to which the President, so far as he could, has committed the United States. How the problem can be solved no man at this moment can say. The one ray of light seems to come from the people of the Ukraine, and we may be able to rebuild Russia by aiding the only people who have shown any capacity for maintaining a government and preventing the dissolution of the social fabric.

We must not forget the enormous importance of the Russian question and how much is at stake on its right solution. The only hope for Russia is to be found in the fact that there are countries, where a dissolution of the social fabric has not yet set in, which are able to sustain and help her. If Russian anarchy should be permitted to spread through western civilization, that civilization would fall. We have had in the past one great lesson in the fall of the civilization of Rome throughout the western empire. The ruin of the Roman civilization was followed by the Dark Ages, as they were called, and it took a thousand years for western Europe to creep slowly back to the plane of the civilization which had been destroyed. It is easy to wreck a great civilization. It is the work of centuries to restore it. We can not leave Russia lying helpless and breathing out infection on the world. We must help to bring her back to health and sanity and well-being. Some proper settlement of the Russian question is absolutely vital to the modern civilization of which we are a part. We can not disregard it or stand by as idle spectators without making any effort to aid Russia to rid herself of the poison which is now eating out her life and once more resume her place among the great nations of the world.

Beyond Russia lies the Empire of China, divided now into two governments. Our interest in China has always been great. It was never greater than at the present moment, for our safety in the Pacific may well depend upon the right settlement of the Chinese question.

I have merely touched upon some of the pressing questions growing out of the war and essential to the establishment of peace. These questions will tax the best abilitiy and all the intelligence and disinterestedness of the civilized world, and now I ask, Is that not enough for the moment? If we are to bring out of the wreck of the war with Germany a world peace, is not the first step to make peace with Germany, with which we have fought, and settle, so far as we can, the grave problems which are inseparably connected with the war and the peace? Would it not be folly to attempt at this moment to go further? I ask this question because other propositions have been brought forward which, if an attempt is made to fasten them upon the peace with Germany, may ruin all by trying to do too much at once. The questions involving peace with Germany and the settlement of the questions growing out of the peace without which it can not be established are in themselves almost appalling in their difficulty and in their magnitude. Could anything be more unwise than to add to them needlessly and introduce subjects which may lead to division among the nations which have conquered Germany and retard the settlement of all the difficulties to which this war has given rise?

The other questions to which I refer, and which I think ought at this time certainly to be postponed, are those suggested by the President in his first four points and in his last point of January 8. The first one relates to secret diplomacy. The crying evil of what is loosely called secret diplomacy lies in the secret treaties familiar to Europe. No such treaties ought to exist. They never have existed in this country. They can not exist under the Constitution, because the Senate is an integral part of the treaty-making power. As to the negotiations by which treaties are brought into existence there must be a certain amount of secrecy. If all informal discussions of differences between nations were cried from the housetops and discussed in public assemblies we should produce abundance of quarrels and very few treaties. There are parts of negotiations and certain gatherings of the nations in convention, such as we have had at The Hague, which can no doubt be made public, but that all the preliminaries of negotiations and all discussions leading up to them should be in public seems to me impossible. I think it will be generally admitted that we have never had more secret diplomacy than in the last four years under President Wilson, which would seem to indicate that it is easier to talk about than to discard or abandon those methods. I think this may have been inevitable, but it demonstrates at least that secret diplomacy is a loose term, and also it shows, I think, that the question is one of no vital importance at this moment, and that whatever our views may be about the methods of diplomacy we can make peace with Germany without undertaking to settle what shall constitute secret diplomacy in the future and what shall not.

The next point is the freedom of navigation upon the seas outside territorial waters. Here again is a subject which is not defined. The seas are free to navigation in time of peace. Therefore this proposition can apply only to time of war, and what it is proposed to do in regard to freedom of navigation in time of war we have yet to learn. If it means that there must be an abandonment of the belligerent right of blockade, by which in a large measure the United States was able to win the Civil War, I think the United States, as the greatest maritime Nation in the world next to England, will hesitate before it abandons a weapon absolutely necessary for its own safety and with regard to troubles which may arise within the regions covered by the Monroe doctrine. I can not imagine that England would for a moment think of abandoning the belligerent right of blockade, but I have no desire to enter upon the discussion of a subject which is wholly in the clouds. We can not talk intelligently about any proposition until we know just what it means, and that has not yet been disclosed to an interested world.

I can not, however, leave this question without pausing a moment to call attention to the strange development which has taken place in connection with the Naval appropriation bill now being considered by the House committee. It appears that the department is urging the adoption of a new program so large that it will in 1925 give us a Navy equal to that of England at that time, allowing for the British increase. I have been always an extremist in regard to the Navy. I have always desired to go further than almost anyone else, I think, in building ships. I strongly favored the program of two years ago because I believed that we had suffered from not working on a program and had an ill-balanced Navy owing to our helter-skelter method of unsystematic authorizations. But I never at any time advocated making the fleet of the United States equal to that of England, and I have never heard it advocated by anybody else. It has always been felt that the English fleet, which was based on the double standard—that is, which was always to be equal to the combined fleets of any two other nations—resulted in a navy larger than we needed in the United States and entailed a corresponding burden of expense. Our policy has been—that is, the policy of those who were extremely anxious that we should have a powerful Navy—to make our Navy the second in the world; but no one has ever thought it necessary to put it on the double standard. At this moment I am thoroughly in favor of a very strong Navy. I do not believe in reducing our Navy. I should be glad to see the number of enlisted men on the active list increased; but this new program goes beyond anything that I, at least, have ever contemplated. The present administration of the Navy, during the four years preceding the war, was in favor of a small Navy policy, to which I was greatly opposed. Now, the war is over. The German fleet has passed out of existence. The only naval danger that we were obliged to consider in the past on the Atlantic coast has ceased to be. We need a powerful fleet in the Pacific, and I am sure that we shall have a Navy sufficient to furnish that fleet to the western coast. And yet at this moment we are suddenly called upon to build a fleet which shall be equal to that of England. As one item, we are to have in 1925, 20 battle cruisers. Six are already authorized, although not yet begun; but I can not understand why it is proposed at the present time to provide for 20 battle cruisers at a cost of twenty millions each, to say nothing of the increases in all the other branches of the Navy which must correspond to the number of battle cruisers. I have heard reports that it was intended to be used in the negotiations to compel England to agree to disarmament under the menace of a great naval competition on our part. I mention this rumor only to say that it is unbelievable. I can not for a moment think that such an idea should be entertained by anyone, but it gives a suggestion of the impression which this enormous proposal for the naval increase brings. It must be false. Such a motive as that is too entirely unworthy to be entertained by any responsible public man. Another explanation was that offered by Admiral Badger, when he was advocating this new program before the committee of the House, which was to the effect that we should require it for police duty in connection with the league of nations. I will not stop to ask who is to order that navy about the world for police duty in behalf of the league of nations. I will merely say that it seems to me extraordinary that we should enter on a scheme for eternal peace throughout the world by proposing to build a Navy which in seven years is to be equal to that of England, so that at the end of that time England and the United States would have the two most enormous navies that the sun ever shone upon. How it fits in with the policy of reduction of naval and military forces or with the high objects of a league of nations I can not conceive. It is not necessary, however, to stop longer at this point.

One thing is certain, that the questions of international law involved in the loose term "freedom of the seas" are not in the least essential or necessary in making a peace with Germany now and in bringing the present war to an end.

The third point is about economic barriers. Different interpretations have been placed upon this proposition, but the President, in two notes which were read to the Senate not long ago, explained it to mean, as I understood, that while each nation was to impose any import duties which it pleased, the nations were all to agree that their respective tariffs should be the same to all other nations; that is, that there should be no discrimination. Let me remark in passing that this would prevent our having a reciprocity treaty with Cuba, which has been of great value both to the island and to ourselves; and if past treaties were exempted it would still prevent our making similar treaties with any of our neighbors in the Americas, because a reciprocity treaty is in its very nature a discrimination in favor of one nation against other nations. Personally I believe that we should have the right to discriminate against Germany if we choose, or against any other nation. The import duties we impose are a domestic question, and it should rest with the people of the United States to say whether they would discriminate or would not discriminate in those duties, whether they would make reciprocity treaties with other countries or whether they would not make such treaties.

Again let me say that I do not care to enter further upon this question, which opens a wide field of discussion. I desire simply to put it aside, because its settlement is not in the least essential to ending the war by a peace with Germany. We can make that peace without determining at this moment what we shall do with our tariffs, in the making of which I think every nation ought to have entire freedom.

The fourth is the point about armaments; in other words, the reduction of armaments, which, as I have already said, finds a queer expression in the administration's new naval policy. At this time reduction of armaments is a question which ought to be postponed, because we have neither the facts nor the knowledge necessary for intelligent action. It may be imperative to determine what sort of an armament Germany shall have by sea or land, because Germany has tried to conquer the world, and the world having conquered Germany has the right to put restrictions on her which would prevent her attempting the conquest a second time. But there is no reason for bringing up at this moment a general question of this sort, which can not now be intelligently determined with the world in the broken and torn condition it now is in.

The last proposition is the league of nations. The words "the league of nations" are captivating and attractive. Everybody would like to bring about a world condition in which wars would be impossible. We are all lovers of peace; we all are equally desirous to prevent the recurrence of wars. We all are deeply in sympathy with the purposes which the words "league of nations" are supposed to imply. But we ought to be extremely careful that in our efforts to reach the millennium of universal and eternal peace we do not create a system which will breed dissensions and wars. It is difficult to discuss it at this time, because no definite plan of any kind has yet been put forward by any responsible person. The Senator from Idaho the other day said and reiterated that in dealing with a league of nations we should demand that those who advocated it should be candid with the American people. That is the essence of the whole question. We all share in aspirations for complete world peace and for its maintenance; but the attempt to convert these aspirations into the hard, dry, and exact formulas of laws and treaties is a very arduous task. Intelligent discussion becomes difficult when the advocates of the league of nations drape themselves in trailing clouds of glory and omit to tell us the conditions to which they propose to bind the nations.

And yet it is essential that before we can pass upon a league of nations we must have the most precise definitions of what is intended. A league of nations is not a bill which can pass by title. A league is an agreement. We must know what we are to agree to, and no one has yet thought it worth while to tell the people of the United States what they are to agree to when a league of nations is formed. If, however, there is to be a league of nations in order to enforce peace, one thing is clear. It must be either a mere assemblage of words, an exposition of vague ideals and encouraging hopes, or it must be a practical system. If such a league is to be practical and effective, it can not possibly be either unless it has authority to issue decrees and force to sustain them. It is at this point that the questions of great moment arise. I will put a few of them as to details, which are more vital here than theories and which I hope will be carefully considered, not only by the Senate and the House but by the American people.

What nations are to be members of the league? Is Germany to be one of the members? If so, when? How are these nations thus joined in a league to vote in determining the operations of the league? Theoretically, in international law every independent sovereign nation is the equal of any other nation. Are the small nations to have an equal vote with the great nations in the league, a vote equal to that of the United States or England or France? I saw that there occurred in New York a few days ago a meeting of representatives, so called, of some small nations who demanded this equality of voting power. I have the report of the meeting here, but it is not necessary to read it.

If this form of voting were agreed to, the small nations could determine the action of the league, and if the league had an international force behind it, they could order that force where they pleased and put it under any command they pleased, which might give rise to complications. If nations are to vote in the league on a democratic basis, then their voting power must be determined by population. Here, too, some curious possibilities arise, not without a certain intricacy. The population of China is, roughly, four times that of the United States, and this system would give China four times the vote of the United States in the league. If England is to have the right to cast the vote of her possessions, India alone would give her from three to four times as many votes as the United States and ten times the vote of France. This system seems open to some objections at first glance, and they are objections which will have to be considered.

All the plans which have been put forward tentatively for a league of nations, so far as I know, involve the creation of a court. We must remember that we have carried voluntary arbitration as far as it can practically go. Assuming that there is a distinction between justiciable and nonjusticiable questions, who is to decide whether a question is justiciable or not? Is it to be done by the league, voting in some manner hitherto undefined, or is each nation to decide for itself whether a question affecting its own interest is or is not justiciable? Let me give an example, to make my meaning clearer. We have recently purchased the Virgin Islands. Suppose that that purchase had not been effected and that Denmark undertook to sell those islands to Germany or some other great power. Is that a justiciable question? If it is and it went before a court there can be no doubt that any court would be obliged to hold that Denmark had the right to sell those islands to whom she pleased. In the past the United States would never have permitted those islands to pass out of Denmark's hands into any other hands, because we consider their possession of vital importance to our safety and to the protection of the Panama routes. The same will be true in regard to Magdalena Bay—a case in which the Senate passed a resolution, with unanimity, I think, stating that on the plain doctrine of self-preservation we could not allow Magdalena Bay, or any other similar position of advantage, to be turned into a naval base or military post by another power. Would that be justiciable? And if not justiciable, then is the league of nations to compel, nevertheless, its submission? The League to Enforce Peace and the League of Free Nations Association, of New York, state as their second proposition that for questions which are not justiciable in their character there shall be created a council of conciliation as mediator, which shall hear, consider, and make recommendations, and failing acquiescence by the parties concerned, the league shall determine what action, if any, shall be taken. This would deny to nations the right, hitherto exercised by every sovereign nation, to determine whether a question is vital to their independence and safety or not. This, I think, I may say without exaggeration, would be a very grave step for any nation to take.

Suppose now that the court is established with a police force behind it. I have seen it proposed that any nation refusing to obey this court's decrees shall be compelled to do so by the international police force just as the decrees of our own courts are carried out by a police force. Let us dispense with metaphors. An international police force is an international army and navy. Who is to order that army and navy into action, and who is to command it when it is in action? Are we prepared to allow any association of nations by a majority vote to order the troops and the ships of the United States to go to war? Unless we are prepared to do so we are not prepared to join a league of nations which is going to enforce peace, and we should never put our name as a pation to any treaty or agreement which we are not ready to carry out both in letter and spirit. To sign a treaty and then evade or disregard its provisions is not only bad faith and dishonor, it is the surest breeder of wars. Let us be honest with ourselves. It is easy to talk about a league of nations and the beauty and the necessity of peace, but the hard practical demand is, Are you ready to put your soldiers and your sailors at the disposition of other nations? If you are not, there will be no power of enforcing the decrees of the international court or the international legislature or the international executive, or whatever may be established.

This is the heart of the whole question, but there are others which would necessarily have to be considered. Are we ready to abandon the Monroe doctrine and to leave it to other nations to say how American questions shall be settled and what steps we shall be permitted to take in order to guard our own safety or to protect the Panama Canal? Are we ready to have other nations tell us by a majority vote what attitude we must assume in regard to immigration or in regard to our tariffs? These are lesser points, but they must be met and answered before we commit ourselves to permitting an association of nations to control in any degree the forces of the United States.

If we insist upon the Monroe doctrine, do you imagine that the other nations of the world are going to permit us with our vote and our power to say what shall be done in Africa, Europe, and Asia, and then when it comes to the Americas to be met with the statement that there is a great circle drawn by the Monroe doctrine about those continents and that they can not put their hands on them? Does anyone imagine for a moment that the other nations of the world would accede to such a proposition as this? The only alternative, if we are to have a league of nations which is to travel over the world and settle all possible wars under the authority of a body of nations assembled by representation, is to place them all on the same footing and the Monroe doctrine would have to be abandoned.

We have now at this moment a league of nations. They have been engaged in compelling Germany to make peace and in restoring peace to the world. It has taken four years of the bloodiest war ever known to get that peace. By this existing and most efficient league the peace once signed must be carried out and made effective. Therefore, it is well to reflect that entering upon a new and larger league of nations involves somewhat heavy responsibilities and dangers which must be carefully examined and deliberately considered before they are incurred. The attempt to form now a league of nations—and I mean an effective league, with power to enforce its decrees—no other is worth discussing—can tend at this moment only to embarrass the peace that we ought to make at once with Germany. The American people desire as prompt action on peace with Germany as is consistent with safety. The attempt to attach the provisions for an effective league of nations to the treaty of peace now making with Germany would be to launch the nations who have been fighting Germany on a sea of boundless discussion, the very thing Germany most desires. It would cause wide differences of opinion and bring long delays. If the attempt was successful and a league of nations, with the powers about which I have ventured to inquire vested in it, were to come here before the Senate, it might endanger the peace treaty and force amendments. It certainly would lead to very long delays. Is not the first duty of all the countries united against Germany to make a peace with Germany? Is that not the way to bring peace to the world now? Ought we not to avoid, so far as possible, all delays? Ought we not, speaking only for ourselves, to have a treaty here before the Senate which will not involve interminable discussions about the provisions of a league? Is it not our first duty and our highest duty to bring peace to the world at this moment and not encumber it by trying to provide against wars which never may be fought and against difficulties which lie far ahead in a dim and unknown future? I have merely glanced at these outlying questions, my purpose being simply to show that they ought none of them to be pressed at this time; that the making of peace with Germany and the settlement of the questions inseparably connected with it is enough and more than enough for the present without embarrassing it with questions which involve the settlement of the unknown, without the attempt to deal with all possible questions that ever may arise between nations. To enter on these disputed fields which are not necessary to the making of the peace with Germany seems to me perilous and more likely at this moment to lead to trouble and to a failure with the German peace and its associated questions than to anything else.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, as the supply of Document No. 104 is exhausted and many Senators desire to have it reprinted, I will print it at the end of my speech, if I have permission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, leave will be granted.

The document referred to is as follows:

[Senate Document No. 104, 57th Cong., 1st sess.]

THE TREATY-MAKING POWERS OF THE SENATE.

(By HENRY CABOT LODGE. Reprinted, by permission of Charles Scribner's Sons, from Scribner's Magazine for January, 1902.)

"The action of the Senate upon the Hay-Pauncefote treaty in December, 1900, gave rise to much discussion not only in regard to the merits of the treaty and of the Senate amendments, but also as to the rights and functions of the Senate as part of the treaty-making power. That there should be differences of opinion as to the merits of the questions involved in the treaty is entirely natural, but it seems strange that there should be any misapprehension as to the functions and powers of the Senate, because those are not matters of opinion, but well-established facts, simple in themselves and clearly defined both by law and precedent. Yet such misapprehension not only existed but was manifested here and there in the United States by statements and arguments as confident as they were erroneous. The English newspapers, as a rule, of course, did not know anything about the powers of the Senate, but seemed to have a general belief that the Senate amendments were in some way a gross breach of faith, a view not only susceptible of explanation, but very soothing to those who held it, and quite characteristic. It is, however, a much more serious matter when misapprehension of this kind is found among those who are charged with the conduct of government. It is their duty and their business to understand thoroughly the institutions, constitutional provisions, and political methods of other countries with which they are obliged to have dealings and to maintain relations. We have a right to expect that Lord Lansdowne, a statesman of long experience, who has held some of the highest offices under the British Crown, who has just been advanced from the great post of secretary of war to the still greater one of secretary of state for foreign affairs, should understand thoroughly the constitutional provisions and modes of governmental procedure in the United States. Yet we find in Lord Lansdowne's note to Lord Pauncefote of February 22, 1901, in reference to the Senate amendments the following statement:

"'The Clayton-Bulwer treaty is an international contract of unquestionable validity; a contract which, according to well-established international usage, ought not to be abrogated or modified save with the consent of both the parties to the contract. His Majesty's Government find themselves confronted with a proposal communicated to them by the United States Government, without any previous attempt to ascertain their views, for the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.'

"The meaning of this passage, taken as a whole, is not very clear, and in the last clause it contains at least one singular proposition. Admitting the international usage to be as Lord Lansdowne states it, the Hay-Pauncefote negotiation conformed to it strictly. The sole purpose of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty was to modify, by amicable agreement, the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. So far as the Hay-Pauncefote treaty went it modified the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and to that extent superseded it. How far it superseded it was a disputed point. It was strongly argued here that the Hay-Pauncefote treaty ex necessitate superseded entirely the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and those Senators who advocated the insertion of the words 'which is hereby superseded' were generally held to be overcautious. It was in fact this division of opinion as to the extent to which the Clayton-Bulwer treaty had been superseded which led to the adoption of the first Senate amendment. It would now appear from Lord Lansdowne's note that those who desired a specific statement of the supersession of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty were right in their construction, that the supersession was not complete as the Hay-Pauncefote treaty originally stood.

"The point, however, to which I wish to draw attention here is quite different from the question of the supersession of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty in whole or in part, and is contained in the last sentence of the passage I have quoted. Lord Lansdowne there complains that his Government is confronted by a proposal from the United States without any previous attempt to ascertain their views. Here is where his misapprehension of our Constitution appears. If Mr. Hay had proposed to Lord Pauncefote, at any stage of their discussion, to insert clauses like the Senate amendments the proposal might have been accepted or rejected, but no complaint would or could have been made that His Majesty's Government was confronted by a proposal upon which their views had not been previously ascertained. Such propositions, coming from Mr. Hay, would have been entirely germane to the purpose of the negotiations, even if they had extended to a simple abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and would have been so recognized. What actually happened was that these propositions were offered at a later stage of the negotiation by the other part of the American treaty-making power in the only manner in which they could then be offered, and are therefore no more a subject of just complaint on account of the manner of their presentation than if they had been put forward at an earlier stage by Mr. Hay. If we follow the negotiation through its different phases, what has just been stated becomes apparent. Mr. Hay and Lord Pauncefote open a negotiation for the modification of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty in such manner as to remove the obstacles which it may present to the construction of the Central American canal by the United States. After due discussion they agree upon and sign a treaty. That agreement, so far as Great Britain is concerned, requires only the approval of the King for its completion, but with the United States the case is very different, because no treaty can be ratified by the President of the United States without the consent of the Senate. The treaty, so called, is therefore still inchoate, a mere project for a treaty, until the consent of the Senate has been given to it. That all treaties must be submitted to the Senate and obtain the Senate's approval before they can be ratified and become binding upon the United States was, we may assume, well known to Lord Lansdowne. But he does not seem to have realized that the Senate could properly continue the negotiation begun by Mr. Hay and Lord Pauncefote by offering new or modified propositions to His Majesty's Government. Of this he was clearly not informed or he would not have made the complaint about being confronted with new propositions, as if something unusual and unfair had been done. No one expects the 'man in the street' or the London editor to remember that so long ago as 1795 the Senate made an entirely new amendment to the Jay treaty and that England accepted it, or that so recently as March, 1900, the Senate made amendments to the treaty regulating the tenure and disposition of the property of aliens and that England accepted them, or that it has been the uniform practice of the Senate to amend treaties whenever it seemed their duty to do so. But a British secretary of state for foreign affairs is, of course, familiar with all these things and ought, therefore, to realize that the Senate can only present its views to a foreign Government by formulating them in the shape of amendments, which the foreign Government may reject or accept or meet with counter propositions, but of which it has no more right to complain than it has to complain of the offer of any germane proposition at any other stage of the negotiation.

"With misapprehension like this existing not only in the British foreign office and the London press, but also in the minds of one or two exceptionally 'able' editors and correspondents in this country, who spoke of the Senate's action in amending the Hay-Pauncefote treaty as a modern usurpation, it seems not amiss to explain briefly the nature and history of the treaty-making power in the United States. The explanation is easy. It rests, indeed, on constitutional provisions so simple and on precedents so notorious that one feels inclined to begin with an apology for stating anything at once so familiar and so rudimentary. Yet it would appear that the circumstances just set forth fully justify both the explanation of the law and the statement of the facts of history.

"The power to make treaties is at once a badge and an inherent right of every sovereign and independent nation. The 13 American colonies of Great Britain, as part of the British Empire and as dependencies of the British Crown, were not sovereign nations and did not possess the treaty-making power. That power was vested in the British Crown, and when exercised the colonies were bound by the action and agreements of the British Government. When the 13 Colonies jointly and severally threw off their allegiance to the British Crown and became independent, all the usual rights of sovereignty which they had not before possessed vested without restriction in each one of the 13 States. The treaty-making power was exercised accordingly by the Continental Congress, which represented all the States and where the vote was taken by States. Under the subsequent Articles of Confederation the treaty-making power could not be exercised by any State alone or by two or more States without the consent of the United States in Congress, and was vested in the Congress of the Confederation, where, as in the Continental Congress, each State had one vote and where the assent of nine States was required to ratify a treaty. From this it will be observed that this sovereign right which had vested absolutely in each State, although it was confided to the Congress of the United States, was kept wholly within the control of the States as such, and was never permitted to become an executive function. This was the practice and this the precedent which the Convention found before them when they met in Philadelphia in 1787 to frame a new constitution, and they showed no disposition to depart from either. The States were very jealous of their sovereign rights, among which the power to make treaties was one of the most important, and having so recently emerged from a colonial condition they were also very suspicious and very much afraid of dangerous foreign influences, especially in the making of treaties. At the outset, therefore, it seems to have been the universal opinion that the relations of the United States with other nations should be exclusively managed and controlled by the representatives of the States, as such, in the Senate. The strength and prevalence of this feeling are best shown by the various plans for a constitution presented to the Convention. The Virginia plan, so called, was embodied in resolutions offered by Mr. Randolph, which proposed to enlarge and amend the Articles of Confederation and passed over without mention the treaty-making power, accepting apparently the existing system, which vested it in the States, voting as such through their representatives. The plan offered by Mr. Pinckney provided that—

"'The Senate shall have the sole and exclusive power to declare war, and to make treaties, and to appoint ambassadors and other ministers to foreign nations, and judges of the Supreme Court.'

"The New Jersey plan offered by Mr. Patterson, which aimed only at a mild amendment of the Articles of Confederation, left the treaty-making power, as under the Confederation, wholly within the control of the States voting as such in Congress.

"Hamilton, who went to the other extreme from the New Jersey plan, gave the treaty-making power in his scheme to the President and the Senate, but conferred on the Senate alone the power to declare war.

"All these plans, as well as the general resolutions agreed upon after weeks of debate, went to a committee of detail, which on August 6 reported through Mr. Rutledge the first draft of the Constitution.

"Section 1 of article 9 of this first draft provided that 'the Senate of the United States shall have power to make treaties and to appoint ambassadors and judges of the Supreme Court.'

"The manner in which this clause as reported by the committee of detail was modified is best described by Mr. George Ticknor Curtis in his 'Constitutional History of the United States.' (Vol. I, pp. 579–581. Last edition.)

"'The power to make treaties, which had been given to the Senate by the committee of detail, and which was afterwards transferred to the President, to be exercised with the advice and consent of two-thirds of the Senators present, was thus modified on account of the changes which the plan of government had undergone, and which have been previously explained. The power to declare war having been vested in the whole legislature it was necessary to provide the mode in which a war was to be terminated. As the President was to be the organ of communication with other governments, and as he would be the general guardian of the national interests, the negotiation of a treaty of peace and of all other treaties was necessarily confided to him. But as treaties would not only involve the general interests of the Nation, but might touch the particular interests of individual States, and, whatever their effect, were to be part of the supreme law of the land, it was necessary to give to the Senators, as the direct representatives of the States, a concurrent authority with the President over the relations to be affected by them. The rule of ratification suggested by the committee to whom this subject was last confided was that a treaty might be sanctioned by two-thirds of the Senators present, but not by a smaller number. A question was made, however, and much considered, whether treaties of peace ought not to be subjected to a different rule. One suggestion was that the Senate ought to have power to make treaties of peace without the concurrence of the President, on account of his possible interest in the continuance of a war from which he might derive power and importance. But an objection, strenuously urged, was that if the power to make a treaty of peace were confided to the Senate alone, and a majority or two-thirds of the whole Senate were to be required to make such a treaty, the difficulty of obtaining peace would be so great that the legislature would be unwilling to make war on account of the fisheries, the navigation of the Mississippi, and other important objects of the Union. On the other hand, it was said that a majority of the States might be a minority of the people of the United States, and that the representatives of a minority of the Nation ought not to have power to decide the conditions of peace.

"'The result of these various objections was a determination on the part of a large majority of the States not to make treaties of peace an exception to the rule, but to provide a uniform rule for the ratification of all treaties. The rule of the Confederation, which had required the assent of nine States in Congress to every treaty or alliance, had been found to work great inconvenience, as any rule must do which should give to a minority of States power to control the foreign relations of the country. The rule established by the Constitution, while it gives to every State an opportunity to be present and to vote, requires no positive quorum of the Senate for the ratification of a treaty; it simply demands that the treaty shall receive the assent of two-thirds of all the Members who may be present. The theory of the Constitution undoubtedly is that the President represents the people of the United States generally and the Senators represent their respective States, so that by the concurrence which the rule thus requires the necessity for a fixed quorum of the States is avoided and the operations of this function of the Government are greatly facilitated and simplified. The adoption also of that part of the rule which provides that the Senate may either "advise or consent" enables that body so far to initiate a treaty as to propose one for the consideration of the President, although such is not the general practice.'

"The obvious fact that the President must be the representative of the country in all dealings with foreign nations, and that the Senate in its very nature could not, like the Chief Executive, initiate and conduct negotiations, compelled the convention to confer upon him an equal share in the power to make treaties. This was an immense concession by the States, and they had no idea of giving up their ultimate control to a President elected by the people generally. Here, therefore, is the reason for the provision of the Constitution which makes the consent of the Senate by a two-thirds majority necessary to the ratification of any treaty projected or prepared by the President. The required assent of the Senate is the reservation to the States of an equal share in the sovereign power of making treaties which before the adoption of the Constitution was theirs without limit or restriction. The treaty clause, as finally agreed to by the convention and ratified by the States, is as follows: 'He (the President) shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur, and he shall nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall appoint ambassadors,' etc.

"I have quoted the provision in regard to appointments in order to define more fully the previous one relating to treaties. The use of words 'advice and consent' in both provisions has given rise to misapprehensions in some minds, and even in one instance at least to the astounding proposition that because the Senate can not amend a nomination by striking out the name sent in by the President and inserting another, it therefore, by analogy, can not amend a treaty. It is for this reason well to note that the carefully phrased section gives the President absolute and unrestricted right to nominate, and the Senate can only advise and consent to the appointment of a given person. All right to interfere in the remotest degree with the power of nomination and the consequent power of selection is wholly taken from the Senate. Very different is the wording in the treaty clause. There the words 'by and with the advice and consent of' come in after the words 'shall have power' and before the power referred to is defined. The 'advice and consent of the Senate' are therefore coextensive with the 'power' conferred on the President, which is 'to make treaties' and apply to the entire process of treaty making. The States in the convention of 1787 agreed to share the treaty power with the President created by the Constitution, but they never thought of resigning it or of retaining anything less than they gave.

"The Senate, being primarily a legislative body, can not in the nature of things initiate a negotiation with another nation, for they have no authority to appoint or to receive ambassadors or ministers. But in every other respect, under the language of the Constitution and in the intent of the framers, they stand on a perfect equality with the President in the making of treaties. They have an undoubted right to recommend either that a negotiation be entered upon or that it be not undertaken, and I shall show presently that this right has been exercised and recognized in both directions. As a matter of course, the President would not be bound by a resolution declaring against opening a negotiation, but such a resolution passed by a two-thirds vote would probably be effective and would serve to stop any proposed negotiation, as we shall see was the case under President Lincoln. In the same way the Senate has the right to advise the President to enter upon a negotiation, and has exercised this right more than once. Here, again, the President is not bound to comply with the resolution, for his power is equal and coordinate with that of the Senate, but such action on the part of the Senate, no doubt, would always have due weight. That this right to advise or disapprove the opening of negotiations has been very rarely exercised is unquestionably true in practice, and the practice is both sound and wise; but the right remains none the less, just as the Constitution gave it, not impaired in any way by the fact that it has been but little used.

"The right of the Senate to share in treaty making at any stage has always been fully recognized, both by the Senate and the Executive, not only at the beginning of the Government, when the President and many Senators were drawn from among the framers of the Constitution, and were, therefore, familiar with their intentions, but at all periods since. A brief review of some of the messages of the Presidents and of certain resolutions of the Senate will show better than any description the relations between the two branches of the treaty-making power in the United States, the uniform interpretation of the Constitution in this respect, and the precedents which have been established.

"On August 21, 1789, President Washington notified the Senate that he would meet with them on the following day to advise with them as to the terms of a treaty to be negotiated with the Southern Indians. On August 22, in accordance with this notice, the President came into the Senate Chamber, attended by Gen. Knox, and laid before the Senate a statement of facts, together with certain questions, in regard to our relations to the Indians of the southern district, upon which he asked the advice of the Senate. On August 24, 1789, he appeared again in the Senate Chamber with Gen. Knox, and the discussion of our relations with the Southern Indians was resumed. The Senate finally voted on the questions put to it by the President, and in that way gave him their advice. (During the first years of its existence the Senate sat with closed doors, and there is no record of any of its debates. The only official records we possess are the dry entries of the Journal, stating the questions put and the votes. For the first two years, however, we have an account of the doings of the Senate in the diary of William Maclay, a Senator from Pennsylvania during the period from 1789 to 1791. In that diary (pp. 129 to 133) there is a full description of what happened upon the only occasion when a President personally met with the Senate to consider a treaty, a mode of consideration which was undoubtedly contemplated as the most suitable at the time of the framing of the Constitution. In reading Mr. Maclay's narrative it is well to remember that he was one of those persons who are never satisfied in regard to their own integrity unless they impugn the conduct and suspect the motives of everyone else, and especially of those who differ with them in opinion. Mr. Maclay was exceedingly hostile to Washington and could not appreciate him. His opinions as to men are curious and untrustworthy, but his statements of facts and as to what actually occurred may as a rule be accepted, and are of peculiar interest because we possess no other account of Senate debates at that period. Washington's attempt to confer with the Senate in this direct way was so obviously inconvenient, and the discussion upon the propositions was so annoying to the President on the one side, while the restraint of the President's presence was so much felt by the Senate, that the plan of personal deliberation between the Chief Executive and his constitutional advisers was then and there abandoned. In the same connection there is an interesting story told in the diary of John Quincy Adams which is worth repeating, and which throws an interesting light upon the incident: 'Mr. Crawford told twice over the story of President Washington's having at an early period of his administration gone to the Senate with a project of a treaty to be negotiated and been present at their deliberations upon it. They debated it and proposed alterations, so that when Washington left the Senate Chamber he said he would be damned if he ever went there again. And ever since that time treaties have been negotiated by the Executive before submitting them to the consideration of the Senate. The President said he had come into the Senate about 18 months after the first organization of the present Government and then heard that something like this had occurred. Crawford then repeated the story, varying the words, so as to say that Washington swore he would never go to the Senate again.' (Memoirs of John Quincy Adams, Vol. VI, p. 427.)

"On August 11, 1790, President Washington, in a written message, asked whether it was the judgment of the Senate that overtures should be made to the Cherokees to arrange a new boundary; if so, what compensation should be made, and whether the United States should stipulate solemnly to guarantee the new boundary. The Senate by resolution replied to these inquiries in the affirmative.

"On January 19, 1791, President Washington laid before the Senate the representation of the chargé d'affaires of France in regard to certain acts of Congress imposing extra tonnage on foreign vessels, and asked the advice of the Senate as to the answer he should make. On February 26, 1791, the Senate, by resolution, replied to this message, stating their opinion as to the meaning of the fifth article of the treaty in relation to the acts of Congress which had been called in question, and advising that an answer be given to the chargé d'affaires of France defending the construction put upon the treaty by the Senate.

"On February 14, 1791, a message was sent in which illustrates in a very interesting way how close the relations were between the Senate and the President in all matters relating to treaties, and how completely Washington recognized the right of the Senate to advise with him in regard to every matter connected with our foreign relations. In this message he explained his sending Gov. Morris in an unofficial character to England in order to learn whether it were possible to open negotiations for a treaty, and with the message he sent various letters, so that the Senate might be fully informed as to all this business, which was in its nature entirely secret and unofficial.

"On November 10, 1791, the Senate ratified the treaty made by Gov. Blount with the Cherokee Indians, and the report of the committee begins in this way: 'That they have examined the said treaty and find it strictly conformable to the instructions given by the President; that these instructions were founded on the advice and consent of the Senate on the 11th of August, 1790,' etc.

"It is not necessary to multiply instances under our first President. These cases which have been quoted show how Washington interpreted the Constitution which he had so largely helped to frame. It is clear that in his opinion, and in that of the Senate, which does not appear to have been controverted by anybody, the powers of the Senate were exactly equal to those of the President in the making of treaties, and that they were entitled to share with him at all stages of a negotiation.

"On April 16, 1794, Washington consulted the Senate on a much more important matter than any of those to which I have referred. On that day he sent in the name of John Jay to be an envoy extraordinary to England in addition to the minister already there. He gives in the message his reasons for doing this, and in that way caused the Senate to pass not only upon the appointment of Mr. Jay but also upon the policy which that appointment involved.

"On May 31, 1797, President Adams, in nominating his special commission to France, followed the example of Washington when he nominated Jay, and explained his reasons for the appointment of this commission, in that way taking the advice of the Senate as to opening the negotiations at all.

"On December 6, 1797, President Adams, in submitting an Indian deed, which was the form taken by the treaty, suggested that it be conditionally ratified; that is, that the Senate should provide that the treaty should not become binding until the President was satisfied as to the investment of the money, and the resolution was put in that form. This is interesting, because it is the first case where the President himself suggests an amendment to be made by the Senate.

"On March 6, 1798, in ratifying the treaty with Tunis, where the Senate had made an amendment, they recommended that the President enter into friendly negotiations with the Government of Tunis in regard to the disputed article.

"February 6, 1797, President Adams nominated Rufus King minister to Russia, and stated that it was done for the purpose of making a treaty of amity and commerce with that country.

"When President Adams reopened negotiations with France, an action which signalized the fatal breach in the Federalist Party, he sent in the name of William Vans Murray to be minister to France, explained that it was to renew the negotiation, and stated further what instructions he should give if Murray was confirmed by the Senate. So much opposition was aroused by this step that in order to secure the assent of the Senate to his policy Mr. Adams sent in the names of Chief Justice Ellsworth and Patrick Henry to be joined with Murray in the commission, and stated more explicitly the conditions on which alone he would allow them to embark.

"President Jefferson, on January 11, 1803, sent in a message nominating Livingston and Monroe to negotiate with France, and Charles Pinckney and Monroe to negotiate with Spain, in regard to Louisiana, setting forth fully his reasons for opening negotiations on this subject, so that the Senate in advising and consenting to the appointments assented also to the policy which they involved.

"President Madison, on May 29, 1813, sent in a nomination for a minister to Sweden, to open diplomatic relations with that country. The Senate on June 14 appointed a committee to confer with the President upon the subject. Madison declined the conference on the ground that a committee could not confer directly with the Executive, but only through a department. His statement of the relations of the President and Senate in his message of July 6, 1813, is interesting as showing how he, one of the principal framers of the Constitution, construed it in this respect:

"'Without entering into a general review of the relations in which the Constitution has placed the several departments of the Government to each other, it will suffice to remark that the Executive and the Senate, in the cases of appointments to office and of treaties, are to be considered as independent of and coordinate with each other. If they agree, the appointments or treaties are made; if the Senate disagree, they fail. If the Senate wish information previous to their final decision, the practice, keeping in view the constitutional relations of the Senate and the Executive, has been either to request the Executive to furnish it or to refer the subject to a committee of their body to communicate, either formally or informally, with the head of the proper department. The appointment of a committee of the Senate to confer immediately with the Executive himself appears to lose sight of the coordinate relation between the Executive and the Senate which the Constitution has established, and which ought therefore to be maintained.'

"On April 6, 1818, President Monroe laid before the Senate correspondence with Great Britain making an arrangement as to naval armaments on the Great Lakes. He asked the Senate to decide whether this was a matter which the Executive was competent to settle alone, and if they thought not, then he asked for their advice and consent to making the agreement.

"President Jackson, on March 6, 1829, asked the consent of the Senate to make with the chargé d'affaires of Prussia an exchange of ratifications of the treaty with that country, the time for the exchange having passed before the Prussian ratification was received. The request was repeated on January 26, 1831, under similar circumstances in regard to the Austrian treaty. (This became the universal practice in cases where the time for exchanging ratifications had expired by accident, or otherwise, before the exchange had been effected. It is not necessary to cite other instances.)

"May 6, 1830, President Jackson, in a message relating to a treaty proposed by the Choctaw Indians, asked the Senate to share in the negotiations in the following words: 'Will the Senate advise the conclusion of a treaty with the Choctaw Nation according to the terms which they propose? Or will the Senate advise the conclusion of a treaty with that tribe as modified by the alterations suggested by me? If not, what further alteration or modification will the Senate propose?' President Jackson then goes on to give his reasons for thus consulting the Senate. The passage is of great interest because it not only states the change of practice which had taken place since Washington's time in regard to consulting the Senate before or during a negotiation, but recognizes fully that although reasons of convenience and expediency had led to the abandonment of consultation with the Senate prior to a negotiation, yet it was an undoubted constitutional right of the President to so consult the Senate, and of the Senate to take part, if it saw fit, at any stage of a negotiation. President Jackson says:

"'I am fully aware that in thus resorting to the early practice of the Government, by asking the previous advice of the Senate in the discharge of this portion of my duties, I am departing from a long and for many years unbroken usage in similar cases. But being satisfied that this resort is consistent with the provisions of the Constitution, that it is strongly recommended in this instance by considerations of expediency, and that the reasons which have led to the observance of a different practice, though very cogent in negotiation with foreign nations, do not apply with equal force to those made with Indian tribes, I flatter myself that it will not meet the disapprobation of the Senate.'

"Under President John Quincy Adams a convention had been made with Great Britain referring to the decision of the King of the Netherlands the points of difference between the two nations as to our northeastern boundary line. On January 10, 1831, the King of the Netherlands rendered his decision, against which our minister at The Hague protested. On December 7, 1831, President Jackson submitted the decision and protest to the Senate, asking whether they would advise submission to the opinion of the arbiter and consent to its execution. The President took occasion to say in this connection: 'I had always determined, whatever might have been the result of the examination by the sovereign arbiter, to have submitted the same to the Senate for their advice before I executed or rejected it.'

"On March 3, 1835, the Senate passed the following resolution:

"'Resolved, That the President of the United States be respectfully requested to consider the expediency of opening negotiations with the governments of other nations, and particularly of the governments of Central America and New Grenada, for the purpose of effectually protecting, by suitable treaty stipulations with them, such individuals or companies as may undertake to open a communication between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans by the construction of a ship canal across the isthmus which connects North and South America, and of securing forever, by such stipulations, the free and equal right of navigating such canal to all such nations, on the payment of such reasonable tolls as may be established, to compensate the capitalists who may engage in such undertaking and complete the work.'

"On January 9, 1837, President Jackson replied to this resolution, stating that in accordance with its terms an agent had been sent to Central America, but that from his report it was apparent that the conditions were not such as to warrant entering upon negotiations for treaties relating to a ship canal.

"President Van Buren, on June 7, 1838, sent in a message announcing that he intended to authorize our chargé d'affaires to Peru to go to Ecuador and, as agent of the United States, negotiate a treaty with that Republic. Before doing so, however, he thought it proper, in strict observance of the rights of the Senate, to ask their opinion as to the exercise of such a power by the Executive in opening negotiations and diplomatic relations with a foreign state.

"President Polk, on June 10, 1846, sent to the Senate a proposal in the form of a convention in regard to the Oregon boundary submitted by the British minister, together with a protocol of the proceedings, and on this he asked the advice of the Senate as to what action should be taken. The message then continues as follows:

"'In the early periods of the Government the opinion and advice of the Senate were often taken in advance upon important questions of our foreign policy. Gen. Washington repeatedly consulted the Senate and asked their previous advice upon pending negotiations with foreign powers, and the Senate in every instance responded to his call by giving their advice, to which he always conformed his action. This practice, though rarely resorted to in later times, was, in my judgment, eminently wise and may on occasions of great importance be properly revived. The Senate are a branch of the treaty-making power, and by consulting them in advance of his own action upon important measures of foreign policy which may ultimately come before them for their consideration the President secures harmony of action between that body and himself. The Senate are, moreover, a branch of the war-making power, and it may be eminently proper for the Executive to take the opinion and advice of that body in advance upon any great question which may involve in its decision the issue of peace or war.'

"On August 4, 1846, President Polk, by message, consulted the Senate as to entering on peace negotiations with Mexico and advancing to that country a portion of the money to be paid as consideration for the cession of territory.

"On July 28, 1848, President Polk sent to the Senate a message explaining his refusal to ratify an extradition treaty with Prussia, to which the Senate had agreed. When the treaty was sent to the Senate, on December 16, 1845, the President stated his objections to the third article. The Senate ratified the treaty with the third article unamended, and thereupon, and because the Senate had not amended or stricken out the third article, the President refused to ratify the treaty himself.

"On April 22, 1850, President Taylor invited the Senate to amend either the Clayton-Bulwer treaty or that with Nicaragua, so that they might conform with each other.

"On February 13, 1852, President Fillmore pointed out certain objectionable clauses in the Swiss treaty and asked the Senate to amend them.

"On June 26, 1852, President Fillmore sent a letter from Mr. Webster calling attention to the nonaction of the Senate upon an extradition treaty with Mexico and asked that, if it was thought objectionable in any particular, amendments might be made to remove the objections, such amendments to be proposed by the Executive to the Mexican Government.

"On February 10, 1854, President Pierce sent to the Senate the Gadsden treaty, signed by the plenipotentiaries on December 30, 1853, and with it certain amendments which he recommended to the Senate for adoption before ratification. It would be difficult to find a better example than this, not merely of the right of the Senate to amend, but of the fact that Senate amendments are simply a continuance of the negotiation begun by the President.

"President Buchanan, on February 12, 1861, asked the advice of the Senate as to accepting the award made by commissioners under the convention with Paraguay, following therein the precedent set by President Jackson.

"On February 21, 1861, President Buchanan asked the advice of the Senate as to entering into negotiation with Great Britain for a treaty of arbitration in regard to a controverted point in the Ashburton-Webster treaty of 1846. His own words are: 'The precise questions I submit are three: Will the Senate approve a treaty,' etc.

"On March 16, 1861, President Lincoln, in his first message to the Senate, repeated the questions of his predecessor as to entering upon this negotiation for an arbitration with Great Britain, and said, 'I find no reason to disapprove the course of my predecessor on this important matter, but, on the contrary, I not only shall receive the advice of the Senate therein, but I respectfully ask the Senate for their advice on the three questions before recited.'

"On December 17, 1861, President Lincoln sent to the Senate a draft of a convention proposed by the Mexican Government and asked not for ratification but merely for their advice upon it.

"On January 24, 1862, he asked again for advice as to entering upon the treaty for a loan to Mexico, so that he might instruct Mr. Corwin in accordance with the views of the Senate.

"On February 25, 1862, the Senate passed a resolution to the effect 'that it is not advisable to negotiate a treaty that will require the United States to assume any portion of the principal or interest of the debt of Mexico, or that will require the concurrence of European powers.' Meantime Mr. Corwin, not having received instructions, had made and signed two treaties for the loan, and President Lincoln, on sending them in, on June 23, 1862, said in his message: 'The action of the Senate is, of course, conclusive against acceptance of the treaties on my part.' but the importance of the subject was such that he asked for the further advice of the Senate upon it.

"March 5, 1862, President Lincoln sent a message repeating President Buchanan's request for the advice of the Senate as to accepting the Paraguayan award.

"February 5, 1863, President Lincoln sent in for ratification a convention with Peru, and suggested an amendment which he wished to have made by the Senate.

"January 15, 1869, President Johnson sent in a protocol agreed upon with Great Britain, and asked the advice of the Senate as to entering upon a negotiation for a convention based upon the protocol submitted.

"April 5, 1871, President Grant transmitted a dispatch from our minister to the Hawaiian Islands and asked for the views of the Senate as to the policy to be pursued.

"May 13, 1872, President Grant sent a message to the Senate relating to differences which had arisen under the treaty of Washington, and said: 'I respectfully invite the attention of the Senate to the proposed article submitted by the British Government with the object of removing the differences which seem to threaten the prosecution of the arbitration, and request an expression by the Senate of their disposition in regard to advising and consenting to the formal adoption of an article such as is proposed by the British Government.

"'The Senate is aware that the consultation with that body in advance of entering into agreements with foreign States has many precedents. In the early days of the Republic Gen. Washington repeatedly asked their advice upon pending questions with such powers. The most important recent precedent is that of the Oregon boundary treaty, in 1846.

"'The importance of the results hanging upon the present state of the treaty with Great Britain leads me to follow these former precedents and to desire the counsel of the Senate in advance of agreeing to the proposal of Breat Britain.'

"June 18, 1874, President Grant sent in a draft of a reciprocity treaty relating to Canada and asked the Senate if they would concur in such a treaty if negotiated.

"President Arthur, on June 9, 1884, asked the advice of the Senate as to directing negotiations to proceed with the King of Hawaii for the extension of the existing reciprocity treaty with the Hawaiian Islands.

"On March 3, 1888, the Senate passed a resolution asking President Cleveland to open negotiations with China for the regulation of immigration with that country. President Cleveland replied that such negotiations had been undertaken.

"From these various examples it will be seen that the Senate has been consulted at all stages of negotiations by Presidents of all parties, from Washington to Arthur. It will also be observed that the right to recommend a negotiation by resolution was exercised in 1835 and again in 1888, and was unquestioned by either Jackson or Cleveland, who were probably more unfriendly to the Senate and more unlikely to accede to any extension of Senate prerogatives than any Presidents we have ever had. It will be further noted that the Senate in 1862 advised against the Mexican negotiations, and that President Lincoln frankly accepted their decision, and did not even ask that the treaties which had been actually made meantime should be considered with a view to ratification.

"The power of the Senate to amend or to ratify conditionally is, of course, included in the larger powers expressly granted by the Constitution to reject or confirm. It would have never occurred to me that anyone who had read the Constitution and who possessed even the most superficial acquaintance with the history of the United States could doubt the right of the Senate to amend. But within the last year I have seen this question raised, not jocosely, so far as one could see, but quite seriously. It may be well, therefore, to point out very briefly the law and the facts as to the power of the Senate to amend or alter treaties.

"In 1795 the Senate amended the Jay treaty, ratifying it on condition that the twelfth article should be suspended. Washington accepted their action without a word of comment, as if it were a matter of course, and John Marshall, in his Life of Washington, has treated the Senate's action of that memorable occasion in the same way. From that day to this, from the Jay treaty in 1795 to the alien property treaty with Great Britain in 1900, the Senate has amended treaties, and foreign governments, recognizing our system and the propriety of the Senate's action, have accepted the amendments. A glance at the passages which have been cited from the Messages of the Presidents is enough to disclose the fact that no President has ever questioned the right of the Senate to amend, and that several Presidents have invited the Senate to make amendments as the best method of continuing the negotiations. In this, however, we are not left to deduce the obvious right of the Senate to amend, from an unbroken line of precedents and the unquestioned recognition of the right by the Chief Executive. On this point we have a direct and unanimous declaration by the Supreme Court of the United States. In Haver v. Yaker, Mr. Justice Davis, delivering the opinion of the court, said: 'In this country a treaty is something more than a contract, for the Federal Constitution declares it to be the law of the land. If so, before it can become a law the Senate, in whom rests the authority to ratify it, must agree to it. But the Senate are not required to adopt or reject it as a whole, but may modify or amend it, as was done with the treaty under consideration.' (9 Wallace, pp. 34 and 35. Mr. Rawle, in his View of the Constitution of the United States, p. 64, says: 'The Senate may wholly reject it, or they may ratify it in part, or recommend additional or explanatory articles, which, if the President approves of them, again become the subject of negotiation between him and the foreign power; and, finally, when the whole receives the consent of the Senate, and the ratifications are exchanged between the respective Governments, the treaty becomes obligatory on both nations.' Mr. Rawle's entire chapter on the treaty-making power merits careful consideration in this connection.) This decision of the court is conclusive, if any doubt had ever existed as to the amendment powers of the Senate; but the following lists of treaties, amended by the Senate and afterwards ratified by the countries with which they were made, exhibits the uniform and unquestioned practice which has prevailed since the foundation of our Government:

"Algiers, 1795; Argentina, 1885 (amity and commerce), 1897 (extradition); Austria, 1856; Baden, 1857; Bavaria, 1845, 1853; Belgium, 1858, 1880 (consular); Bolivia, 1859, 1900 (extradition); Brunswick and Luneburg, 1854; Chile, 1900 (extradition); China, 1868, 1887 (exclusion); Colombia, 1857; New Granada, 1888 (extradition); Congo, 1891 (relations); Costa Rica, 1852, 1861; France, 1778, 1843, 1858, 1886 (claims), 1892 (extradition); Great Britain, 1794, 1815, 1889 (extradition), 1891 (Bering Sea), 1896 (Bering claims), 1899 (real property); Guatemala, 1870 (amity and commerce); Hawaii, 1875 (reciprocity), 1886 (reciprocity); Italy, 1868; Japan, 1886 (extradition), 1894 (extradition), 1894 (commerce and navigation); Mexico, 1843, 1848, 1853, 1861, 1868, 1883 (reciprocity), 1885 (reciprocity), 1886 (boundary), 1888 (frontier), 1890 (boundary); Netherlands, 1887 (extradition); Nicaragua, 1859, 1870 (amity and commerce); Orange Free State, 1896 (extradition); Peru, 1863, 1887 (commerce and navigation), 1899 (extradition); Russia, 1889 (extradition); Saxony, 1845; Siam, 1856; Sweden, 1816, 1869 (naturalization); Switzerland, 1847, 1850, 1900 (extradition); Tunis, 1797; Turkey, 1830, 1874 (extradition); Two Sicilies, 1855; Venezuela, 1886 (claims).

"From this list it appears that there have been 68 treaties amended by the Senate and afterwards ratified.

"The results of the preceding inquiry can be easily summarized. Practice and precedent, the action of the Senate and of the Presidents, and the decision of the Supreme Court show that the power of the Senate in the making of treaties has always been held, as the Constitution intended, to be equal to and coordinate with that of the President, except in the initiation of a negotiation, which can of necessity only be undertaken by the President alone. The Senate has the right to recommend entering upon a negotiation, or the reverse; but this right it has wisely refrained from exercising, except upon rare occasions. The Senate has the right to amend, and this right it has always exercised largely and freely. It is also clear that any action taken by the Senate is a part of the negotiation, just as much so as the action of the President through the Secretary of State.

In other words, the action of the Senate upon a treaty is not merely to give sanction to the treaty, but is an integral part of the treaty making, and may be taken at any stage of a negotiation.

"It has been frequently said of late that the Senate in the matter of treaties has been extending its powers and usurping rights which do not properly belong to it. That the power of the Senate has grown during the past century is beyond doubt, but it has not grown at all in the matter of treaties. On the contrary, the Senate now habitually leaves in abeyance rights as to treaty making which at the beginning of the Government it freely exercised, and it has shown in this great department of executive government both wisdom and moderation in the assertion of its constitutional powers.

"This is not the place to discuss the abstract merits of the constitutional provisions as to the making of treaties. Under a popular government like ours it would be neither possible nor safe to leave the vast powers of treaty making exclusively in the hands of a single person. Some control over the Executive in this regard must be placed in the Congress, and the framers of the Constitution intrusted it to the representatives of the States. That they acted wisely can not be questioned, even if the requirement of the two-thirds vote for ratification is held to be a too narrow restriction. These, however, are considerations of no practical importance, and after all only concern ourselves. Our system of treaty making is established by the Constitution and has been made clear by long practice and uniform precedents. The American people understand it, and those who conduct the government of other countries are bound to understand it, too, when they enter upon negotiations with us. There is no excuse for any misapprehension. It is well also that the representatives of other nations should remember, whether they like our system or not, that in the observance of treaties during the last 125 years there is not a nation in Europe which has been so exact as the United States, nor one which has a record so free from examples of the abrogation of treaties at the pleasure of one of the signers alone."

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in the very able address of the Senator from Massachusetts. I should like to mention one subject dwelt upon by the Senator, and that is the question of secret treaties. It seems to me to be very pertinent at this place to call the attention of the Senate to the interview by Lord Northcliffe published in the morning papers and given out in Paris yesterday. It seems to bear upon this question of secret negotiations and secret treaties. Lord Northcliffe said:

Nothing can be worse for the prospects of the coming conference than an atmosphere of secrecy and half truths. Yet up to the present there has been no official statement that the momentous meetings about to take place will be held in accordance with President Wilson's expressed views on the question of open diplomacy.

I will call the attention of the Senate in a moment to what those views are.

DAYS OF SECRET CONCLAVES GONE.

The days of secret conclaves are dead and gone. Clandestine assemblies are the harbingers of intrigue, suspicion, and possible deception. It would be intolerable that the fate of whole nations—great and small—should be decided in secret. Shall the destinies of millions of peoples in all quarters of the globe be left to the tender mercies of a comparative handful of delegates, against whose enactments there is no public appeal? Such would be mockery of that principle of self-determination of free nations which has been fought for and won in this war.

Labor, upon which the great losses of life during the war have mainly fallen, is alarmed at the prospect of great world plans being carried out without its knowledge. It is reported from London that the Labor Party has sent a strong protest to our Government, which, so far, has done nothing to allay public anxiety on the subject.

WILL SUPPORT WILSON'S VIEW.

The British press and people may be relied upon to support fully the President's enlightened expression of opinion as to the need of publicity at the momentous meetings expected to begin in Paris on the 6th of January. Surely the world has suffered enough from secret diplomacy to realize that mediævalism of that kind is totally incompatible with the conception of a league of free nations. A great part of the President's popularity is due to the knowledge that he is the father of open diplomacy, which it was understood would be the course adopted at the forthcoming sessions.

We, having learned enough of the evil of secrecy during the last four and a half years, therefore are alarmed at rumors, which have not yet been officially contradicted, that the doings of the peace conference are to be wrapped in a black cloak of silence.

WILL BE RATIONED, HE SAYS.

So far as the United States is concerned, I have been assured that neither the French nor American Government will exercise any control over the cables conveying news of the proceedings of the conference, except such amount of control as is necessary in rationing to each newspaper and news-distributing agency, made obligatory by the fact that the Atlantic cables already are loaded beyond their capacity.

Mr. President, the particular view of the President which Lord Northcliffe had in mind is the one referred to by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts; that covenants of peace shall be openly reached; that there shall be no private international understandings of any kind; and that diplomacy shall proceed always frankly and in public view.

Lord Northcliffe, in describing what he understands to be the program of President Wilson, has relied upon his speech of January 8, 1918, in which the President said:

1. Open covenants of peace, openly arrived at, after which there shall be no private international understandings of any kind but diplomacy shall proceed always frankly and in the public view.

I wish his noble lordship to understand a fact which has probably escaped his attention, that the President took it all back in his letter of March 12, 1918. When the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] proposed that treaties of peace should be considered in open session in the United States Senate, interpreting the language of the President to mean covenants openly arrived at as well as openly considered in the Senate, the President wrote a letter to Secretary of State Lansing, which is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, March 12, 1918.

Hon. ROBERT LANSING,
Secretary of State.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I wish you would be kind enough to formulate a careful and conclusive memorandum for the use of the committee of the Senate with regard to the inclosed resolution. I take it for granted that you feel as I do, that this is no time to act as the resolution prescribes, and certainly when I pronounced for open diplomacy I meant not that there should be no private discussions of delicate matters but that no secret agreement of any sort should be entered into and that all international relations, when fixed, should be open, above board, and explicit.

Cordially and sincerely, yours,
WOODROW WILSON.

Mr. President, as said by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, under our form of Government it is impossible to have a secret treaty, and no such treaty ever existed in the history of this Nation. If that is all the President meant by his declaration in the first of his 14 points, it meant nothing.

Now, let Lord Northcliffe understand that those are phrases, simply phrases. If they did not mean that the great issue pending before the peace commissioners sitting in Paris to settle the destinies of the world should be known to the people of the world, they meant nothing. Lord Northcliffe makes the plea for open diplomacy and says that the secrecy which to-day surrounds Paris is ominous.

Now, I have not criticized the President, nor is that my intention, but here comes the greatest journalist of England, who has been one of the mainstays of Great Britain through a trial greater than the British Empire ever went through before, and says that the secrecy which surrounds Paris to-day bodes no good to the nations of the world.

What do we know about it? Do we know what is meant by the league of nations or what the President has in mind? If the President has in mind a framework of supergovernment, which has been the dream of some intellectuals since history was written, he will find out immediately that the American people will not stand for it.

It has been reported that the President is in favor of a league of nations controlling the raw materials and resources of the various nations of the world because those are the things for which nations have often gone to war. I for one do not believe the President has in his mind any such absurd proposition for this country, which owns those resources; but if he has we ought to know it.

I do believe that the principal great points involved in this negotiation should be made known to the American people.

The Senator from Idaho made a very able speech on the subject of open diplomacy and the consideration of treaties in open session of the Senate. I submitted a few unimportant remarks on the same subject, and it was a hopeful sign that some twenty or twenty-five of our colleagues voted for that proposition. I am glad to see that the leading statesmen of the world as well as of this country are adapting the proposition, and I welcome the Senator from Massachusetts to that circle.

To be sure we are not going to disclose every whispered conversation unimportant which takes place, but the great fundamental issues which involve the happiness, the peace, and stability of the world must be known and must be discussed openly by the people to be affected or else the peace pact will be a failure.

THE REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FLETCHER in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hitchcock	McLean	Sheppard
Bankhead	Johnson, Cal.	McNary	Simmons
Beckham	Johnson, S. Dak.	Martin, Ky.	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Jones, N. Mex	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Jones, Wash.	Moses	Smoot
Curtis	Kellogg	New	Spencer
Fletcher	Kendrick	Norris	Sutherland
France	Kenyon	Nugent	Swanson
Frelinghuysen	King	Page	Thomas
Gay	Knox	Penrose	Trammell
Gerry	La Follette	Phelan	Underwood
Gronna	Lenroot	Pittman	Vardaman
Hale	Lodge	Poindexter	Warren
Harding	McCumber	Pomerene	Weeks
Henderson	McKellar	Shafroth

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] are detained on official business.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum is present.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, before the pending amendment is voted on I merely desire to present an illustration of the application of the two systems of consolidated returns and separate returns to a hypothetical case. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] undertook to say that a consolidation of returns of various corporations making money would be greatly to the benefit of the Government and would increase the tax. That, of course, Mr. President, is an impossibility if the Treasury Department performs its duty.

In the case of four corporations, each capitalized at a million dollars, I have computed this hypothetical case: Assuming one of them engaged in war activities makes a profit of 100 per cent and the other three make a profit of 10 per cent, what would be the result? In the case of the consolidated return there would be a consolidated capital of $4,000,000 and a consolidated income of $1,300,000. The excess-profits credit which will be allowed under the consolidated return is one credit of $3,000, 8 per cent on $4,000,000, the consolidated capital, or a total of $323,000, leaving taxable excess profits of $977,000. The tax imposed upon that will be 30 per cent on $800,000, or $240,000, and 60 per cent on $177,000, or $106,200, making a total tax paid to the Government in this case on a consolidated return of $346,200.

In the case of separate returns one corporation with a capital of $1,000,000 makes a profit of $1,000,000, or 100 per cent. In this case the excess-profits credit would be $3,000, 8 per cent on $1,000,000, or $80,000, making a total excess-profits credit of $83,000, leaving a taxable excess profit upon that corporation of $917,000. Applying the excess-profit tax brackets, they would pay 30 per cent on $200,000, or $60,000, 60 per cent on $717,000, or $430,200, making a total tax for that corporation of $490,200.

The other corporations would each pay an equal amount, having a net income of $100,000 each; they would each have an excess-profits credit of $3,000; each would have an 8 per cent exemption on their capital of $1,000,000, or $80,000, leaving an excess-profits credit of $83,000 to be deducted from their net income of $100,000, leaving the total of excess profits taxable $17,000. Applying the rate of 30 per cent on that, each of those corporations would pay $5,400 in excess profits, making a total for the three of $16,200. The one with 100 per cent profit would pay $490,200, making a total tax for these same corporations rendering separate returns of $506,400, as against the tax paid under the consolidated returns of $346,200, or a difference against the Government on the excess-profits tax of $160,200 on a capitalization of only $4,000,000.

The only saving of the Government would be upon the 12 per cent income, where it would save the three exemptions of $2,000 apiece, making $720. So the net loss to the Government in the illustration I have given, should the committee amendment be adopted, would be $159,480, growing, Mr. President, solely out of the fact that these four corporations happened to be owned by one little group of wealthy individuals, whereas if those same corporations had been owned by local capital, by different individuals, they would pay $160,000 more to the Government than they will pay under this amendment if the corporations are owned by a little aggregation of capital. In other words, Mr. President, with this amendment as reported by the committee, it offers a reward to trusts and monopolies owning corporations in this country of $150,000, as against the taxes that will have to be paid by like corporations who have like business and who are making a like income which are owned and operated by private individuals.

The Senate ought to know exactly the result this amendment will have. Then, if the Senate chooses to adopt it, the Senate will do it with its eyes open.

I ask the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, of course the Senator from Wisconsin can pick out a suppositious case, make his calculations, and show a result one way or another upon a matter of this sort. The question is not, will this concern escape with a little less tax and that concern pay a little more tax as the result of consolidated returns, but the question is, will the Government get more money out of one system than it will out of the other system, and will the department be in a better position to adjust the equities between the different branches of these consolidated concerns so as to do justice to the Government and do justice to the taxpayers.

It is clear to my mind, Mr. President, that when we provide for these consolidated returns we put the operations of these various subsidiary concerns in the hands of the Internal Revenue Department. We put them in a position where they can adjust not only equities but where they can see that the incomes and the invested capital of these concerns are properly distributed and adjusted in the interest of taxation and also in the interest of the taxpayer. That is what this does.

Senators come here and say, "I can find an illustration." The truth is, Mr. President, that the department, after one year's experience in the administration of a $4,000,000,000-tax law, has taken the cases that arise under the consolidated returns, which they by regulation provided for; they have examined to see whether under that system of returns the Government has lost or the Government has gained; and, as a result of this acid test of actual experience, the department has found that the Government is the gainer. Now, that is all there is of it, Mr. President.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I should merely like to add to what the Senator from North Carolina has said, but which has perhaps not fully impressed the Senate, that this provision of the bill is identical with the method which has been adopted by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the tax advisory board in administering this part of the present law.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I was in favor of the first amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], which I think was intended to make clear that only integrated concerns having different branches of business in separate corporations should be allowed to make consolidated returns; but when it comes to a group of individuals who are associated together or an individual owning all of the stock of the corporations engaged in a certain business and making consolidated returns, I am inclined to follow the recommendation of the Treasury Department in that matter, for the Treasury Department must know what has been the best practice and what would be the best practice.

The individuals who own the stock of these various corporations which are engaged in business, of course, do not pay an excess-profits tax; so the question is entirely different from that of a holding company, and if it is the opinion of the Treasury Department that, taking all of these concerns together, it is fairer and better for the Government to have a consolidated return, I am inclined to believe that that ought to be provided for by the Senate.

I have no doubt that one might pick out a particular case and show that that would lose money to the Government; but, so far as I am concerned, I feel as though I must be controlled in that respect by the experience of the Treasury Department on this subject. I have no desire to allow any of these combinations which will enable any corporation to escape its share of taxes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. I should be very glad if the Senator, or any member of the Finance Committee, will give any illustration of where, under a proper administration of the law, the Government could be the gainer by a consolidated return.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I have not made the figures as to particular concerns. I concede, however, if any individual were incorporated and had to pay an excess-profits tax, that it might be impossible to make such an illustration; but where it is a combination of certain concerns in business I can see how they might so manipulate their earnings or expenses as to injure the Government, especially where they are more or less integrated concerns, being different branches of the same business. It is to such concerns that I understand this provision is intended to apply, and not to corporations having no relation whatever with each other. I am not able to give a case, and I do not in the least dispute the illustration given by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Finance would probably explain this matter, but I desire to say that one very notable case where the Treasury experts informed me the Government is the gainer by this system is the case of the United States Steel Corporation through its subsidiaries. The Government gets a considerably larger tax return from that enormous concern than it would if this paragraph were not in the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania explain how that can be if the capital and income are properly allocated to the different corporations?

Mr. PENROSE. Well, Mr. President, that would require my getting access to the figures to show how that does arrive, but I shall be very glad later in the day to show the Senator that and to have two or three examples of it inserted in the RECORD. I think it would be well to do so, and I shall endeavor in the course of half an hour to get the figures in tabulated form.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator is through, I desire to say that I think he will see that it is an absolute impossibility for the Government to be the gainer by consolidated returns if the corporation makes the proper return and if the Treasury compels the proper return.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I think I can persuade the Senator from Wisconsin that the contrary is the fact, and also that there is hardly a paragraph in this bill in which an inequality can not be shown, as compared, perhaps, to different corporations, and notably in the case of comparison between partnerships and corporations. It is impossible to provide for every contingency so as to make the provisions of this bill bear with absolute equality. It has been a gigantic task even to approximate equality. I hope the Senator will wait for a little while, in order that he may be furnished some tabulated figures on the point to which he has referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to say merely a word. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] calls for a statement of a particular case. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] has referred to the great Steel Corporation. I am assured by the experts of the Government that that great corporation, taken in connection with its subsidiaries, will pay more tax under a consolidated return system than it would under a separate return system.

The Senator from Wisconsin says there is no case where a corporation would pay more under a consolidated return system; he challenges the proponents of this proposition to cite a case. All I can answer to that is that it is the positive statement of the department that there are numerous cases, and that the number of cases where the Government would receive more money would exceed the number of cases, so far as the aggregate results are concerned, where the Government would receive less money. Of course, if the department is misleading us, and if the Senator knows about this matter better than does the department which has dealt with the figures, that is a matter upon which I do not wish to pass any judgment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment reported by the committee, on which the yeas and nays have been requested.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, my understanding is that those who want to sustain the committee will vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to the amendment reported by the committee. Those in favor of the amendment to the amendment will vote "yea," and those opposed will vote "nay." The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GERRY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). The senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] is necessarily away for a few days. I have agreed to pair with him during that time unless I could secure a transfer. Therefore, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. I have been told, however, that if present he would vote as I shall vote on this amendment. Therefore, I feel at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PENROSE (after having voted in the negative). I observe that the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has not voted. I have a general pair with that Senator, which I transfer to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BAIRD], who is absent, and will let my vote stand.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I inquire if the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana, which I transfer to the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], and vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (after having voted in the affirmative). I am informed that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], with whom I have a general pair, has not voted. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand I can transfer my pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] to the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]. So I will do that, and vote "yea."

Mr. REED. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and vote "yea."

Mr. HARDING (after having voted in the affirmative). I understand that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], with whom I have a general pair, withheld his vote because of my absence from the Chamber. Therefore, I beg leave to withdraw my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON];

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]; and

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH].

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 34, as follows:

YEAS—21.

Ashurst	Johnson, S. Dak.	Lenroot	Reed
Borah	Jones, Wash.	McKellar	Trammell
Fletcher	Kendrick	McNary	Vardaman
France	Kenyon	Norris
Hale	King	Nugent
Johnson, Cal.	La Follette	Poindexter

NAYS—34.

Bankhead	Jones, N. Mex.	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Kellogg	New	Spencer
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Page	Sutherland
Gay	Lodge	Penrose	Swanson
Gerry	McCumber	Pollock	Thomas
Gore	McLean	Saulsbury	Warren
Gronna	Martin, Ky.	Shafroth	Weeks
Henderson	Martin, Va.	Sheppard
Hitchcock	Moses	Simmons

NOT VOTING—41.

Baird	Goff	Pomerene	Thompson
Brandegee	Harding	Ransdell	Townsend
Calder	Hardwick	Robinson	Underwood
Chamberlain	Hollis	Sherman	Wadsworth
Colt	Kirby	Shields	Walsh
Culberson	Lewis	Smith, Ariz.	Watson
Cummins	Nelson	Smith, Md.	Williams
Curtis	Overman	Smith, Mich.	Wolcott
Dillingham	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Fall	Phelan	Smoot
Fernald	Pittman	Sterling

So Mr. LENROOT's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think probably the most controverted matter in the bill is that which relates to the tax for the fiscal year 1920, and I think we might just as well take it up now. The 1920 proposition occurs at quite a number of places in the bill—that is to say, it has a number of separate parts that will have to be acted upon separately when we come to vote. There will be some general debate; and I suggest that we take up now the first amendment that proposes to make a change as between the fiscal year 1919 and the fiscal year 1920.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I suppose the vote of the Senate on the first paragraph relating to the 1920 proposition will, of course, determine the action of the Senate on all of the other numerous cases where the principle occurs; and if, perchance, the amendment should be stricken out, the clerks could fix the rest of the bill accordingly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I assume that probably after some additional general debate we will take a vote upon the first section in which the 1920 subject comes up, and that the vote upon that will probably determine the result on all other amendments.

Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania tells me that on account of the confusion in the Chamber the statement I have just made was not distinctly heard on his side of the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). The Senate will be in order.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish, therefore, to repeat briefly in a general way what I did say.

The 1920 tax imposed in the Senate amendment is separated so as to appear in different places in the bill—that is, it appears once when we are dealing with income-tax rates; it appears again when we are dealing with excess-profits tax rates, and so forth. I had supposed that the best way of dealing with this matter was to take up first the section in which the first amendment relating to 1920 taxation occurs, and if there is any general debate let it take place upon that amendment, because if that amendment is voted in then I take it that all the balance of them will likewise be voted in; and the test vote can come, therefore, upon the first amendment to the bill that deals with 1920 taxation.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator believes that they are so correlated that that vote will settle practically the entire matter of 1920 taxation?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think so.

Mr. WARREN. I think it would be very wise if we could do that upon one vote.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the proposition is simply whether the Congress at this time should fix the 1920 taxes.

I spoke at length upon this phase of the question when I made a formal presentation of my views to the Senate two or three days ago, and I do not know that I have anything in particular to add at this time. The minority, with practical unanimity, have filed a report on the pending bill. Only one member of the minority did not sign the report, the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who was not in disagreement at all with his minority colleagues in the committee on that point, but who has a series of amendments of his own to offer, practically constituting a new scheme of taxation. Therefore with entire consistency he filed his own report, in which he states his agreement with the rest of the minority in dissenting from this attempt to fix the 1920 taxes in the pending measure, and then proceeds to explain his own views with regard to a scheme of taxation.

I have no doubt, from what I can gather, that the views expressed in this minority report are the views of the minority on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator to mean that he thinks the Senators on his side of the Chamber will vote solidly against these taxes?

Mr. PENROSE. Oh, no; but I do not believe they will support any effort to impose in this bill the taxes for 1920.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is what I am talking about. I am talking about the 1920 provisions of this bill.

Mr. PENROSE. While I have not made a canvass of the minority, I take it that they will very largely, if not unanimously, vote against this attempt to fix the taxes for 1920 in the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think probably the Senator is right. In the committee we were divided upon party lines upon this question. I do not think there is any concealment about that.

Mr. PENROSE. While the chairman of the committee says he believes I am right regarding the minority, I think I can make a safe guess that the majority will all vote the other way. The committee was divided in this respect on strictly party lines. I think, perhaps, it was the only case in the nearly three months' deliberations of the Finance Committee, sitting all day and every day, in which party lines developed to any marked degree.

Mr. President, it surely seems like a violation of all ordinary legislative procedure to attempt to fix taxes for 1920 in this measure. We ought to pass the bill for 1918; and, after the 4th of March, when Congress must inevitably be called in extra session, a new revenue bill can be drafted to meet the requirements and conditions as they then exist. If this method of procedure was a violation of all precedents in normal times, it is, in my opinion, absolutely without excuse or reason at present when the immediate future is so stored with great events.

The pending bill, Mr. President, is the result of from five to six months of close, persistent study and consideration in the Ways and Means Committee of the House and in the Committee on Finance of the Senate. I do not believe the Senate nor, of course, the public realize the painstaking work which has been put upon this measure. We have had every assistance through frequent communications from taxpayers all over the United States. Leaders of industry from one end of the continent to the other have communicated their views to the committee. The committee had at its sessions the great benefit of the presence of several of the tax experts from the Treasury Department, notably representatives from the Tax Advisory Board. These gentlemen have, you may say, been living with this proposition for a year, and thinking of little or nothing else. They are thoroughly familiar with it from one end to the other. Their services could hardly have been replaced, nor could their value well be exaggerated; and yet, even with all this help and continuous labor, it taxed the energy and intelligence of the committee almost to the limit to frame the bill on its present lines.

Had the committee gone hastily to work and reported this measure to the Senate in a slipshod way gross inequities would have continued. It must be borne in mind that while these inequities can be endured when taxes are low, they become of infinite hardship when taxes reach the staggering figures imposed in this measure. I think one of the most extraordinary illustrations of the wisdom of deliberation, and of the influence of changing conditions, is that referred to in the report of the minority.

The Secretary of the Treasury urged the committee repeatedly, and finally in a communication to the chairman of the committee, that the measure must be passed before the 28th of September. As a matter of fact, it was not even reported to this body until several weeks after the 28th of September, much less passed by the Congress by that time. The Secretary predicted disaster to the fourth liberty loan, and apprehension was expressed time and again as to the inability of the Secretary of the Treasury to market short-time certificates should the bill not be on the statute books by September 28; yet, Mr. President, the Secretary experienced no difficulty whatever in placing his short-time certificates, and the fourth liberty loan was oversubscribed.

Mark you, Mr. President, the fact that the committee deliberated, and took its time, resulted in saving $2,000,000,000 to the taxpayers of the country. Had the committee, I may say, been intimidated—for the course of the Secretary almost reached the status of intimidation—into hastening the passage of the bill, it would have carried $8,000,000,000 instead of $6,000,000,000, and the taxpayers of the country would have groaned under this increased burden. But the armistice occurred, peace came in sight, and the committee was able to reduce the taxes carried in the measure by some $2,000,000,000.

It is true, Mr. President, that it is only an apparent reduction, because the loss on beverages, due to prohibition, ultimately will be considerably over $1,000,000,000; but it did enable the committee to reduce taxes several hundred million dollars and to put in provisions, some of which on two or three occasions have been the subject of discussion on the floor, and which, in my opinion, constitute the most admirable features of the measure. Provisions such as those relating to amortization, depletion, depreciation, the inventory paragraphs, and others which might be mentioned, do not relieve anyone of just taxation but do eliminate inequalities and inequities and do not tax a man whose outgo is greater than his income or who has sustained losses by reason of the wonderful transition from a war to a peace period. Had the committee not been familiar with the most recent conditions, many of these relief provisions would not be in the bill. Had we hurried, $8,000,000,000 of taxation would have been imposed upon the taxpayers instead of $6,000,000,000.

While it is true that the departments have sent in their estimates to Congress, they are after all very liberal estimates. The natural instinct of a department chief is to protect himself from a deficit and he goes on the basis of the outside figures. The Secretary of War was before the Committee on Finance, as was the Secretary of the Treasury. They did not impress me with having any certain estimates of the requirements of the Government in the months to come, and I do not know that I can criticize them for not being able to make such estimates, because the whole world is unsettled and we can hardly tell from week to week what our expenditures are going to be and what our responsibilities will require. So it would seem that every argument was in favor of postponing any provision for taxes for 1920 until these conditions can be ascertained.

The only argument advanced by any member of the committee advocating what I may call this most irregular fiscal legislative procedure was that the taxpayers are entitled to know what the taxes are going to be for 1920, so that they may be prepared for them. Now, Mr. President, as a matter of fact, every taxpayer in the United States knows that the taxes will be reduced. He knows that, whatever the form and scheme of taxation, we are not going to require $6,000,000,000 out of current taxes for another year; and as to the methods of taxation, we are in no position to inform him what kind of taxes he will be expected to pay.

One flagrant instance of great diversity of view is illustrated by the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury to drop the special-profits taxes and rely largely on the income taxes, personal and corporate; and yet that recommendation was entirely ignored by the majority members of the Finance Committee in providing taxes for 1920. There might have been some excuse for their not giving heed to his suggestion in the bill for 1918; but the Secretary's suggestion, in my opinion, is entitled to the most careful consideration. It indicates the form of taxation which we are bound to come to ultimately in this country, in which all these war-profits and excess-profits taxes will disappear and some kind of a straight income tax will be provided. Yet the majority of the committee entirely disregarded the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, even with respect to the taxes for 1920. I do not think the taxpayers of the country are so anxious to know just what form of taxation is going to confront them, if they can get some reasonable prospect of a form of taxation which shall be fairer, and not work the hardships of these special-profits taxes. In my opinion, they would be much happier and business would be much better satisfied if they had the general feeling that taxes are going to be lower, rather than have these special-profits taxes retained in the 1920 provision.

Mr. President, it may be, and I hope it will be, that our war expenditures, outside of the funding provisions and the repayment of the national debt, will very largely have ceased by next summer when we come to frame a tax bill, should we be permitted to have that opportunity. To attempt now to tie up the Government and the business of the country with a continuance of these special-profits taxes, even if they are reduced, is, in my judgment, unwarranted and without justification. It is difficult for me to conceive of any logical argument which prompts the majority to insist on this amendment to the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, with much of what the Senator from Pennsylvania has said I am entirely in accord. It is undoubtedly true that the Finance Committee and all the members of the committee labored earnestly and faithfully in an effort to place this enormous tax bill upon the people with as little unfairness as possible and to lighten wherever possible the burdens, although raising by taxation so unprecedented a sum must necessarily bear heavily upon many, many of the people.

The House sent us the bill prepared with the purpose of levying eight billions of taxes, payable next year from the receipts of this year. The sum of eight billions was fixed upon the theory that the total expenditures for next year would be twenty-four billions. There was a difference of opinion as to what portion of the expenses should be carried as taxes. Some desired to raise half or even more of the entire expenditures immediately by taxes. Some wished to have 20 per cent, or even less, raised in that way. We arrived at a middle course and determined to raise one-third of the expenses of next year by a tax bill.

We first sought to lessen some of the burdens of the House bill, largely by opportunities for adjustment in the office of the commissioner. He had called to his assistance last year a board of five very able experts in tax matters, who had advised him on many questions at places where the original bill was somewhat in doubt, and who aided him in adjusting that bill, where discretion was left, to a fair and equitable administration of the law. As the Senator from Pennsylvania has said, we had the benefit of the assistance of that board—fair-minded, capable men, interested solely to help us adjust this enormous tax as fairly as it could be done.

When the public think of the parts of this bill which grate upon them, they must not forget that we were engaged in a war with the most powerful military country in the world. We were mobilizing our resources to strike down the enemy of the peace of the world. We were fighting for our own homes and firesides, as well as for the freedom of other peoples.

The sum we are compelled to take from the people is unprecedented in the history of the world; and it is simply impossible to levy an $8,000,000,000 tax and not have it felt, and felt severely in many, many quarters. We took the benefit of the views of the board to which I referred, and we enlarged the discretionary power of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in a number of places where the unequal effect otherwise of the bill might have brought unjust burdens.

We took the normal income tax and put into it more brackets, so that from $100,000 incomes down it was not quite so severe as the bill as passed by the House.

A large part of our work was in adjusting points looking toward a more equitable distribution of the burden until suddenly the armistice came and the war ended. Then the question was how much of the burden could we take off in consequence of the fact that we would not be actively engaged in the war next year.

After studying the probable expenditures required for next year, it was determined $18,000,000,000 instead of $24,000,000,000 would be the probable sum that would be required, and we thereupon, following the rule of raising by taxation one-third of the expense, determined to reduce the tax bill to $6,000,000,000 instead of $8,000,000,000.

We reduced somewhat the excess-profits tax. The brackets before had for their lowest charge 35 per cent and they went to 75 per cent. We reduced it to 30 and to 60 as a maximum. We took up the various schedules—the excise tax, the special taxes. We went through with those taxes likely to especially burden, to especially annoy. We reduced a large portion of them one-half. We struck out a number of them that we thought were the more unreasonable. We struck out the tax on gasoline because it entered into so many different occupations not simply being used in automobiles. We struck out the tax on the users of automobiles because we found from satisfactory evidence that the majority of the cars, the large majority, were really used in industries and that a very small portion constituted the cars used simply for pleasure. We had left a tax on the manufacture of cars, and we felt that was the share the automobile ought to carry.

We struck out a number of the taxes based upon the idea that if a suit of clothes cost more than a certain sum we would tax the excess, or a bonnet so much we would tax the excess. We simply struck out that paragraph of the bill. We believed that it was annoying and unnecessary. We brought the bill down to $6,000,000,000.

There was not a vote cast up to that time in which party lines showed themselves at all. Then the question was this: We had fixed the $6,000,000,000 tax bill for the year 1918, payable in 1919, and continuously this would have been the tax until it was changed by legislation. It was, under the bill, the tax for 1919, payable in 1920, and it was the tax for 1920, payable in 1921. It was the tax which would rest upon the people of this country until some future Congress might reduce it. It was prepared under peculiar circumstances. It was prepared bill down to $6,000,000,000.
not for 1920. We knew that we would not need to levy a tax for so large a sum by $2,000,000,000 for 1920.

Now, should we leave the tax bill fixing the tax for 1919, payable in 1920, at $6,000,000,000, or should we reduce it in this bill, when we know we could do with $2,000,000,000 less for 1920?

Senators say by reducing these taxes to $4,000,000,000 payable in 1920 we have undertaken to anticipate future tax legislation and encroach upon the prerogative of the next Congress to make a tax bill. In other words, the Senate will, after the 4th of March, change as to party control, and so will the House. Therefore, they insisted that we should not fix the tax bill for 1919 payable in 1920. But the bill without change would do it. We fix it at $6,000,000,000 for 1919, payable in 1920, if we do not amend the bill. The responsibility is with us to-day, and as nearly as we can fix what the tax should be for 1919, payable in 1920, we have undertaken to do it.

Mr. SIMMONS. We are making appropriations right now for 1920.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Appropriations are being made now, as the Senator from North Carolina says, for 1920.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. VARDAMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator does not mean to maintain that the responsibility will be on his party after the 4th of March altogether?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not; but it is on us now to say what should be the tax for 1919, so far as this bill fixes it, and I decline to vote for $6,000,000,000 fixed by this bill for 1919, payable in 1920. We no more control the action of the majority after March 4 by reducing the tax $2,000,000,000 for 1919, payable in 1920, than we would control their action if we left it at $6,000,000,000. They are just as free to handle the problem of taxation next year when we reduce the tax $2,000,000,000 for next year as if we did not reduce it. It is our responsibility now.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It will be theirs then.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It will be theirs then, and we are unwilling to say it shall be $6,000,000,000. We are unwilling to report a general bill fixing it at that sum for years to come.

I hope the majority after the 4th of March will act together, but we know that the views of the majority diverge on the subject of taxation. We understand perfectly that they are farther apart than they are from us; that the extreme of one side of the majority after the 4th of March is farther from the extreme on the other side of the majority than they are from us. We can, at least, make a start toward reducing the taxes for next year.

And what have we done? We have provided that the normal income tax shall be reduced one-third next year. We have cut it from 12 to 8 per cent. We reduce the excess-profits tax one-third for the next year. We cut the 30 rate to 20, the 60 rate to 40. We restore after July 1 first-class postage to its normal 2 cents a letter.

I hope Senators on the other side of the Chamber will be able to make more reductions next year. I hope we will find less money required, and I hope we will find means even better than those we will leave in this bill and less burdensome by which to raise required revenue. Because we make these three reductions it does not mean that the majority on the other side will not receive the heartiest cooperation from this side to perfect the best bill possible. I believe we will follow the example they set us during the past few months. I believe every Member on the other side sought to help make the best bill possible up to the six billions. I have not really been able to understand why they objected to this reduction for next year. I do not see why they should object to it. It does not mean final action any more than the $6,000,000,000 would be final action if we left the tax for next year at $6,000,000,000; but we see we can make these reductions.

Where would be better places to make them than to take one-third off the normal tax that falls upon everybody, to take one-third off the excess-profits tax, and put our first-class postage back at the old rate? We had trimmed all along through the other items in getting rid of the $2,000,000,000, reducing the total amount from $8,000,000,000 to $6,000,000,000. I will repeat that we do not mean by this in any way that we are trying to preclude legislation by Congress. We could not do it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator will pardon me for making a brief statement connected with one question referred to by him. While I shall vote with the majority of the committee upon the proposition to include in the pending measure the provisions imposing taxes for the fiscal year ending June, 1920, I confess that the views of the minority have much to commend them to the country. This great revenue bill will raise the largest revenue that has ever been imposed upon a people in any Government for an annual period. It proposes to raise six billions by way of taxes for the calendar year 1918 and four billions for the calendar year 1919. The position of the minority is that to lay taxes now to meet the expenses for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, is unwise because of the uncertain conditions and the confused situation in the economic and industrial life of our country. We are just emerging from the clouds of war and moving toward the plain of peace. It is difficult to determine what the conditions of the coming year will be. It is difficult, indeed almost impossible, to determine what the expenses of the Government or the industrial and economic conditions of our country will be.

We can not with any degree of certainty project ourselves into the coming year and visualize conditions and predetermine at this time what the requirements of the immediate future will be. Scarcely any two persons agree as to what the appropriations for the coming year will be. No one can forecast how long we will be required to keep troops in Europe or the expenditures which the War Department will be compelled to make during the coming year. Personally I think the President should call a special session of Congress early in the coming year to deal with the revenue question and other important matters. Indeed, I think it is necessary, in order to meet the great questions which will demand solution, that Congress be convened in extra session early in the year 1919. At that time we would have fuller information as to the financial requirements of the Government for the fiscal year 1919–20 and could therefore act more intelligently.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] stated a few moments ago that the Secretary of the Treasury recommended that in any taxing measure providing for revenue for the coming year the excess and war profits taxes upon corporations should not be imposed. Without expressing any opinion as to the wisdom of this recommendation, the pending measure shows that the views of the Secretary of the Treasury have not been followed by the committee.

However, I realize that there are some cogent reasons for laying the taxes now for the coming year; they have been strongly stated by the able chairman of the committee [Mr. SIMMONS], but, with the permission of the Senator from Georgia, who has the floor, I desired to make this statement in order that he might appreciate the point of view which the discussion of this measure suggests to some members of the majority but not members of the Finance Committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I regret to hear the views of the Senator from Utah, but I am pleased to hear that he will vote for the tax reduction for 1919.

Mr. President, we have no power to call Congress together in March. The Senator from Utah can not do so. If the Senator from Utah would consider the subject carefully he would realize that we will know very little more about the situation in March than we do now. He ignores entirely the fact that the $6,000,000,000 tax would be left applicable to the next year payable in 1920 unless we made the reduction, and he ignores entirely the further fact that making the reduction in no sense prevents Congress from considering a revenue bill later on during next year; that it is no more binding upon Congress than the six billion tax bill would be binding upon Congress; and that it is simply a declaration that these three taxes can be reduced.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. PENROSE. Does the Senator think that this action of the majority is calculated to inspire confidence in the great body of taxpayers, when the majority in the committee entirely disregard the recommendation of their own Secretary of the Treasury? The majority party is not even united on the tax scheme of 1920. The Secretary of the Treasury makes one recommendation and the committee makes another.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; I think it will. I think our course was sound and the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury unsound. It is a question of judgment as to how we will raise the money. The Secretary of the Treasury suggested that all excise taxes on corporations be abolished, even though the normal income tax might be increased. We did not agree with that view. We thought that the normal income tax reaching all the people should be reduced and the excess-profits tax reduced equally, and we determined, I think more wisely than his suggestion, that it should be one-third off from each. I think the majority of the people will approve our view rather than his.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the Senator will recall that in determining how we would raise the $4,000,000,000 for 1920 we simply took off practically one-third of the present rate. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. One-third off the normal and one-third off the excess profits, and we estimated that the balance lost from the war-profits tax would make up the $2,000,000,000. The war-profits tax ceases with war, as the war profits cease.

Mr. McCUMBER. But it is based upon the assumption that the profits on the basis of 1920 or 1919 will be substantially the same as in 1918, and therefore if you reduce the rate one-third you will thereby reduce the amount of taxes received. But what assurance has the Senator or anyone else at this time that in 1919 or in 1920 the same rate of taxation would produce the same amount of taxes?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Nobody has any absolute assurance as to just what the income will be of individuals next year, nor have we any absolute assurance as to what the incomes of companies or corporations will be. We have no accurate knowledge now of what the incomes for the past year have been.

Mr. McCUMBER. But as we near that period will we not have a better basis of judgment as to what that income will be than we will one or two years prior to that time?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Instead of the policy of fixing a tax bill at the end of a year to apply to the year gone by, I regard it as much wiser and fairer to prepare the tax bill before the year begins. The only excuse we have for not getting our tax bill out earlier last year applicable to this year is the peculiar circumstances that surrounded us. Instead of adopting the view that we should wait until late in next year to see what would happen to fix the tax bill for next year, I believe it is sound policy to fix it, if possible, before the year begins with the best information and the best judgment based upon obtainable facts, and let people move into the year and through the year knowing in advance what proportion of their incomes they are to turn over to the Government as a result of taxes.

The wisdom of these three reductions that we make can not be questioned. They were intelligent reductions; they were sane reductions. We had already made reductions in the excess-profits tax, and we went further and reduced them one-third. The entire reductions we make are two-fifths, but we finally reduced them one-third from the figure we adopted for a $6,000,000,000 tax; we reduced the normal taxes one-third and we reduced our first-class postage one-third after July 1, which amounted to something like $70,000,000. That is vastly better than to go into next year entirely in the dark. It is vastly better than to go into next year with $6,000,000,000 on us.

Suppose, Mr. President, when we got into next year the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] undertook to agree on a tax bill, and we had to wait for a reduction of taxes until they agreed, we would get no bill, and we would leave the $6,000,000,000 on us. The Senator from Wisconsin will yet offer amendments to the bill we have agreed upon, seeking to change it substantially in a direction that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and the other Senators on that side will hardly agree to.

You will not have easy sailing making a tax bill in the new Congress unless we help you do it. You can not make one on your own side; you can not agree on a tax bill as you will be organized, if the differences of views that have been so far displayed by Members on your side continue to exist.

We feel sure, however, that when the time comes, if additional modifications in the line of reductions can be made that appeal to the intelligence of Senators, cooperation will exist once more between the large majority of this committee, without regard to party. But in the meantime we are unwilling to say that the tax for 1919 shall be $6,000,000,000 when we know that much will not be needed. We are unwilling to go to the country fixing a tax of $6,000,000,000 for 1919, when we are sure $4,000,000,000 will be enough. We in no way commit you finally by it; we in no way commit ourselves. We take the one step to help reduce the taxes, and later on, if we can find the amount needed or find revenue elsewhere, so that some of these taxes may be stopped or reduced, we will meet you, just as you met us, and seek to help accomplish the best results possible in behalf of the people of the entire country.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not intend to enter into a general discussion of the revenue bill at this time. I realize that the measure is already determined and Senators are desirous of voting at the earliest possible moment. Neither do I wish to be left out of that mutual admiration society, composed of the members of the Finance Committee, who have so generously congratulated themselves upon the excellent work that they have done. I am glad to be numbered among such efficient and patriotic Senators.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does not the Senator think that we really tried to do the best we could, all of us, without regard to party?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I was going to say that I think——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was meaning especially to compliment the minority.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Before I finished I was going to say something about those left-handed compliments which the Senator has paid the minority. But I do agree that up until the November election and the necessities of the Democratic Party seemed to require another course the committee worked in unison. I saw no indication of party lines in the Committee on Finance. The chairman was universally courteous and kind, and everything proceeded as it ought to proceed in legislation of this character. I think the chairman and the Senator from Georgia will agree that if ever there was a lack of a quorum at our committee meetings it was not because of the absence of the Republican members. They were in their seats at all sessions, almost without exception. They worked hard and conscientiously to frame the best possible bill to meet the emergencies of the times.

The Senator from Georgia fears that the Republican Party may not be able to make a suitable bill when it comes into power because of the lack of harmony among the members of the Republican Party. I hope he is sincere. I am going to assume and believe he is when he says that in preparing a revenue bill of this kind the minority should cooperate with the majority. It is more than possible that an opportunity will be offered.

Mr. President, I do not propose to enter into a discussion of the revenue bill for this year. It contains many provisions which I do not like, provisions which I could not change, and I am not sure that my suggestions, if they had been adopted, would all have been better, because an emergency revenue bill is a complicated matter and no general rule can be applied along the line of taxation that will deal justly and equitably with all concerns and individuals, even with those in the same class of business, depending, as the matter does depend, to a great extent upon the capital, the degree of intelligence and expertness, the amount of experience, and many other things that are involved.

I am very much opposed to this 1920 proposition of the majority of the committee. It is clearly a partisan movement and as unwarranted as it is unprecedented. The Senator from Georgia says it will make no difference in the future legislative situation and can not possibly embarrass the next Congress, whether the pending measure stands for the current fiscal year or includes the provision for 1920. The Sixty-fifth Congress can change the law if it wishes. That would seem so on the face of the statement, at least; but is it so as a matter of fact? The next Congress will be Republican—the House certainly and the Senate nominally so. No law can be enacted which does not receive the approval of the President. A two-thirds majority can not be obtained to override his veto. The law now enacted may continue till March 4, 1921. But no one believes that the most narrow, partisan President would allow a $6,000,000,000 tax law to remain a statute after the war, when it is no longer needed. He would call Congress in extra session, as would be his duty to do and as other Presidents have done, to meet legislative needs. No, Senators; do not believe that the next Congress would fail to enact a proper law. No administration could remain in power and leave the Federal tax levy at $6,000,000,000 in 1920. Therefore the President would necessarily call the Congress together for the purpose of legislating in reference to this matter.

I submit, further, Mr. President, if it had not been for the result of the election last November this 1920 provision would not have been inserted in this bill. Congress would have followed the usual course and would have legislated for the future as its necessities were disclosed.

If, however, you adopt this $4,000,000,000 tax amendment for 1920 there will be no special tax need for calling Congress together after March 4, 1919, and there will be no opportunity to embarrass the President by the Congress recently elected by the people and against his expressed wish. Indeed, it might be possible, as I have said, to have no legislation until after the election in 1920, whatever situation may confront the country.

It is a fact that neither the Secretary of the Treasury nor the experts of the Treasury Department nor the majority of the committee understand clearly what are the needs of this year due to the changed conditions which have come upon the country. If we had continued in war with the program outlined which we were to follow we could have told more accurately how much money would be required than we do now. The Secretary of the Treasury bases his statement that we need $6,000,000,000 this year upon the fact that we are going to materially reduce the expenses of the Government, and he gives as an illustration the expenditures of the first five months of the war as $8,600,000,000. He says those expenses are going to decrease, yet the fact of the matter is that the very last month of the five—November—which was mostly in time of peace, or since the armistice was signed, there was the largest expenditure of any month of the number. It is also true as a historical fact that these expenses will probably multiply for several months after the war closed. It would seem, therefore, that the actual expenses of the first five months of this year being $8,600,000,000, we can not rely upon the guess that only $9,400,000,000 will be required for the last seven months. Anyway, it is, to use the Secretary's words, "the wildest guess." Our great expenditures are going to continue in 1919, and they are going to reach into 1920. They are going to be very great.

Nobody knows what they will be. Nobody can make an intelligent estimate as to what they will total.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am glad to yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, at the time the Secretary of the Treasury was before us he gave us the actual expenditures of the Government, I think, up to some time in November. Since that time we have the actual expenditures for the first six months of this calendar year, and practically they are brought down to the last of December. With an estimate as to some part of December—the part that has not yet expired, with just a slight element of an estimate—the actual expenditures of the first six months of this calendar year can now be definitely stated, and they amount to $9,000,000,000, and I do not remember now how many odd millions.

Mr. SMOOT. And six hundred and odd million dollars.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator from Utah is right that it is somewhere near $9,600,000,000. On the $18,000,000,000 basis that would allow $8,400,000,000 for the next six months. That is only a difference of a billion dollars. Does the Senator from Michigan believe that the expenses of the next six months of this fiscal year are going to be anything like so great as were the expenses of the past six months, when we were in war most of the time and when our expenditures were at the peak?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I was stating, Mr. President, before I was interrupted by the Senator from North Carolina, that these are simply estimates; that I do not believe that even the Senator from North Carolina now has any adequate information as to what will be the expenditures of the Government during the balance of this fiscal year.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Michigan is right; I have no absolute information. All my absolute information is as to the expenditures of the first six months; that is practically absolute now.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will yield to the Senator from Utah when the Senator from North Carolina shall have concluded.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to say to the Senator from Michigan, however, that from time immemorial all statements of our expenditures which have been made before the beginning of the fiscal year have been nothing but estimates.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. We never can have anything but estimates.

Mr. TOWNSEND. And they are always based on normal conditions.

Mr. SIMMONS. They are based on appropriations for a fiscal year which is to begin in the future.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But they are all based on normal conditions.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; they are based on normal conditions.

Mr. TOWNSEND. And we are now making, according to what the Secretary of the Treasury called it, "the wildest guess"; we are guessing about an unknown future, untried by any experience that we have ever had.

Mr. SIMMONS. What I have said to the Senator is that during the last six months, when we had the most abnormal conditions that we have ever had, we only spent a little over $9,000,000,000. It is reasonable to suppose that during the next six months conditions will not be so abnormal, though they will still be abnormal, but not so much so as they were during the first six months. Of course, if we are going to assume that when the war is over our expenses are going to be just as great as they were during the last six months, when our expenditures were going up and up until they reached the peak, why, then, there will be something in the argument which the Senator from Michigan is now making.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Just let me say a word, and then I will yield to the Senator from Utah.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] states that the conditions have been most abnormal possible during the last six months. I do not think that is necessarily true. I think there are more uncertainties, more doubtful problems, entering into the next six months than have entered into the last six months as to what we are going to do. What is going to be done with the Government contracts; what is going to be done with the men who are employed; what is going to be done along the lines of the President's recommendation in his last message that we look after the restoration of northern France and Belgium; and what is going to be done with all of these great new problems, which will involve the expenditure of billions of dollars? No one can tell. No one can make better than a "wild guess" as to what is going to be done and what will be required.

I now yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I was simply going to say to the Senator from Michigan that there is no doubt the $18,000,000,000 will be expended before the present fiscal year is ended. The appropriations for the fiscal year were over $24,000,000,000, and, in fact, the authorized appropriations—that is, the authorization for contracts for which there was no appropriation made—and the sums loaned to the allies amounted to $36,000,000,000; but the $18,000,000,000 that are spoken of here are based upon the actual expenditures of the Government for the first six months and not upon the appropriations at all. For the first six months the actual demands of the Treasury of the United States were nine billion six hundred and odd million dollars. So, if in the following six months, or the latter half of the present fiscal year, there should be paid out of the Treasury $8,400,000,000 that would cover the $18,000,000,000.

As I said the other day, there is no more chance of having the requirements of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, falling short of $18,000,000,000 than there is that we shall have to raise more than $6,000,000,000 for the year 1920.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I believe that the Senator from Utah is absolutely correct about that. I do not think any Senator, not even the Senator from North Carolina, seriously believes or will contend that we are going to have any of the $18,000,000,000 left at the end of this fiscal year. We, of course, are both guessing, and time alone can tell which is right.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I did not mean to say that we should have anything left; but what I meant to say was that the $19,000,000,000 estimate for this year is as nearly accurate as are the ordinary estimates made by the department. But that is neither here nor there, according to my judgment. The question is, how much money we ought to raise by taxation this year without reference to how much is going to be our expenditure. I think $6,000,000,000 is enough; but, if the Senator will be so gracious as to yield to me and will let me take it out of his time, let me say to the Senator from Utah that however certain he may be about his position—and the Senator from Utah is generally very certain about his position; he makes statements which do not leave any doubt in my mind that he thinks he is absolutely infallible in his figures, and I am not saying that by way of criticism——

Mr. TOWNSEND. And he is generally pretty nearly right.

Mr. SIMMONS. Perhaps that is a good quality; but the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the other House is credited in the newspapers this morning with having made a statement to that body on yesterday, based upon his knowledge of the situation acquired by dealing with the estimates which have come to his committee, that from the substantially $9,000,000,000 of authorized contracts that are included in the $36,000,000,000 of which the Senator has just spoken, $8,000,000,000 of that amount will never be expended. He stated that from the balance of the appropriations—the appropriations proper, not the authorizations—there will be a saving, and I assume he means by cancellation of contracts and otherwise, and not only by such cancellation, but because it is not necessary to spend the money which we expected to spend—that there will be a saving of $8,000,000,000 more. Therefore, we have in those two items which were included in the estimate of $36,000,000,000, referred to by the Senator from Utah, $16,000,000,000 that under this statement would disappear.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, certainly the Senator from North Carolina has not followed what I have said in the past. If the expenditures of the Government shall amount to $18,000,000,000, that sum, taken from the $36,000,000,000, will leave more than the amount to which the Senator has referred. I knew that it was impossible for the expenses of the Government to be $38,000,000,000, and stated so when the appropriations were made; and I do know that the requirements of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, will be as near $18,000,000,000 as it is possible for a person to estimate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then, the Senator from Utah confirms the statement that $18,000,000,000 is a fair estimate for the year 1918.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt of it, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is what I have been contending.

Mr. SMOOT. That is absolutely true. My opinion is that, if anything, it will be a little more, but not much more.

Mr. SIMMONS. But that is a fair estimate?

Mr. SMOOT. It is a fair estimate.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is just what I have contended for all the time.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I said a week ago to-day in a speech which I then made.

Mr. SIMMONS. The idea I meant to convey when I referred to the statement of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee in the other House was that, according to his statement—and his statement was not all embracing—I do not think he showed that the $16,000,000,000 that were included in the appropriations and the authorizations had practically already been saved.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is, $16,000,000,000 to be deducted from the $36,000,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and that will leave $20,000,000,000.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator means the $20,000,000,000. that he thought might have to be provided for. That is $2,000,000,000 more than the estimate and more than the amount provided. I mention that only incidentally; and the argument which has occurred here shows that I was correct in saying that there is some dispute as to how much money the departments want this year; and yet Senators propose to go into the year following and determine now how much money should be raised by taxation and how. I repeat that only the exigencies of politics—poor politics, I admit—would induce such unwise legislation. This Congress can with greater wisdom devote its time to devising economies than to tying the hands of the next Congress.

There was no special consideration of this matter before the committee. I am not complaining, for I am inured to Democratic methods, but the chairman of the committee proposed to make this proposed amendment overnight. We afterwards called the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy before us for the purpose of trying to get some information as to what the actual needs for 1920 would be. They were brought in afterwards, after the majority by a strict party vote had agreed to put on this provision for 1920; and then after we had heard these Secretaries there were very many of us—and I think some of the majority—who were not clear that anybody knew how much money would be needed in 1920.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is a great deal of mystery about the 1920 proposition from beginning to end. In the first place it seems to appear as a mystery, and in the second place the attitude of the Republican members of the Committee on Finance is a mystery to the rest of us. It was distinctly understood for a time, and it was published to the country, that the Republican members thought it was such an injudicious thing to do that it would be fought to the close of the session. It has been reported around here that the Republican members of the committee were called into conference and unanimously agreed that it was such an injudicious thing to do, that it was so unwise and so unfair to the taxpayers of the country that it would be fought to the close of the session. The next day or two the leader upon the Republican side of the Finance Committee appeared and stated that the Republicans had concluded to let it pass with what seemed a mere camouflage of opposition. Is this being done because it is in the interest of the taxpayers of this country or is it mere party finesse here in the Senate Chamber? Why is it that this appeared overnight first upon the Democratic side and disappeared overnight on the Republican side?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to correct the Senator's statement. The exact measure appeared overnight, but it had been under discussion for days. From the day the armistice took place at once the question of reducing taxes for the following year was discussed.

Mr. BORAH. But, Mr. President, the 1920 proposition was brought to light and presented to the country and to the Senate as a whole, so far as public information was concerned, overnight.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is a mistake.

Mr. BORAH. It is not a mistake, so far as the public is concerned.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The public may not have gathered it, but it had been openly discussed.

Mr. BORAH. That is another example of secret diplomacy.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It was not secret. It was talked of in the Marble Room, and it was discussed generally. I had been urging it for two weeks before it was brought forward by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But not before the committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; I mentioned it at least once before the committee; I brought it up twice before the committee, I am sure.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I never heard of it.

Mr. McCUMBER and Mr. PENROSE addressed the Chair.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, just a moment. So far as the Democratic portion of the strategy is concerned, I am not deeply moved about it, but I do not understand the maneuvering of the Republican members of the Finance Committee.

The country was advised that this was such an injurious, unfair, improvident, and unwise thing to do that the party coming into power felt constrained to defeat it even by the consumption of time, and yet within a few hours after that position was announced, as a result of a conference of all the members of that committee upon the Republican side, as I have understood, the whole program was changed overnight. I do not understand it, except as the bill itself unravels the mystery. I think if you shall find that this bill, which purports to levy an 80 per cent tax, in fact levies only a 48 per cent tax, you will have discovered the reason why this change took place.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, may I ask a question of the Senator?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I was going to discuss the matter which the Senator from Idaho has brought up, but I will yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. It relates to the question when this matter was first brought before the Senate. I wish to ask the Senator from Georgia if it ever came before the Senate committee in any form before the 6th day of November?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It came before them immediately after the armistice. I do not locate it with reference to the election at all, because the election never entered into my mind in connection with it. I locate it in connection with the armistice. Immediately after it appeared that the war was going to end I began agitating it and published interviews concerning it in my own State. I expressed my views to other newspaper men, but they were not as much impressed as the papers of my home State. The suggestions of reducing taxes for 1919 were carried in the papers in my home State immediately after the German collapse. I do not connect their expression and publication with the election. So far as I am concerned the election had absolutely nothing to do with the proposed tax reduction.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, no one after the middle of October, when both Bulgaria and Austria-Hungary were out of the war and had surrendered and the Germans were all in full retreat, thought for a moment that the war would last another year. We knew then that the war was going to be over in less than a year, but it never occurred to us at that time that it was necessary to provide for the taxes for 1920, and it was never suggested in any form or shape until after the 6th day of November, 1918.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think I will go on for a few moments now, because I wish to say something about that very subject before it is entirely exhausted.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think perhaps indirectly I have been wrongly criticized——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I assure the Senator that nobody wants to do that.

Mr. SIMMONS. And I should like to have an opportunity to make a statement.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Very well.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know what the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] means when he says there was a mystery about the provision for the 1920 taxes getting into the bill. I think the Senator from Michigan will bear me out in the statement that the Secretary of the Treasury wrote a letter, addressed to me as the chairman of the committee, which letter I submitted to the committee, in which he recommended that the committee make a reduction in the taxes for 1920, upon the ground that it would not be necessary to raise as much for that year by taxation as for the year 1919.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator remember the date of that letter?

Mr. SIMMONS. I can not remember the date of it. I have it not here.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Well, it was after the election, and I understood that the chairman——

Mr. SIMMONS. It was after the armistice, and being after the armistice, of course it was after the election. We had not won the war when the election came on.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; nor the election afterwards. Did not the Senator have conferences with the Secretary of the Treasury and with members of his own party as to this proposition before the Secretary wrote the letter to him?

Mr. SIMMONS. A few days before the Secretary wrote to me I had a talk with him in his office about this subject, and of course I talked with some of the members of the committee with reference to it. I do not now recall what members of the committee, but I do not think I made any distinction between the Democrats and Republicans of the committee.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Well, Mr. President, I attended the meetings with great regularity.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator let me say a word further?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator from Idaho, when he made the statement a little while ago that, instead of 80 per cent, we were only levying a tax of 48 per cent, made a statement which is probably not warranted by the figures.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Idaho did not say that. I said that, if it should be developed here, as we have been assured that it will be by one member of the Finance Committee, and it is revealed that we are only taxing war and excess profits 48 per cent when we are professing to tax them 80 per cent, that will be perhaps one of the explanations for the cessation of the fight on the 1920 tax provisions of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will not say that the total average profits tax would be 80 per cent. Nobody ever supposed it would be; nobody ever supposed that even the war-profits tax of 80 per cent would in practical operation levy more than 70 per cent upon war incomes. Many estimate it at less than 60; but the calculation to which the Senator refers groups the excess-profits tax and the personal-service corporation tax with the war-profits tax and strikes an average of all of them and then professes to be an average upon the 80 per cent tax, while, in fact, it is an average upon the 80 per cent tax, the 30 per cent, and 60 per cent tax, and the less than 20 per cent tax.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, not only that, but it is an average of the taxes upon all corporations, some of which will not pay any taxes whatever.

Mr. SIMMONS. Exactly; and that will be developed when that position is taken before the Senate.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator from Michigan will permit me, I undertook particularly in the statement of my views before the Senate to say that the 80 per cent tax was not a full 80 per cent tax on the whole income of any corporation.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Michigan will pardon me, it would only be an 80 per cent tax at the very maximum upon war profits.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; upon war profits alone.

Mr. SIMMONS. But in arriving at this 48 per cent average I may say that it was computed on the 80 per cent war-profits tax, the 30 and the 60 per cent tax, and the very much lower tax upon personal-service corporations, and is practically, I think, a general average of taxes.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, what I had reference to is the statement—and I have some confidence in the gentleman who makes the statement, because he has been pretty accurate in the past on the subject and was infinitely more correct with reference to the amount of the tax in the last tax bill than those who were advocating its passage—after making these computations, that—

> The net result of all these deductions is that instead of this tax being an 80 per cent tax it will average no more than 48 per cent of the net income of corporations, and most likely even less than this.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Idaho a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. Does not the Senator mean 48 per cent of all income, without allowance for any exemptions at all?

Mr. BORAH. I am reading what the Senator from Wisconsin states in his views as one of the minority.

Mr. KELLOGG. I will ask the Senator if the 80 per cent tax was supposed to mean 80 per cent of all income, without any prewar exemption?

Mr. BORAH. No; I understand that it was——

Mr. KELLOGG. The 48 per cent referred to includes all income, without allowance for any exemption?

Mr. BORAH. Is that the Senator's understanding, that it only amounts to 48 per cent as an average?

Mr. KELLOGG. That is what I understand.

Mr. BORAH. Then, Mr. President, I can easily see why there should be great interest in the passage of this bill without much further discussion.

Mr. KELLOGG. I do not know that the figures are correct, but the statement does not purport to be 48 per cent of all war profits, but 48 per cent of the entire profits.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of California in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think if the Senator from Idaho would give this subject close study and take the amount of taxes actually imposed for the year 1918 on all business in the United States, he would come to the conclusion that an average tax of 48 per cent was a very high tax.

Now, I wish to say to the Senator that the amount, as estimated by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], includes all of the business of the country, some of which does not pay any excess war profits taxes.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know——

Mr. SMOOT. I know.

Mr. BORAH. Because the Senator from Wisconsin does not say so in his report.

Mr. SMOOT. But that is absolutely true, I will say to the Senator. Another thing I will say to the Senator here is, that under the bracket system which has been provided for here, wherever an institution has made war profits they pay 80 per cent upon all of the war profits; but if the Senator will notice I put in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks on last Monday, an example of just what an institution would pay under the bracket system. This is not a bracket step by step upon the different percentages, but it is so arranged that, if there are war profits, the tax is 80 per cent of the war profits made by the institution.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Utah if this sudden change of front with reference to the 1920 tax provision is not due to some things in the bill? Does the Senator know why this sudden change of front was made?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I can not answer that question, but I can say to the Senator that if a Republican Congress can act upon a revenue bill in time to change the law for 1920, I have no doubt they will do so, because the whole system now proposed, as I stated the other day, not only for this year but for 1920, is wrong, discriminatory, unjust, and can not be defended; and when the Republicans come into power I indulge the hope that we will pass a revenue bill that will be just to all business concerns in this country, irrespective of whether they are making large profits or small profits.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Now, Mr. President, I will proceed for a few moments. I desire to say to the Senator from Idaho that I was quite as much surprised as he was over the failure of the minority to stand up to the strong resolutions that were adopted when this provision was put in the bill by the solid Democratic majority in the Committee on Finance. I felt at that time that we were justified in going to any extent in defeating the bill if that provision was incorporated in it, and I understood that all of the minority members of the committee felt the same way. I can not see that this action can have anything to do with the tax provisions for 1919 contained in this bill, because they were agreed to practically before the provisions for 1920 taxes were brought forward.

There is something that attaches to the 1920 provision that is regarded as of political advantage, I think, on both sides. I think it was discovered, in the first place, or the Democrats thought they discovered, that there would be an advantage in now framing the tax law for 1920 and hold it on the statute books as against any action by the minority, because, as I have said, notwithstanding the statement of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], the Republican Congress will be absolutely powerless to change this law unless he desires a change in it. He can then decide what action, if any, can be taken, and I protest against this. The Sixty-fifth Congress was elected upon the express issue of legislating without Executive coercion. The 1920 provision is unjust and inequitable. It will not be quietly tolerated in time of peace. Only normal and excess-profits taxes are reduced. All of the obnoxious war taxes of the 1919 law are retained. Transportation taxes and those on automobile truck manufacturers remain in the 1920 provision. As a war measure the people will submit even to apparently unjust taxation, but you must not impose upon them in peace.

It is not a safe political thing for any party to undertake a tax revision, but it must be undertaken from time to time. I am willing to assume the responsibility when the necessity arrives. I am unwilling to have a repudiated majority prevent action by the next Congress. I do not fully understand all the reasons which actuate the majority in forcing this amendment. They are not fully disclosed. I do not understand either why some of the minority hesitate to use every means to defeat this proposition; but, so far as I am concerned, I have been prepared, believing as I do believe, that this is an unjust matter, to fight it to the end, even if the revenue bill itself were defeated, because the existing law will remain on the statute books, and it is admitted that we have got to raise from $5,000,000,000 to $7,000,000,000 by bonds during the next six months.

We have got to borrow that amount of money, and there will not be a difference of $1,000,000,000—I think not a difference of $700,000,000—between the revenues derived under the present law and those which will be obtained by the 1919 provisions of the pending bill. We could get along and the Government would not be embarrassed. But the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] says that he felt that it was our duty to legislate for 1920; that we ought not to leave the provisions of the law for 1919 on the statute books, as we have left all other laws on the statute books until repealed or amended; but why, if he is so concerned about that feature, ought we not to legislate for 1921 and 1922, and, indeed, up to 1930? Why trust future Congresses? If we want to satisfy the business of the country that taxes are not going to exceed a certain amount, why not legislate for the next 10 years? We have not been in the habit of doing so, and, as the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] said a little while ago, it appears to an honest mind that this is an unusual procedure. Congress can be called together on the day following the 4th of next March to legislate under existing conditions at that time, and that would have been the case, sir, if the Democratic Party had retained control of the Congress.

There would have been no 1920 provision in this bill; but it is here now, and it leaves an open field for speculation as to why it appears.

No one should be criticized for speculating on the motive which caused this thing to be done, because it is unusual and unnecessary. As far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to meet the responsibilities of an extra session and a new revenue bill. I feel that it is my duty to do that. I think we could legislate better under revealed facts than we can under speculative conditions, such as now confront us; and, I repeat, I am willing to assist in defeating this amendment and even to go to the extent of filibustering against this revenue bill, knowing that my country would not suffer and believing that a more just and equitable law would be enacted in the light of reconstruction and peace conditions; and no one believes—I do not think the senior Senator from North Carolina believes—that $4,000,000,000 will measure the necessary expenditures for 1920.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. TOWNSEND. It may be too little; it may be too much; but if it is true, as has been stated by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and shown, it seems to me quite clearly, that our expenditures next year in time of peace will total about $10,000,000,000. It will be a novel experience for the Government under a Republican administration to issue bonds to meet current expenses in time of peace. And yet everyone knows now that Democratic financing during the last six years will make a large bond issue necessary in 1920.

I rose to-day more particularly to file my protest against the criticism, which will be charged up in the years to come to the party or to the administration then in power, that it was necessary to raise by bond issues two years after the war was over some six or seven billion dollars, it may be, to meet the expenses of the Government. When that time comes it may be necessary, it may be wise, to issue the bonds. No one can tell that now. No one is wise enough to know what it will be best to do when these new conditions arise. It may require a less tax than $4,000,000,000 for 1920. Certainly, a new system of taxation may be desirable. No one can tell. I believe we will have to raise more than $4,000,000,000 in 1920. I think our Democratic brethern believe it will be necessary, and it is possible they may see some political advantage in the probability.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him now?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think it is but holding out a promise to the ear and breaking it to the heart of business to say that the taxes are going to be comparatively small when the necessities of the Government will be so large.

Mr. SIMMONS. Why, Mr President, if the Senator will pardon me, of course I know that the expenditures of the Government for 1920 are going to be more than $4,000,000,000, just as I know that the expenditures of the Government for 1918 are going to be more than $6,000,000,000; and nobody, from the Treasury down, has ever proposed to levy a tax sufficient to pay all the expenses of this Government in those years, including its war expenditures.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is right.

Mr. SIMMONS. Now, I want to ask the Senator this question: If the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is correct in his estimate—and I think I can show conclusively that he is not correct—that the expenditures for the year 1920 will be $10,000,000,000, does not the Senator know that at least one-half of that amount will be war expenses that have been incurred by the Government and the bills for which will not have been paid by that time? In case our expenditures reach $10,000,000,000—five billions of the ten billions being war expenditures—does the Senator want to raise all of that money by taxation? Does he want to impose upon the people of this country a burden of ten billions in taxes, one-half of which is to pay war bills that have been incurred but not paid?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator from Michigan is advocating nothing of the kind. The Senator from Michigan is advocating the policy of knowing what we have to meet, or approximately so, in order to proportion the amount of taxes to the amount of bond sales. That is what the Senator from Michigan is advocating. Four billions of dollars may be too much; it may be too little. That fact can not be determined until the time comes, and we will be better able to legislate adequately when we have all of the facts before us.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will permit me, the Senator says four billions may be too much. If four billions may be too much, then six billions certainly will be too much. What we are proposing is to reduce the taxes to be levied for that year from six to four billions.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But the Senator from North Carolina, like other Senators on that side, begs the question when he uses the expression "six billions." Nobody in the country, nobody in the world, believes it will be six billions. Nobody believes that at all; but if you left the law as it is now we would have an extra session of Congress to change it, to bring it to what is necessary and what justice requires should be levied upon the people of the country.

Mr. SIMMONS. How does the Senator know that we would have an extra session of Congress?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Well, President Wilson may be back by that time, and I assume that even he would realize that it was his duty, just the same as though there had not been a Republican Congress, to call an extra session to look after the interests of the people of this country, to frame a tax bill to meet the conditions and the needs of the country during that year. I am assuming that.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is speculating about the question of whether or not we are going to have an extra session. He does not know, and I do not know. I assume that under ordinary circumstances, unless we make these changes now, they will not be made until some time after the beginning of the next Congress, which will be in December, 1919. If that happens, if we leave the provision for six billions of tax in the law, does not the Senator believe that from now until that reduction is made next December, probably—perhaps later than next December—the business people of this country, when they go to fix the prices of their products that are to be sold in the calendar year 1919, will make allowances in the prices they will charge the people for the taxes they would have to pay under the law existing at the time of their sales?

I think we shall all be forced to agree that that would naturally be the course followed. These profits taxes are passed on. The business man is not going to take any risk. He is not going to say: "These taxes may be lowered at some time in the future." He is going to say: "I will fix my prices according to the rates as I find them in the law." Therefore, of course, he will go on in that way, fixing his prices according to the rates he finds in the law until next December, the end of the calendar year; and then suddenly you remit two billions of those taxes to the taxpayers of this country. Then you will have this situation, if the Senator will pardon me further: The people will have paid, in the increased prices of the products they buy, $2,000,000,000; it will be in the pockets of the men who sell them these necessaries of life; and then you will remit that $2,000,000,000, and it is nothing more than a pure subsidy.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Why does not the Senator's anxiety extend to the year 1921 as well? The next Congress may not pass any tax bill, and according to his theory we ought to fix it for all time to come.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator knows perfectly well that the bill provides that the tax for the next calendar year, based upon the income of the next taxable year, shall be six billions, and for every year thereafter four billions. Now, if the four billions is more than is needed in any subsequent year, you can reduce it; but until you do reduce it or increase it that will be the tax for 1921, 1922, 1923, and so on indefinitely, until it is changed.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am very glad the Senator brought that out, because it shows conclusively what he had in mind—a peace tax of $4,000,000,000 to run for years to come.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; Mr. President.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Or that may run for years to come.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator misrepresents me.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No.

Mr. SIMMONS. I said to the Senator a little while ago that a considerable part of the expenditures for 1920 was going to be made up of left-over war bills.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But the Senator fixes that tax for all years to come.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; because after that year I have no basis of any kind whatsoever.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator is wise enough to know that Congress is going to meet and pass revenue bills. He knows that. He knew they would have done that if there had not been any provisions for 1920 in this bill. The President would have called Congress together. I believe that he is going to do it anyway, whether he wants to or not, because I assume that he was sincere and the Secretary of the Treasury was sincere when they asked us to act immediately on the railroad question. I assume that he was; and if he was, we shall have to have an extra session of the National Legislature. I can not remember a time since I have been in Congress, during 14 or 15 years, when we have not had a special session at the end of the old Congress. We ought to have an extra session after March 4. I think we must have one. I think if the Republican Members had stood up and fought this provision to the finish there would have been one or else this iniquitous amendment would have been defeated.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me say to the Senator that the Senator from Idaho thinks there is some mystery about the original position of the Republicans as illustrated in their caucus. I do not think there is any mystery about it at all. I think the only ground in precedent, in principle, or in policy for opposing fixing the tax for 1920 at less than that for 1919 grew out of the desire of the Republican Party to force an extra session. I believe that was the ground of the opposition.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator think that adopting this provision for 1920 will force an extra session?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the minority had an idea at one time, and I think that idea prevailed in the caucus——

Mr. TOWNSEND. The conference.

Mr. SIMMONS. That if they defeated this proposition to reduce the taxes for the year 1920 probably it would contribute to, if it did not force, the calling of an extra session.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Oh, well, I did not understand. I understood the Senator to say that the majority changed its position and favored the 1920 provision to force an extra session.

Mr. SIMMONS. If I said "majority," I meant "minority." I referred to the statement which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] made here a little while ago, in which he said that there was a great mystery about the change—the sudden, overnight change—in the policy of the minority with respect to this 1920 tax, and he could not imagine what had brought about that sudden change. He stated to the Senate—and I was glad he did—and to the country that you had a caucus—I believe you call it a conference, but it was a caucus—in which you agreed, according to the Senator's statement, to oppose to the bitter end, to fight to the last ditch, so to speak, this 1920 tax.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. And he said that suddenly the minority had changed on that question, and he said that there was a mystery about it.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, before the Senator continues statements with no foundation in fact I should like to inform him——

Mr. SIMMONS. If there is no foundation in fact for any statement I have made, the Senator knows that I will take it back; but I was here, I listened to the Senator from Idaho, and I think I understood the Senator from Idaho as well as the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from North Carolina has stated that the Republicans held what he called a caucus.

Mr. SIMMONS. Oh, I did not say that. I know nothing about it. I said that the Senator from Idaho spoke of it in that way.

Mr. PENROSE. There was no such caucus or conference, whichever it may be termed, held at any time that I know of. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] was the first member of the committee to breathe fire and flame when he declared that he would rather defeat the bill than not have the 1920 provision in it; and perhaps some of the minority might have been a little incensed at this effort, after election day, to tie up the Government. But, like a great deal of talk in this world, it passed by and patriotism prevailed and everyone felt that the Government had to have the money and the bill had to be passed.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have made no charge, and I am making no charge, against the minority.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am perfectly willing to yield, but I should like to have a little regularity about these interruptions, so that I can follow them myself. I now yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I only wanted to say to the Senator from North Carolina that he must not suppose us quite so ignorant of the parliamentary situation as to think that the bill with which to force an extra session is a revenue bill. Nobody thought that for a moment. The existing law could go on. But there are other bills which will force an extra session; and I will simply say that perhaps the Senator has been so long in power that he does not quite remember what has happened. There may be an extra session. Do not count so confidently on there not being one.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have not said that there would not be one. I have not said that there would be one. I do not know. Frankly, I do not know. What I said was that I believed that one of the reasons or considerations for the original position to which the Senator from Idaho referred was that it was thought at one time refusal to cooperate with the majority in this matter might contribute toward forcing an extra session. Now, I will let that statement stand in the RECORD for what it is worth.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I think I have finished, and I think everybody else has had an opportunity to say what he wished to say in my time. I did not expect to intrude so long upon the Senate. I simply wanted to voice my opposition to this 1920 provision. It makes reductions in income taxes, war taxes, and so on; but it leaves for 1920 all of the most obnoxious war taxes of 1919.

For instance, we have here—and I am going to offer an amendment to eliminate it—a special tax provision of 5 per cent on the manufacturer of automobile trucks. We have many other similar taxes in the bill. Unless it is necessary for the support of the Government, there is no more reason why you should put a tax upon the manufacturer of automobile trucks than there is for placing a tax upon the manufacture of wagons or buggies or any other necessity; for automobiles and automobile trucks have come to be absolute necessities. I am going to offer an amendment to strike that out of the bill when we get to it. But what I say is that here, two years in advance, you proceed by a system of reduction in certain items of fixation in a war-revenue bill to make the law for 1920. You can not know now in advance whether these are the only things that should have a reduction or not. There may be others. We may feel like eliminating some of these obnoxious, disturbing taxes which are an annoyance, which bring in little revenue, but which create injustice and burden legitimate industry. I think we ought to consider these questions by themselves, and it can not be done unless we take up a new bill, as we would be obliged to do if we brought up one next spring.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish most briefly to state why I can not concur in the majority view that we should legislate this year for the fiscal year 1920. I have taken up no time whatever in the discussion of this bill on the floor, having said what I wanted to say on each feature as it arose before the committee; but I wish I could eliminate from my mind not the mere suspicion but the very strong conviction that the 1920 provision is a political provision only and is instituted for the purpose of gaining political advantage.

I know that in the bill of 1917 there was not in the committee one word or expression that would indicate any character of partisanship in bringing that bill before the Senate; and I know also that from the time the present tax bill came before the committee, as suggested by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], there never had been, prior to November 6, an intimation on either side of any desire to take any political or partisan advantage in the form the bill should assume. We got along very nicely until after the 6th of November, 1918; and then there was suddenly brought before us this provision to tie the hands of the succeeding Congress for 1919.

I know of only one instance in the whole history of the country in which a tax bill passed by Congress has provided for a different rate for any succeeding year. That was in the revenue bill of 1828, as I remember, which was a tariff bill and which provided that in each succeeding year the tariff should be reduced 10 per cent. We know the result of that upon the country. By the year 1833 it had brought about a condition almost of bankruptcy throughout the United States. We have never attempted that since, to my knowledge, until we reached the bill that is before the Congress at the present time.

In considering this matter I have to sort of decide what I would do were I attempting in any way, as a good Democrat, to influence the election of 1920. I would reason along about this line:

I would first provide, by a bill in 1918, for a tax which I knew would not raise the necessary amount of funds for the year 1920, and I would leave that for the succeeding political party to get out of the best way they possibly could. I would reason, as we all reason, that the American public, like every other public, detests taxes of any kind. I never knew any character of tax that any people were particularly enamored with; and if I could say, "The Democratic Party has placed upon you for 1920 a tax that will bring in only $4,000,000,000, and now a Republican majority comes in and finds that it has to raise $8,000,000,000," the Republican Party would necessarily have to take the onus of issuing bonds in times of peace; and I would reason somewhat along the same line of reasoning that was indulged in after President Cleveland found it necessary to issue bonds to the extent of $262,000,000, which had a very strong influence against the party then in power and assisted the Republicans to come into power. I would naturally follow that course.

That is just exactly what was done in the Committee on Finance. Nothing was ever urged or said about providing for the 1920 taxes until all the votes had all been counted on the 6th of November, 1918; and immediately thereafter we found that we had to provide for a lower tax in 1920.

Mr. President, I do not think it was necessary to take into consideration the 1920 taxes; but I want to ask why, if it was thought necessary, the majority party never dreamed of it until after the 6th day of November, 1918? In the early part of October, 1918, Bulgaria had surrendered. Shortly thereafter Austria-Hungary had practically surrendered to the allies. The German eastern flank was threatened. Every single day from the 18th of July Haig had advanced, up until the 10th day of November. Foch, on the French line, had day after day advanced his armies. The Germans were retreating everywhere; and in the latter part of October, long before we had determined what the political policy of this country should be for the ensuing year, the whole German Empire had thrown up their hands and yelled "Kamerad!" We knew that they were defeated. We knew then that the war would not and could not last even until January. Even before the election they had pleaded with us to make terms of armistice, and had intimated that they were ready to surrender, whatever our terms might be. Still it never occurred to anyone up to that date that it was necessary to provide a lesser sum to be raised by taxation in 1920, although we knew positively at that time that the war could not last another three months.

Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania has intimated that in all probability the Republican Congress would lower the taxes. I am going to differ with him there. I do not think it is going to be possible to have lower taxes for the year ending July 1, 1920, than for the year ending July 1, 1919, and I will tell you why. The reason is simply this: You have lowered your rate about one-third. Does anyone believe that in times of peace, when all of the business interests of the country will be that much nearer to a normal condition and when they will have to compete against not the necessities of a government which would buy everything they produced at three times its value but against the entire commercial world, there are going to be any such fabulous fortunes made in 1920 as were made in 1919? I think I am conservative in saying that at least the profits will be reduced 33 per cent, taking the whole country over; and if you reduce the profits 33 per cent, then upon the same rate of taxation you will not raise any more than four billions in 1920, even with the rate of taxation that you have in force to-day.

So it is not necessary to deceive the American public into the idea that their taxes will be less for 1920 than they are to-day. There is just one way, and that is to introduce and pass during the next session—an extra session—a tariff bill that will take a portion of the taxes from other portions of the world and relieve us to just that extent. If we can take $160,000,000, which is, I believe, about what we raise to-day from the tariff, and make it raise $200,000,000, of course we can gain $140,000,000, and if we can raise it to $500,000,000 we can raise just exactly that much more and reduce the taxation in this country to just that extent.

But, Mr. President, we will have to issue bonds, and the amount of bonds will be considerable. We have been conducting the war in a most criminally extravagant manner, in a manner, when all the facts are known, that will shock the sense of justice and the conscience of the American public. We made our contracts and we have to pay the bills. Many of those bills will run over into next year. Then we will have to raise the money to meet them, no matter what the extravagance might have been. We are going to need more than $4,000,000,000 in 1920, in my judgment, unless we reduce the amount by some character of tariff legislation.

So, Mr. President, I think it is unjust for the majority to say to the American people you are going to be taxed less than we believe you will have to be taxed to meet the requirements of the Government, and enforce upon a succeeding party the necessity of explaining why it is necessary to raise this amount.

Mr. President, I say candidly that I can not, for one, vote to fix the revenue for 1920 at an amount which I honestly believe will be far less than the amount required. Nor am I willing to base a tax upon what the Secretary of the Treasury says emphatically is the wildest kind of guess as to what we shall need in 1920. As has been suggested by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], if we are going to legislate for 1920 we might legislate for 1921 and 1922.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think the Senator does not mean to misrepresent the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly I do not.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Secretary of the Treasury was referring specifically to the estimates for 1919 of $18,000,000,000.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no; if I remember rightly he used the words, in answer to a question that was propounded to him, and said it was really the wildest kind of a guess as to what the requirements of the Government would be for 1920.

Mr. SIMMONS. That was stated here the other day, and I am very sure he did not say it. I examined the record.

Mr. McCUMBER. If there is a difference of opinion between the Senator and myself upon that point, I think there is no difference in our opinion that in fact it is the wildest kind of a guess to determine what our expenses will be two years from now.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to say to the Senator it is my candid opinion, after thorough investigation, that there is more uncertainty about the estimates for 1919 than about the estimates for 1920.

Mr. McCUMBER. We have dealt with 1919, and if we make a mistake and in our mistake vote for a sum that is far too little, it must necessarily carry itself into the next year and but exaggerate the error which we are now going to make in providing for less than we shall need during that year.

Mr. President, it seems to me that sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof, and that we must legislate for 1920 in 1919. I appreciate the fact that the majority party do not wish to have an extra session. I wish it were possible that we could escape an extra session next year. I can naturally understand that if we do not have an extra session and do not introduce a new tariff bill until December, 1919, we will run well, perhaps, into 1920 before we find out the operation of that new tariff bill, and in the meantime the opposing party will have all the political advantage it can possibly acquire from such an uncertain condition. I wish that we could settle what our tax legislation shall be in 1919, just as we have always done in the past, with only the taxation for the ensuing year, without attempting to tie the hands of Congress.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I shall not take the time of the Senate for a general discussion of the revenue bill. I recognize that it is the desire of the Senate to pass it at once. But I do not wish the bill to become a law without at least registering a brief protest against carrying the iniquities of war profits and war excess taxes beyond the period of the war.

It has been stated by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] that we have been carrying on the war extravagantly. That unfortunately is true. I shall not take the time of the Senate to go into the details, but I should like to remind the Senate that Great Britain carried on the war for four years, raised 5,000,000 men, built all her new cantonments and manufactories, added to her navy, policed the North Sea, transported armies to foreign shores, to the East, and purchased much of the material in our market at high prices, and paid the bills for $34,000,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. Great Britain did not have any Hog Island.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is quite true. We, on the other hand, according to estimates, in the two years of our participation in the war, including the estimates for the next six months, will spend $31,000,000,000. Not including any loans we may make to the allies from now until next July, at least we will spend that, and probably those loans will increase it so that our two years of war will cost us as much as Great Britain spent in four years.

Of course, Mr. President, we have been extravagant. In the ordinary course of events a country not organized for war but for peace, which undertook to marshal a great army and all its resources in so short a time would be extravagant. But we have been more than extravagant. When we realize that the report of the Department of Justice shows that in the Hog Island shipyards, which the revised estimate showed would cost $27,000,000, they have spent $63,000,000, and the department confesses its inability to account for the difference; when we realize that a billion dollars has been spent in the airplane service, and that when the war closed we had a negligible number—only 312; and when we realize the enormous extravagances of the Ordnance Department and the waste in the housing department, of course we can see where these expenditures have gone.

But, Mr. President, we are willing to forget and wipe the slate, at least so far as paying the bills are concerned, because of the splendid results of the men we sent abroad. Their accomplishments, the wonderful strength of the Army, drawn from the best manhood of this country, furnishes a bright page in American history. And it is because of the success of the war and because of the results achieved by our armies upon foreign shores that the American people are willing that this bill, large as it is, should be passed and the expenses of the war be paid.

But with this tax bill, which I believe is unprecedented in any country engaged in the war, there will be at least $5,000,000,000 more bonds to be sold between now and July, 1919, and probably $5,000,000,000 more in 1920.

Mr. President, I am not willing to vote to carry the inequalities and injustice of this system of taxation into a period after the war. I believe the next Congress should be given an opportunity to frame a just and equitable tax bill, when we are not under this pressure of raising in a short time the largest sum of money possible with safety to the business interests of the country.

A personal, progressive income tax, with a heavy surtax on large incomes and a corporation income tax are just and equitable taxes. The wisdom of man can not discover a way of making an excess-profits tax a just and equitable tax between individuals, partnerships, and corporations. The very nature of an excess-profits tax—since an exemption basis of earnings by way of capital must first be established—makes it discriminatory, because the overcapitalized concern escapes taxation and the conservative undercapitalized business man is penalized. It can not be helped.

I do not believe that we should carry into 1920 this most vicious part of the bill. A war-profits tax is more equitable, but, of course, both the war-profits tax and the excess-profits tax of necessity must impose a great hardship on some business concerns and unjust discrimination between different corporations engaged in business.

Last year, as I said, when the excess-profits tax bill was before the Senate it discriminated against corporations, partnerships, and individuals engaged in business with a small capital, conservatively organized concerns, and was in favor of the large capitalized corporations of the country. This bill will inevitably do the same thing. We have a section of this bill carrying into next year the discriminations and inequalities of such a system. Of course, it is a large tax bill. The necessities of the Government make it inevitable. I shall not go into any general discussion of the features of this bill. I have prepared a synopsis of the income taxes and other war taxes of Great Britain, France, Italy, and Germany in order that they might be compared with the proposed taxes in this country. I shall not stop to discuss it, but I ask permission to print it in the RECORD at the end of my remarks as an appendix.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOSES in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KELLOGG. While it is true that it is difficult to compare this tax bill with the taxes imposed in foreign countries, I believe I am well within a conservative statement when I say that we are levying, all in all, the heaviest tax ever levied by any of the countries in this war—income, excess-profits, and war taxes altogether. It is true that the normal tax on incomes in Great Britain, as you will find, is 30 per cent; but it is also true that there are so many exceptions, reservations, and exemptions that it is hard to say whether the normal tax, as a whole, is greater than ours.

The surtax in Great Britain is higher for the smaller incomes, but for the larger incomes the proposed surtax in this bill is very much higher than the British. I am speaking from recollection when I say that no surtax in Great Britain goes above 22½ per cent. This is upon incomes of $50,000 or more. The exemptions of the war-profits tax in Great Britain are fully as liberal, if not more so, than ours. The rate levied is 80 per cent on the balance. I do not think it is fair to say that this bill does not levy 80 per cent upon the war profits. In order to arrive at a war-profits tax, of necessity the bill must first provide for an exemption of prewar net earnings, and our system of arriving at prewar earnings is in general the British system, and we levy 80 per cent upon the balance.

I have not heard of any serious objection by the American business men to the payment of taxes last year or the proposed taxes in this bill. The American people have made up their minds to win this war, and if it was necessary they were willing to pledge every dollar of their incomes and the vast resources of this country to that end, and they will pay these taxes without serious objection. But what I do object to is, at the present time, without the knowledge of what we shall need next year, carrying forward the worst part of this bill into 1919 and 1920.

As stated by the chairman of the Committee on Finance [Mr. SIMMONS] in his opening speech, we can not tell what the expenses of the Government will be next year. We do not know what we have to pay in liquidation of the contracts of millions and millions of dollars for the various war projects. We do not know what we may have to pay in liquidation of the wheat guaranty, which was a war measure. We can not say now what taxes should be levied for the next year. I hope that it will not be necessary to levy more than the $4,000,000,000. I think the American people are entitled to look forward to a decrease of these enormous war taxes. It is said that the tax bill should be passed and become a law before the beginning of the year in which the taxes are to accrue. Undoubtedly that is true, but that has not been our practice. The tax bill of 1917 was passed in October of that year, and this bill, which might have been passed last summer had the majority party desired to do so, is now still on the calendar of the Senate near the 1st of January.

As I have said before, while I do not wish to take the time to discuss the bill at length, I wish to enter my protest against the taxes for 1919 and 1920.

APPENDIX.

SYNOPSIS OF INCOME-TAX ACTS, VARIOUS COUNTRIES, 1918.

It is almost impossible to formulate a comprehensive comparative statement of the income-tax rates of the different countries now engaged at war. The best that can be done is to state as concisely as possible the general rates applicable under general varied circumstances in each particular country.

GREAT BRITAIN.

INCOME TAX—RATES OF TAX.

Normal tax, 30 per cent of net income. This, however, is not without qualifications. There are certain exemptions, abatements, and reliefs, hereinafter specified, which pertain to incomes below $12,500 per year, and which must be considered in connection hereto.

Incomes below $12,500 per annum.

EXEMPTIONS.

Incomes not exceeding $650 per annum are exempt from the operation of the income tax.

ABATEMENTS.

In the case of incomes over $650 per annum and not exceeding $3,500, deductions, known as abatements, are made before the income tax is applied. This abatement is graduated as follows:

Income—	Abatement.
Exceeding $650, not exceeding $2,000	$600
Exceeding $2,000, not exceeding $3,000	500
Exceeding $3,000, not exceeding $3,500	350

In the case of incomes exceeding $3,500 no abatement is made, and the tax is levied on the whole income at the rate applicable thereto.

RELIEFS.

In the respect of wife and dependent relatives, and in the respect of life insurance premiums, etc.: Relief from tax upon certain portions of his income is accorded each taxpayer to specified sums in the contingency that said taxpayer is supporting dependent or indigent relatives coming within the certain specified class. Relief from the normal tax is granted to the taxpayer on the amount of annual premiums for life insurance or deferred annuity on his own life or the life of his wife, but this allowance shall not reduce the income as estimated for purposes of exemption or abatement, neither shall it exceed one-sixth of the total income of 7 per cent of the capital sum insured, or $500 in all.

EARNED INCOME RELIEF.

Where the income does not exceed $12,500 and any part of that income is earned income, the following graduated rates instead of the normal tax are applicable to the earned income:

	Per cent.
When total earned income does not exceed $2,500	11¼
Income $2,500 to $5,000	15
Income $5,000 to $7,500	18¾
Income $7,500 to $10,000	22½
Income $10,000 to $12,500	26¼

UNEARNED INCOME RELIEF.

Where the income does not exceed $10,000, the following graduated rates instead of the normal tax are applicable to the unearned income:

	Per cent.
Does not exceed $2,500	15
From $2,500 to $5,000	18¾
From $5,000 to $7,500	22½
From $7,500 to $10,000	26¼

SPECIAL WAR PROVISION.

Reduced rates on pay of soldiers, sailors, etc.: The service pay of any person in the Army, Navy, Air Service, or Red Cross (if stationed abroad) is taxed as follows:

	Per cent.
Does not exceed $1,500	3¾
Exceeds $1,500 but does not exceed $2,500	6¼
Exceeds $2,500 but does not exceed $5,000	8¾
Exceeds $5,000 but does not exceed $7,500	11¼
Exceeds $7,500 but does not exceed $10,000	13¾
Exceeds $10,000 but does not exceed $12,500	16¼
Exceeds $12,500	17½

ABATEMENT IN CASE OF SOLDIERS, SAILORS, ETC.

If the total income does not exceed $1,500 the prewar abatement of $800 is granted.

SUPERTAX.

Incomes over $12,500 are subject to a supertax according to the following graduated scale:

	Per cent.
First $10,000
Next $2,500 ($10,000 to $12,500)	5
Next $2,500 ($12,500 to $15,000)	7½
Next $5,000 ($15,000 to $20,000)	10
Next $5,000 ($20,000 to $25,000)	12½
Next $5,000 ($25,000 to $30,000)	15
Next $10,000 ($30,000 to $40,000)	17½
Next $10,000 ($40,000 to $50,000)	20
Next $10,000 (above $50,000)	22½

EXCESS-PROFITS TAX.

Basis of tax: Excess of profits during war-trade years over prewar standards, prewar standard being the average of any two of the last three prewar-trade years selected by the taxpayer, except that it is not to be counted at less than 6 per cent (in the case of business not carried on by a company or corporation, 8 per cent) on the capital invested at the end of the last prewar-trade year. Allowance is made for increase in capital during a war-trade year at the rate of 9 per cent (in which case of noncorporate business, 11 per cent); for decrease in capital during a war-trade year, at the rate of 6 per cent (for noncorporate business, 7 per cent). If the average profits of the last three prewar years were 25 per cent or more lower than during the three previous years, any four of the six years may be taken as a basis for the prewar standard. In the case of new business the prewar standard is counted as 9 per cent of the capital invested (or for noncorporate business, 11 per cent).

EXEMPTIONS.

(1) Amount: $1,000, increased by one-fifth of the amount by which the profits are less than $10,000 if the prewar standard does not exceed $2,500.

(2) Kinds of business: Agriculture, offices, profession, insolvent businesses in the hands of a liquidator.

Rate of tax, 80 per cent.

FRANCE.

Income tax imposed, 1918.

EXEMPTIONS.

Persons whose incomes do not exceed $600, ambassadors and other foreign diplomatic agents, including consuls and consular agents of foreign countries, are exempted from the operations of the war-income tax, providing, in the case of ambassadors and consuls and consular agents, this exemption is granted on the condition that the countries said ambassadors and agents represent extend similar privileges to French diplomatic agents and consuls.

GENERAL INCOME TAX.

The tax shall be levied on the total amount of the annual income of every taxable person. Such net income shall be determined with due regard to the personal and real property of the taxpayer, the professions exercised by him, the wages, salaries, pensions, and life annuities enjoyed by him, and the profits derived from any gainful occupation in which he may be engaged, after deducting therefrom the certain exemptions and annuities herein specified.

Married persons are entitled to an abatement of $400. In addition each taxable person shall be entitled to an abatement of $200 for each person dependent upon him, not exceeding five. For each such dependent person after the fifth, $300 shall be the abatement. Each taxable person shall be taxed only on such part of his income as exceeds, after making deductions and abatements, the sum of $600. The tax shall be computed by adding together:

One-tenth of the portion of the taxable income included between $600 and $1,600.

Two-tenths of the portion of the taxable income included between $1,600 and $2,400.

Three-tenths of the portion of the taxable income included between $2,400 and $3,200.

Four-tenths of the portion of the taxable income included between $3,200 and $4,000.

Five-tenths of the portion of the taxable income included between $4,000 and $8,000.

Six-tenths of the portion of the taxable income included between $8,000 and $12,000.

Seven-tenths of the portion of the taxable income included between $12,000 and $16,000.

Eight-tenths of the portion of the taxable income included between $16,000 and $20,000.

Nine-tenths of the portion of the taxable income included between $20,000 and $30,000.

And the whole of the excess of income beyond this and applying to the figure so obtained the rate of 12.5 per cent.

Further exemptions on the tax computed in accordance with the above provide that each taxpayer is entitled to a reduction of 5 per cent for one dependent, 10 per cent for two dependents, 20 per cent for three dependents, and so on each dependent after the third entitles him to an additional reduction of 10 per cent, providing the total deductions do not exceed one-half of the tax.

TAXATION OF COMMERCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL PROFITS.

An annual tax is imposed on the profits from commercial and industrial undertakings realized during the preceding year or during the period of 12 months as to which the last return was made, when such period does not coincide with the calender year.

For the purpose of computing such tax, that portion of the net profits of such business not exceeding $300 shall be reckoned as one-quarter. From $300 to $1,000 as one-half; the excess beyond as a whole.

The rate of tax is fixed at 4½ per cent. Various specified occupations and enterprises of a commercial character are exempted from the operation of this tax, except in so far that their net profits exceed the sum of $300.

SPECIAL TAX.

Independently of tax on profits derived from industrial and commercial undertakings as above imposed, a special tax is imposed on the amount of business transacted by undertakings having for their principal object the retail sale of provisions or goods, when the amount of such business exceeds $200,000, not including exports to foreign countries, to Algiers, or to French colonies and protectorates. The said special tax is fixed in accordance with the following scale:

One-tenth of that portion of the amount of business between $200,000 and $400,000.

Two-tenths of that portion of the amount of business between $400,000 and $2,000,000.

Three-tenths of that portion of the amount of business between $2,000,000 and $20,000,000.

Four-tenths of that portion of the amount of business between $20,000,000 and $40,000,000.

Five-tenths of that portion of the amount of business over $40,000,000.

Agricultural and cooperative organizations which limit themselves to the transaction of business for the profit of their immediate members are not within the operation of this special tax.

TAXES ON AGRICULTURAL PROFITS.

An annual tax is imposed upon the profits derived from agricultural undertakings. The profits derived from such agricultural undertakings are considered for the purpose of assessing the tax as equal to one-half the rental value of the land; when the actual rental value does not exceed $2,400, the farm owners shall pay the tax only on such portion of the income as exceeds $250. He shall be entitled to an abatement of two-thirds on the portion of the income between $250 and $400 and one-third on the portion between $400 and $600. The rate of tax is 3.75 per cent.

TAXATION OF SALARIES, WAGES, PENSIONS, ANNUITIES, ETC.

Pensions, life annuities, and so forth, are subject to tax levied on that portion of their yearly total which exceeds the following amounts:

Pensions and life annuities, $250.

Salaries, allowances, fees, and wages, if the taxable person lives in a community of less than 10,001 inhabitants, $300.

In a community of between 10,001 and 100,000 inhabitants, $400.

In a community of more than 100,000 inhabitants, $500.

In Paris and specified immediate vicinity, $600.

Provided that in computing the tax only one-half of the portion of the taxable income included between the exempted minimum and the sum of $1,000 shall be considered. The rate of the tax is fixed at 3.75 per cent.

TAXES ON PROFESSIONAL INCOMES.

The incomes from liberal professions and other nonmercantile offices and employments, as well as from all lucrative occupations and undertakings not liable to a special income tax, shall be subject to a tax levied annually upon the net income of the preceding year, consisting of the excess of total receipts over expenses incurred. The tax shall be levied only on that portion of the net profits in excess of the sum of $300 when the person lives in a community of less than 10,001 inhabitants; $400 if in a community of from 10,001 to 100,000, and $500 if in a community over 100,000 inhabitants; $600 if person lives in Paris and specified vicinity. Provided, however, that for the purpose of computing the tax, that portion of the net profits included between the exempted minimum and the sum of $1,000 shall be divided in half. The tax rate is fixed at 3.75 per cent.

TAXATION OF INCOMES FROM TRANSFERABLE SECURITIES.

The rate of tax is 5 per cent.

TAXATION OF INCOMES FROM IMPROVED AND UNIMPROVED REAL ESTATE.

Rate of tax on unimproved real estate is 5 per cent on net income. Rate of tax on improved real estate fixed at 4 per cent of net income.

EXCESS-PROFITS TAX.

Basis of tax: Excess of profits during war-trade years over prewar standard of profits, prewar standard being the average of the last three years prior to August 1, 1914, but not to be counted at less than $1,000 nor less than 8 per cent on the capital invested.

EXEMPTIONS.

(1) Amount: In the case of mine owners and persons subject to the business-license tax, $1,000; in the case of plants wrecked by the war or located in the invaded territory, 6 per cent of the capital invested; in the case of all who are subject to the tax, extra amounts necessary for depreciation.

(2) Kinds of business: All except those conducted by mine owners, persons subject to a business-license tax, and persons furnishing supplies to the Government.

Rate of tax—	Per cent.
On the portion of the taxable profits below $20,000	50
On the portion of the taxable profits between $20,000 and $50,000	60
On the portion of the taxable profits between $50,000 and $100,000	70
On the portion of taxable profits exceeding $100,000	80

ITALY.

EXCESS-PROFITS TAX.

Basis of tax: New profits or excess of profits during war-trade years over the average of the amounts ascertained for personal property tax for the years 1913 and 1914, but this average is not to be counted as less than 8 per cent of the capital invested.

EXEMPTIONS.

(1) Amount, $500 or less; in the case of commission agents, 10 per cent increase in income or less. (2) Kind of business: (a) The tax is imposed only on merchants and manufacturers and on commission agents; (b) those helping to advance the Italian mercantile marine enjoy a qualified exemption.

Rates of tax—	Per cent.
(1) For merchants and manufacturers:
On fraction of profits from 8 to 10 per cent on capital invested	20
On fraction of profits from 10 to 15 per cent on capital invested	30
On fraction of profits from 15 to 20 per cent on capital invested	40
On fraction of profits from 20 per cent on capital invested	60
(2) For commission agents:
On excess over 10 per cent up to 50 per cent of prewar profits	10
On excess over 50 per cent up to 100 per cent of prewar profits	15
On excess over 100 per cent up to 200 per cent of prewar profits	20
On excess over 200 per cent up to 300 per cent of prewar profits	25
On excess over 300 per cent of prewar profits	40

GERMANY.

PROPERTY INCREASE TAX.

Basis of tax: Any increase in the total value of the property of individuals between January 1, 1914, and December 31, 1916, excluding all increases due to transfer of property at death.

EXEMPTIONS.

(1) Any increase of not more than 3,000 marks ($750); (2) any increase where the total amount of the increased value of the property is not more than 10,000 marks ($2,500); (3) that portion of any increase equal to the difference between the original capital and 10,000 marks ($2,500) whenever the total amount of the increased capital is not more than 15,000 marks ($3,750).

	Tax.	Surtax.
Rate of tax:	Per cent	Per cent
On the first $2,500	5	1
On the next $2,500 or fraction thereof	10	2
On the next $2,500 or fraction thereof	15	3
On the next $5,000 or fraction thereof	20	4
On the next $12,500 or fraction thereof	25	5
On the next $25,000 or fraction thereof	30	6
On the next $50,000 or fraction thereof	35	7
On the next $75,000 or fraction thereof	40	8
On the next $75,000 or fraction thereof	45	9
On any further amount	50	10

If the increased capital of a taxable individual does not exceed $25,000 he receives an abatement.

If he has three children under 18, of one-fourth the amount of the surtax.

If he has four chidren under 18, of one-half the amount of the surtax.

If he has five children under 18, of three-fourths the amount of the surtax.

If he has more than five children under 18, the whole of the surtax.

EXCESS-PROFITS TAX (BUSINESS COMPANIES).

Basis of tax: Excess of profits of domestic and foreign companies during war trade years over prewar standards of profits; prewar standard being the average of those three of the last five prewar years arrived at by excluding the year with the largest and the year with the smallest profits, if company has existed for five years, except that it is not to be counted as less than 6 per cent on the paid-up original capital stock.

Exemptions, 5,000 marks.

Rate of tax—A. Domestic companies:

Rate of tax on excess profits.

If ratio of average annual excess profits to capital stock and reserve amounts to—	Per cent.
Not more than 2 per cent	10
More than 2 per cent, but not more than 5 per cent	15
More than 5 per cent, but not more than 10 per cent	20
More than 10 per cent, but not more than 15 per cent	25
More than 15 per cent	30

Rate of surtax percentage of principal tax.

If ratio of average annual total profits during war-trade years to capital stock and reserve amounts to—	Per cent.
More than 8 per cent, but not more than 10 per cent	10
More than 10 per cent, but not more than 15 per cent	20
More than 15 per cent, but not more than 20 per cent	30
More than 20 per cent, but not more than 25 per cent	40
More than 25 per cent	50

B. Foreign companies:

Rate of tax on profits.

If excess profits amount to—	Per cent.
Not more than $5,000	10
More than $5,000, but not more than $10,000	12
More than $10,000, but not more than $15,000	14
More than $15,000, but not more than $20,000	16
More than $20,000, but not more than $25,000	18
More than $25,000, but not more than $30,000	20
More than $30,000, but not more than $35,000	22
More than $35,000, but not more than $40,000	24
More than $40,000, but not more than $45,000	26
More than $45,000, but not more than $50,000	28
More than $50,000, but not more than $62,500	30
More than $62,500, but not more than $125,000	40
More than $125,000	45

Rate of tax on domestic and foreign companies proposed in place of above rates by the budget bill 1918–19 (Board of Trade Journal, May 23, 1918, p. 654):

If excess profits amount to—	Or (in the case of German companies whose excess profits do not exceed $25,000) if the ratio of total profits to capital stock and reserve amounts to—	Per cent.
Less than $12,500	Less than 8 per cent	30
Less than $25,000	Less than 10 per cent	36
Less than $50,000	Less than 15 per cent	42
Less than $75,000	Less than 20 per cent	48
Less than $125,000	Less than 25 per cent	54
$125,000 or more	25 per cent or more	60

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. PENROSE. Let us have the question stated, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina suggests the absence of a quorum, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Henderson	Martin, Ky.	Simmons
Bankhead	Hitchcock	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.
Beckham	Johnson, Cal.	Moses	Smith, Ga.
Borah	Johnson, S. Dak.	Myers	Smoot
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Spencer
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	New	Sterling
Dillingham	Kellogg	Norris	Sutherland
Fernald	Kendrick	Nugent	Swanson
Fletcher	Kenyon	Overman	Thomas
France	Kirby	Page	Townsend
Frelinghuysen	Knox	Penrose	Trammell
Gay	La Follette	Poindexter	Underwood
Gerry	Lenroot	Pollock	Vardaman
Gore	McCumber	Pomerene	Walsh
Gronna	McKellar	Saulsbury	Warren
Hale	McLean	Shafroth	Weeks
Harding	McNary	Sheppard	Wolcott

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], on account of illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment of the committee, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, after line 2, the committee proposes to strike out paragraphs (a) and (b), as follows:

(a) In the case of a citizen or resident of the United States 12 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 216: Provided, That upon the first $4,000 of this amount the rate shall be 6 per cent.

(b) In the case of a nonresident alien, 12 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 216.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

(a) For the calendar year 1918, 12 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 215: Provided, That in the case of a citizen or resident of the United States the rate upon the first $4,000 of such amount shall be 6 per cent.

(b) For each calendar year thereafter, 8 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 216: Provided, That in the case of a citizen or resident of the United States the rate upon the first $4,000 of such amount shall be 4 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like very well if we could vote upon subdivision (a) first, and then vote on subdivision (b) thereafter. I will ask the Senator from North Carolina if it would not be better to vote upon the whole question of the 1920 taxes at once in order to save the time of the Senate?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not see how we can do that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We may vote on one of them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah ask for a division of the question?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I should like to divide the question by first voting on subdivision (a) and then voting on subdivision (b).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This being a motion to strike out and insert, the Chair does not think that can be done.

Mr. SMOOT. I was afraid it would not be in order, but simply asked the question as to whether or not it would be allowed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to ask if it would not be perfectly proper to move to amend the Senate committee amendment by striking out subdivision (b)?

Mr. SIMMONS. That would be the best way to reach it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that would be a proper amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out paragraph (b) commencing on line 15.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter proposed to be stricken out by the Senator from North Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, it is proposed to strike out paragraph (b) of the committee amendment, as follows:

(b) For each calendar year thereafter, 8 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 216: Provided, That in the case of a citizen or resident of the United States the rate upon the first $4,000 of such amount shall be 4 per cent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, those who are in favor of the committee amendment will vote "nay," and those opposed to it will vote "yea."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina has correctly stated the proposition.

Mr. SMOOT and Mr. TOWNSEND called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CURTIS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] to the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], and vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is absent. Therefore I will withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. He has released me on this and all other votes on this bill. Therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. GERRY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). As I announced awhile ago, I have a pair with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], and vote "nay."

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. I ask if he has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He has not voted.

Mr. KNOX. Then I will withhold my vote.

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], which I transfer to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BAIRD], and will vote. I vote "yea."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (when Mr. SAULSBURY's name was called). On this particular question my general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] is binding. If present he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. If he were present he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. STERLING. I transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] on account of illness in his family. He is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON]. If the Senator from Illinois were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. BAIRD] on account of illness. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. KNOX. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. McKELLAR. The senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is detained from the Senate on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "nay." He is paired with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE].

Mr. REED. In view of the transfer arrangement just announced by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], I am at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. GAY. The senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] is detained on official business. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS]; and

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS].

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—31.

Borah	Johnson, Cal.	McLean	Poindexter
Curtis	Kellogg	McNary	Smoot
Fernald	Kenyon	Moses	Spencer
France	Knox	Nelson	Sterling
Frelinghuysen	La Follette	New	Sutherland
Gronna	Lenroot	Norris	Warren
Hale	Lodge	Page	Weeks
Harding	McCumber	Penrose

NAYS—37.

Ashurst	Johnson, S. Dak.	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Jones, N. Mex.	Phelan	Swanson
Beckham	Kendrick	Pittman	Thomas
Culberson	King	Pollock	Trammell
Fletcher	Kirby	Pomerene	Underwood
Gay	McKellar	Reed	Vardaman
Gerry	Martin, Ky.	Shafroth	Walsh
Gore	Martin, Va.	Sheppard
Henderson	Myers	Simmons
Hitchcock	Nugent	Smith, Ariz.

NOT VOTING—28.

Baird	Fall	Ransdell	Smith, S. C.
Brandegee	Goff	Robinson	Thompson
Calder	Hardwick	Saulsbury	Townsend
Chamberlain	Hollis	Sherman	Wadsworth
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Shields	Watson
Cummins	Lewis	Smith, Md.	Williams
Dillingham	Owen	Smith, Mich	Wolcott

So Mr. McCUMBER's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I ask that the Secretary may now read the next amendment involving the 1920 provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator direct the Secretary's attention to the page and line?

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall have to go through the bill very carefully in order to do that.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment is on page 49, Mr. President.

The SECRETARY. The amendment on page 49 begins on page 47, line 23, where the committee proposes to strike out paragraph (a), paragraph (b), and everything down to and including line 24 on page 48, and to insert:

(1) For the calendar year 1918, 12 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 236; and

(2) For each calendar year thereafter, 8 per cent of such amount.

(b) For the purposes of the act approved March 21, 1918, entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners and for other purposes," five-sixths of the tax imposed by paragraph (1) of subdivision (a) and three-fourths of the tax imposed by paragraph (2) of subdivision (a) shall be treated as levied by an act in amendment of Title I of the revenue act of 1917.

Mr. PENROSE. In order to bring the question before the Senate, I move to strike out paragraph 2.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if he thinks it is necessary to have a yea-and-nay vote on all these amendments?

Mr. PENROSE. No; I do not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania proposes an amendment to the committee amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out paragraph 2, or the following, on page 49, line 4:

(2) For each calendar year thereafter, 8 per cent of such amount.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. The next amendment is on page 84.

The SECRETARY. On page 84, in the third bracket, the committee amendment is to strike out and insert; but all of the amendment has been agreed to except subdivision (b), on page 84, which reads as follows:

(b) For the taxable year 1919 and each taxable year thereafter there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the net income of every corporation a tax equal to the sum of the following.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I move to strike out paragraph (b).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I should like to have the Secretary state the amendment which I offered on yesterday to paragraph (b), the paragraph which has just been read. I will state that quite a number of Senators are present to-day who were not here on yesterday when I discussed this proposed amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was simply going to suggest to the Senator that we have just rejected an amendment to the amendment of the committee. Now, the Senator is going to propose a substitute, as I understand.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Not at all. My amendment is an amendment to the committee amendment. It begins on line 21, page 84; and I will state just what the amendment is. On page 84, line 21, I move to strike out, after the word "to," through line 3 on page 85. By the way, the amendment as printed has the word "or" in it instead of "on." I ask leave to make that amendment in the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has that right.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. On pages 84 and 85, I move to strike out the matter just indicated and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Seventy per cent on the amount of the net income in excess of the war-profits credit as determined under section 313.

The Senators will observe that the provision, as reported by the committee, simply takes the exemption of the present bill as applied to the year 1918 and reduces the percentage of the tax upon that exemption. The war-profits tax for the year 1919 has been eliminated from the bill by the committee under its proposed amendment, so as to leave in the bill for the calendar year 1919 the excess-profits tax. That excess-profits provision simply provides for an exemption of 8 per cent upon the invested capital, as defined in the bill. It gives precisely the same exemption from the excess-profits tax to one concern in the country as it does to all. It makes no distinction between the safe and stable businesses of the country and the hazardous businesses of the country. It carries only this language, "an exemption of 8 per cent upon the invested capital." As I stated on yesterday, if this provision is adopted, it will be an absolute embargo upon any new enterprises of a hazardous nature. It will prevent the development and progress of the country; and at this time, when we are facing the reconstruction period, instead of deterring business we ought to encourage it.

The Secretary of the Treasury has recommended to the committee that we levy no excess-profits tax for next year. I am not willing to go quite to that extent; but I do believe that there is a happy compromise which can be very well substituted, and take a middle ground between the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury and the recommendations of the Finance Committee, and I believe it to be absolutely fair. It will raise precisely the same amount of revenue for the Treasury. It will not discourage any business in this country. It will give to all the businesses in this country for the next calendar year precisely the same exemption, equal to the same profits which all the enterprises of the country made prior to the war.

It exempts from any excess-profits tax the profits which the businesses of this country were making prior to the war, but not in excess of 20 per cent on the invested capital. If we do that, it means that we can raise as much revenue as is proposed to be raised by this committee amendment. If we can do it in a way which will not injure any business, why should it not be done?

Therefore I offer this provision as an amendment to the committee amendment. I sincerely trust that Senators will consider it seriously. This amendment of mine will not discourage any enterprise. The country was prosperous before the war. This amendment permits the same degree of prosperity after the war.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I do.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to ask the Senator what effect this is going to have upon the mining industries of the West, the development of new mines?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will state to the Senator from Colorado that I do not believe there will be a dollar going into a new mining industry in this country during the year 1919 if this committee amendment is adopted; but if you adopt my amendment, it will allow to the mining industry and to the new mining industry the same percentage of exemption from an excess-profits tax which the representative concerns of the country earned prior to the war; and if they developed mining industries prior to the war, under this amendment of mine they will do it again. But if you adopt the amendment proposed by the Senate committee and allow to a mining industry an exemption of only 8 per cent upon its invested capital, and tax its earnings above that amount, you will not get another dollar into the mines of the country. You will not get another dollar into the stock interests of the country. You will not get a dollar into any new industry, any untried industry; but you will have plenty of dollars for the old, stable industries of the country. You will have dollars to go into the preferred stocks of the country, but you will destroy any incentive, any initiative, for capital to go into a new concern or develop a new enterprise. So I say to the Senators, you are assuming a great responsibility in supporting the amendment proposed by the committee.

The Secretary of the Treasury said to us that, in his opinion and in the opinion of the President, we ought to put no excess-profits tax on business after the war; but there is a sentiment in the country that there ought to be some sort of a tax on high profits, and in my amendment I put the tax on profits above 20 per cent, whether earned before the war or after. That, however, is the only limitation. As between 6 per cent and 20 per cent, all classes of business may earn and hold, exempt from this tax, precisely the same amount of earnings that they made before the war. The country was prosperous then. We have reason to believe that if they are permitted to go on in that way the country will be prosperous after the war; but, I beg of you, do not put this tax on the business of the country, which would be an absolute burden upon any business of a hazardous nature. It gives an absolute exemption to all of the old, steady, heavily capitalized industries of the country. They will not pay any tax under this committee provision, but the new industries, the hazardous industries, will bear the entire burden; and it is those industries that you want to encourage instead of destroying them.

Therefore I propose this amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, if the Senator is right in the statement he makes that the excess-profits tax will allow a heavy profit to be made by the old industries of the country and will not tax them adequately as to the provisions of the 1920 section of the bill, then the excess-profits tax that we have imposed in the bill for 1918 will have the same effect.

Mr. President, if there was anything that was thoroughly worked out in a spirit of generosity toward the industry concerned, it was the sections of the bill that apply to mines and mining and timberlands and gas wells, and all that sort of thing. There were on the committee three or four members who represented States in which those industries constitute a large part of the business of the people. They asked and demanded various and sundry relief provisions. We granted to them substantially everything that they asked us to grant them. We provided, in the case of a mine, that if there was a sale it should pay a tax of not more than 20 per cent upon the sale price. We provided an amortization provision for mines that were operated, which allowed them to amortize to the full extent of the original cost of the mine and its development.

This question was thoroughly thrashed out in the committee. The Senator from New Mexico presented his views there as fully as he has presented them here to-day and on yesterday, and the committee decided against his contention. If the amendment of the Senator should be adopted, we would have to rewrite many of the most important sections of this bill.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. It would have to go back to the committee in order that we might adjust the other sections of the bill to the changes made here.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I ask the Senator to state any important provision of this bill which would have to be changed if this amendment were adopted.

Mr. SIMMONS. Rather than undertake to go into that argument, I would prefer to withdraw the statement. That is my judgment about it—that we would have to consider very seriously the effect of this change upon the other sections of the bill. Especially, Mr. President, we would have to consider very seriously its effect upon the revenues of the Government.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I will simply state, if the Senator will permit me, two facts: First, my amendment relates only to the excess-profits tax for the year 1919, and no other important provision of the bill will have to be amended at all. Secondly, the experts of the Treasury say that the amendment which I propose will produce precisely the same amount of revenue as the scheme proposed by the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator's amendment is in effect a war excess-profits tax. It proposes to substitute for the excess-profits tax proposed by the committee for 1920, with the low rates of 20 and 40 per cent, a war-profits tax of 70 per cent, with an exemption as high as 20 per cent. So, when you go to analyze it, the proposition means nothing more than to substitute for a low excess-profits tax a war-profits tax with a high exemption and a high rate.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I want to say just a word in reply to what the Senator from North Carolina has said.

His scheme makes a low exemption, or reduces the exemption, and imposes a low tax. My scheme makes a high exemption and imposes a high rate of tax; but my scheme has the exemption balanced by the experience of the business prior to the war. He talks about this being called a war-profits tax. It is that, and the war is still here; and the purpose of this amendment is to catch the hang-over profits from the war and to help pay the war debt.

The Senator speaks about the remedial provisions of the bill with reference to amortization and the limtation of the tax upon sales in the case of mines. That is true. They are the most important provisions in the bill. Those provisions simply seek to put that particular class of business upon the same plane as other business, which is not done in the existing law. It is only intended to equalize the mining business with other busness in that respect.

It comes down to the question of an excess-profits tax. Are you going to put the same rate of tax upon the earnings of a mining company after allowing it 8 per cent exemption that you are going to put on the Chemical National Bank after allowing it 8 per cent? The Chemical National Bank never earned 8 per cent and never tried to do so on its invested capital and accumulated surplus. Take the other stabilized industries of this country, which have their preferred stocks outstanding at a low rate of dividends; take any of those old, safe investments, and they do not expect to earn much over 8 per cent. Therefore they pay none of this excess-profits tax; but with that 8 per cent exemption you are putting that excess-profits tax upon the brain and energy of this country where a new business is started in this country, depending upon brains to build up the business in order that the new business may compete with the old, stabilized concerns which are highly capitalized through the building up of surplus during past years, through watered stock, and that sort of thing. They are highly capitalized, and do not expect to make a high percentage of income upon their capital. Are you going to encourage the new and vigorous rising competitors, that they may grow and increase their business and develop the country?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] to the amendment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GERRY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], I withhold my vote.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] and withhold my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (when Mr. SAULSBURY's name was called). My general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] does not apply to this vote. I therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], I withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). Announcing my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I am advised that the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], with whom I have a general pair, will vote the same way I intend to vote. I will therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], who has not voted. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON];

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS]; and

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 44, as follows:

YEAS—15.

Ashurst	Johnson, S. Dak.	McNary	Shafroth
Fletcher	Jones, N. Mex.	Myers	Sheppard
Henderson	Kendrick	Phelan	Thomas
Johnson, Cal.	King	Pittman

NAYS—44.

Bankhead	Kellogg	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Kenyon	New	Smoot
Curtis	Kirby	Nugent	Spencer
France	La Follette	Overman	Sutherland
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Page	Swanson
Gay	Lodge	Penrose	Trammell
Gerry	McCumber	Poindexter	Underwood
Gronna	McKellar	Pollock	Vardaman
Hale	Martin, Ky.	Pomerene	Warren
Harding	Martin, Va.	Saulsbury	Weeks
Hitchcock	Moses	Simmons	Wolcott

NOT VOTING—37.

Baird	Fernald	Owen	Sterling
Borah	Goff	Ransdell	Thompson
Brandegee	Gore	Reed	Townsend
Calder	Hardwick	Robinson	Wadsworth
Chamberlain	Hollis	Sherman	Walsh
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Shields	Watson
Culberson	Knox	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Cummins	Lewis	Smith, Md.
Dillingham	McLean	Smith, Mich.
Fall	Norris	Smith, S. C.

So the amendment of Mr. JONES of New Mexico to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 85——

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Secretary if, on page 67, subdivision (b), paragraph 2 was passed over? It is on the same subject, but it is not marked in my copy of the bill as having been passed over. I refer to lines 16 and 17, on that page.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that it was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. It is on the same subject matter. The next amendment passed over is on page 85.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The SECRETARY. On page 85 the committee proposes, in line 16, after the word "That," at the beginning of section 302, to strike out all down to and including the numerals "$50,000," in line 25, and to insert——

Mr. SMOOT. It has been read once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Page 105 is the next.

The SECRETARY. On page 105, section 335 was passed over. In line 7, after the words "sum of" and the colon, the committee proposes to strike out the remainder of the paragraph, all down to and including the word "income," in line 16, and to insert——

Mr. SMOOT. That has been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has already been read. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 107, at the foot of the page, Title IV—Estate tax——

Mr. SIMMONS. I am advised, although I have not had time to verify it, that the sections relating to the deduction of taxes for 1919 and 1920 have now been acted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Everything has been disposed of down to "Estate tax," on page 107.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I am exceedingly anxious, and I think everyone else is, to have the bill finally put upon its passage on Monday. In order to do that, it will be necessary for us to meet very early on Monday, and we may have to hold a night session.

I move that the Senate take a recess until 10 o'clock on Monday.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, December 23, 1918, at 10 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 21, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Rev. Earle Wilfley, of the Vermont Avenue Christian Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, we ask Thee to accept our thanksgiving for what of gladness may fill our hearts this morning. We thank Thee for the approach to the holiday season, and as we come to this time of the year when we are thinking of those dear to us may we also think in kindness and love of all the suffering and needy ones of earth. O Lord, temper our thinking, our speaking, and our doing with the spirit of this holiday season. God, grant Thy blessing, therefore, upon to-day's doings, upon those things that enter into our lives, and upon us as we strive to do Thy will. For Thy Name's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, December 19, 1918, was read and approved.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors I report herewith the river and harbor appropriation bill, with the report (No. 878) of the committee. I understand that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR] desires to file a minority report. Is he present?

Mr. FREAR. That is correct.

Mr. SMALL. The gentleman has that report now?

Mr. FREAR. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. And that the minority report of the gentleman from Wisconsin be also filed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL], by direction of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, files the river and harbor appropriation bill, together with the report of the majority and the minority report filed by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from Pennsylvania reserve all points of order on the bill.

Mr. MANN. Has the bill been reported?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. R. 13462. A bill making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The bill, with the accompanying report, is ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman what his intention is with regard to the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill?

Mr. SMALL. It is the present intention to call up the bill on Monday. There may be some short bills which by agreement may precede the consideration of the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But the gentleman does not intend to proceed any further than general debate until after the holiday recess?

Mr. SMALL. Can the gentleman tell whether we will be in session on Tuesday or not?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] may be able to give us some information about that.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I have stated to the House twice that our intention is to work on Monday and Tuesday, and when we adjourn on Tuesday to adjourn over until Friday, with the understanding that we will adjourn from Friday until the following Monday; that nothing will be done from Tuesday until Monday.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The purpose of my question is to ascertain whether it is expected there will be a vote on the river and harbor bill on Tuesday.

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, no. I do not think it possible to conclude more than general debate for the recess.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Speaker, I do not think there will be any objection to the general debate, but it seems to me we ought not to read the items and attempt to discuss them unless a reasonably full House is present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] to include in his statement the request for printing the minority report of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Mr. SMALL. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from North Carolina yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think there is any probability of proceeding with business in the House before New Year's Day?

Mr. KITCHIN. I doubt very much whether we will have a sufficient number here to proceed very seriously, but that will take care of itself when we adjourn next week.

Mr. MANN. The question is really whether we shall punish some of the Members who may stay here for the reason that they want to be here if business is to be transacted, so that they will not go home, and then when the time comes not be able to transact any business because no one will be here.

Mr. KITCHIN. If it is satisfactory to the House, we shall have an understanding now, that when we adjourn from Tuesday, say, we will adjourn until Friday, and from Friday to Monday, and that on Monday we can then adjourn until Thursday.

Mr. MANN. I think that will be the wisest course, because my judgment, based on observation of the past, would be that the House would not be prepared to consider the river and harbor bill by items on Monday, preceding New Year's Day, or in the holiday week, unless we proceed all of next week; but having vacation for practically six days, a great many Members will go away. I doubt whether it is desirable to punish those who do come back by getting them to come back, when it is certain that we will not do anything.

Mr. KITCHIN. Of course, there is no desire to punish anyone, but in the arrangement some one might be punished. Whatever is done will have to be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; it could be done by announcement. When the gentleman from North Carolina makes an announcement, that would settle the matter.

Mr. KITCHIN. Then I will make this announcement.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Before the gentleman makes the announcement, will he yield for another suggestion?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Was there not some report from the Committee on Elections that was to come up?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is on January 3. I make this announcement, that I shall ask unanimous consent on Tuesday that when we adjourn we adjourn over until the following Friday, with the understanding that nothing will be done on Friday except to go over until the following Monday, and then on Monday I shall ask unanimous consent to go until the following Thursday.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That takes you until what date?

Mr. KITCHIN. Thursday, because there is already one matter set for January 3, an election contest.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman from North Carolina satisfied that we will have a quorum here on Tuesday to take up the river and harbor bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. I just want to say with respect to the river and harbor bill, we will have general debate on Monday, and if the chairman of the committee would prefer that on Tuesday we do not take up the bill but adjourn from Monday after general debate, instead of on Tuesday, until Thursday, and then until Monday and until Thursday, we would be able to do that.

Mr. TOWNER. With the understanding that on Thursday as on Monday there will be no business transacted.

Mr. FOSTER. No; I do not agree to that.

Mr. TOWNER. The statement was made by the Speaker a short time ago.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman means the day after Christmas?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all right.

Mr. KITCHIN. The only thing I can say is that I will ask unanimous consent on those days to adjourn over.

Mr. MANN. I think it is perfectly safe to say that probably there will be no quorum here and the House will be protected in the absence of a quorum if any person should object to adjourning over. I am not going home.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the gentleman will yield, the statement the gentleman has already made indicated that there will be a gentleman's agreement for an adjournment of three days at a time until Thursday, January 2?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. It is a question of adjourning Monday or Tuesday, and I would ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL] as to his committee's desire to go on on Tuesday?

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, it is the desire of the committee, if possible, to conclude general debate before the Christmas recess. On this side there are requests for time which in the aggregate only amount to about an hour. I have not conferred with Mr. KENNEDY, the ranking minority member of the committee; he does not seem to be in the Hall, but it is the desire to conclude general debate.

Mr. MANN. I think there will be no trouble in concluding general debate on Monday or Tuesday with the understanding we are not to proceed with the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule before the holidays.

Mr. SMALL. Not until Thursday, January 2; that is satisfactory.

Mr. KITCHIN. We will adjourn over when we finish general debate——

Mr. MANN. Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. KITCHIN. When we finish general debate, whether it is Monday or Tuesday, I shall ask unanimous consent to adjourn over three days at a time until after January 2, with the understanding that nothing will be done except the reading of the Journal and a motion made to adjourn.

Mr. MANN. Why not, if it is possible to make an agreement, ask for it now?

Mr. KITCHIN. The only thing I could do under existing circumstances is to make this request, and I think the House will give unanimous consent.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield for a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. I simply wanted to inquire of the gentleman from North Carolina about a bill known as the contract bill, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, which I understand is to come up on Monday——

Mr. KITCHIN. On Monday morning.

Mr. DUPRÉ. And will have precedence over the river and harbor bill.

Mr. McKENZIE. That is very important.

Mr. KITCHIN. The River and Harbor Committee will yield, I understand, to the gentleman from Alabama, chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, to ask unanimous consent to consider that bill.

Mr. MANN. It can only come up by unanimous consent.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; and it will also yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE] to ask unanimous consent to consider his charter bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to know whether the gentleman means we shall quit after general debate on the river and harbor bill, without commencing the reading of the bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am frank to say that there ought to be a quorum here if we are to begin the reading of the bill on Tuesday, but I understand from the gentleman there is to be nothing but general debate?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is all.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. FESS. Could not we arrange this discontinuance on Monday, as there are some of us who would like to be home on Christmas eve?

Mr. KITCHIN. There will not be anything but general debate. We have agreed to that, on the river and harbor bill. After the general debate is concluded, I shall ask unanimous consent to adjourn over.

Mr. FESS. Those of us who desire to go home would like to be home on Tuesday evening.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think the gentleman would be perfectly safe in going home Monday night.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois, indefinitely, on account of important business.

EULOGIES ON SENATOR GALLINGER.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Sunday, January 19, 1919, be set aside for addresses on the life, character, and public services of Hon. JACOB H. GALLINGER, late United States Senator from the State of New Hampshire.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, eulogies on Mr. STERLING of Illinois have been set for that day.

The SPEAKER. There are so many they will have to be doubled up if we are going to have them on Sunday.

Mr. KITCHIN. I did not understand the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I asked unanimous consent for the making of addresses on Senator GALLINGER's life and public services for the 19th of January.

Mr. KITCHIN. There is no objection to that.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I understand now the gentleman from New Jersey says that that date has been set aside for another purpose. I will therefore modify the request and make it January 26.

The SPEAKER. There is one set aside for that date—Senator BROUSSARD.

Mr. MANN. It does not make any difference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated a moment ago there are so many eulogies we will have to double up and have two at a time.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Then, I will renew my request for the 19th, as originally stated.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that Sunday, January 19, be set apart for memorializing Senator GALLINGER at the same time the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING] is memorialized. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the postal telegraph.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the question of the postal telegraph. Is there objection?

Mr. KITCHIN. Reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman will withdraw that and wait until Monday, because several gentlemen have asked for the same thing, and I have asked them to wait until that time.

Mr. STEENERSON. All right.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 21 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, December 23, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting items to be included in the sundry civil bill for the fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 1610), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. GRIFFIN, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13026) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanitarium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers and sailors, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 879), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SMALL: A bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

By Mr. CRAMTON: A bill (H. R. 13463) to amend section 3 of public act No. 106 of the Sixty-fifth Congress, entitled "An act to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States," approved March 19, 1918; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. DENT (by request): A bill (H. R. 13464) to amend the medals of honor, distinguished-service crosses, and distinguished-service medals provisions of the Army appropriation act, approved July 9, 1918; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13465) to create in the Army of the United States a corps to be known as the Corps of Chaplains; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BANKHEAD: A bill (H. R. 13466) making certain items of appropriation contained in section 8 of the vocational rehabilitation act, approved June 27, 1918, available for additional purposes and construing the term "family allowance," as contained in section 2 thereof; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. DENT (by request): A bill (H. R. 13467) fixing the rank, pay, and allowances of chaplains in the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WHITE of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 13468) to provide an extension to the post office at Zanesville, Ohio; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. CRAMTON: A bill (H. R. 13469) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent in fee simple to the county of Huron, in the State of Michigan, for a certain described tract of land for public park purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BURROUGHS: A bill (H. R. 13470) for the relief of John Chick; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CARAWAY: A bill (H. R. 13471) granting a pension to Thomas W. Breckenridge; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COX: A bill (H. R. 13472) granting a pension to Luther Sloan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13473) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Eberts; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13474) granting a pension to Ella May Sloan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DENTON: A bill (H. R. 13475) granting a pension to Greenup T. Berlin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: A bill (H. R. 13476) granting a pension to George Polleti; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MONTAGUE: A bill (H. R. 13477) granting an increase of pension to Young W. Cordell; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ROUSE: A bill (H. R. 13478) granting an increase of pension to William Boone; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHITE of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 13479) granting a pension to Rhoda E. Pryor; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. CURRIE of Michigan: Petition of R. A. Elias, William E. Strong, Nelson Dow Griswold, Herbert S. Beckwith, Ronald P. Lowry, and W. A. Robinson, jr.,. amateur wireless operators, protesting against House bill 13159, which provides for the taking over of all radio stations; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island: Resolution of board of aldermen of the city of Newport, R. I., protesting abandonment of work on housing proposition at Newport, R. I.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: Resolution of the Baptist Ministers' Conference of Baltimore and vicinity, urging a league of nations; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. RAKER: Brief of Dr. Wilson Compton, relative to the definition of "Invested capital" as applying to the pending revenue bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of California White and Sugar Pine Manufacturers' Association, relative to capital, surplus, and undivided profits in the revenue bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: Petition of H. A. Stafford, president of the Brotherhood Railway Clerks, Lodge No. 338, Kalamazoo, Mich., favoring the retention of William G. McAdoo for Railroad Director; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. VARE: Petition of residents of Philadelphia, protesting against the enactment of legislation restricting the use of wireless apparatus; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, memorial of Philadelphia Maritime Exchange, indorsing resolutions adopted by the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, resolutions of Pennsylvania Branch of Women's Peace Party of Philadelphia, discussing terms of peace; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of Logan Iron & Steel Co., Philadelphia, protesting against the enactment of legislation looking to the adoption of the metric system; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 23, 1918.

(Legislative day of Sunday, December 15, 1918.)

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, S. Dak.	Penrose	Spencer
Chamberlain	Jones, Wash.	Pollock	Sterling
Cummins	Kenyon	Saulsbury	Thomas
Dillingham	Knox	Shafroth	Vardaman
Gerry	Lenroot	Sheppard	Warren
Gronna	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Williams
Hale	Nugent	Smith, Ariz.
Henderson	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Johnson, Cal.	Page	Smoot

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is necessarily absent temporarily on very important business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. NELSON, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. TRAMMELL, and Mr. WEEKS answered to their names when called.

Mr. KELLOGG, Mr. NEW, Mr. NORRIS, Mr. FRANCE, Mr. CURTIS, Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. KIRBY, Mr. UNDERWOOD, Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. KING, Mr. WATSON, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. SUTHERLAND, Mr. HARDING, and Mr. POMERENE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], is detained by illness.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] are detained on official business.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] is detained at home by illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to the roll roll. There is a quorum present.

CABLE SERVICE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster General in response to a resolution of the 10th instant, which will be inserted in the RECORD and lie on the table.

The communication is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., December 23, 1918.

The SECRETARY UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of Senate resolution No. 376, adopted December 10, 1918, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the Senate, if not inconsistent with the public service, whether information can be promptly asked for and received by cable, at the request of the immediate relatives of any officer or soldier in the overseas service of the country, where no word has been received from such officers and soldiers for more than six weeks, as to whether such officer or soldier was, on November 11, 1918, dead or alive."

In reply I have to advise the Senate that all cablegrams have been dispatched as addressed by the cable companies, and while there has been considerable congestion in the cable service, at no time has the delay, so far as the cables are concerned, extended beyond a few days.

The operation of the cables is now under Government control and has been placed under a single managing head in order to coordinate them and relieve such congestion with the hope that the coordination of cables will materially remove the delay. The Navy Department through the radio service is cooperating with this department and relieving the cables of large numbers of Government messages. Steps have also been taken to remove the bar against private code messages which, when accomplished, will still further relieve the load on the cables.

The condition recited in the joint resolution does not seem to be in any way related to such congestion as has heretofore existed with relation to the cable service. I am informed by the cable companies that many inquiries of the nature covered by the resolution have been sent to France but that only a small percentage of them have been answered. The cable companies have no definite information as to the reason for this, but report that in their opinion it is due to the fact that the parents and friends who send such messages are not advised as to whom the inquiries should be addressed or the whereabouts of the person addressed. It is also manifest that with the rapid movement of troops, the many casualties, and the different locations of hospitals in various sections of France and England to which the wounded were sent, it would be impossible in many cases to obtain the information which is so earnestly desired by friends and relatives of the soldiers. The War Department, however, would probably be able to furnish more specific information as to the difficulties encountered in delivering cablegrams of this character. Neither the cable companies nor the Postal Service is in a position to speak with respect to matters growing out of military operations.

Respectfully, yours,

A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 372) to amend Senate joint resolution No. 78, approved October 5, 1917, entitled "Joint resolution to suspend requirements of the annual assessment work on mining claims during the years 1917 and 1918," in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 12916. An act to provide for the temporary promotion of commissioned officers of the Marine Corps serving with the Army; and

H. R. 12945. An act providing for the purchase of uniforms, accouterments, and equipment by officers of the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, and midshipmen at the Naval Academy from the Government at cost.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 650, Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, of Durand, Mich., and a petition of Mackinaw Lodge, No. 996, Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, of Marshall, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation extending the time of Government control of railroads, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of sundry school-teachers of Northville, of sundry citizens of Allegan, of the Woman's Club of Saginaw, of the teachers of the high school of Grand Rapids, of sundry teachers of Republic, of the school board of Republic, and of the principals of the high schools of Lansing, praying for the establishment of a department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of sundry citizens of Boston, Mass., praying for the immediate withdrawal of American troops from Russia, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the War Service Committee of the Fur Industry of the United States, favoring the elimination of the proposed tax on furs, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Joseph Plunkett Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom, of Brighton, Mass., favoring the freedom of Ireland, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the congregation of the First Parish Church of Cambridge, Mass., and resolutions adopted at a mass meeting of sundry citizens of Cambridge, Mass., favoring the creation of a league of nations for the maintenance of peace, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the United Irish Societies of Lowell, Mass., and resolutions adopted by Local Division No. 18, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of North Brookfield, Mass., favoring the freedom of Ireland, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of members of the Local Board of Albany County, Wyo., praying for Government recognition of the work of the local boards in raising the National Army, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

COST OF WAR WITH GERMANY AND AUSTRIA.

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 395), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretaries and heads of the several executive departments, as well as the heads of all separate bureaus, commissions, boards, or similar bodies authorized to expend the public funds for war purposes be, and they are hereby, directed to furnish the Senate at an early practicable date full information and figures relative to the cost of the war with Germany and Austria, as shown (1) by the expenditures already made by their several departments; (2) by the sums already obligated by their several departments to be hereafter paid; (3) any other costs of the war, such as the cost of transportation of our soldiers back home and their demobilization, or any other extraordinary expenses traceable to the war.

Resolved further, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish, in addition to the cost of the war in his department, an epitome of the cost of the war in the various other departments to the extent which it is shown by his books, together with the totals, thus giving the complete cost of the war, as far as his books show it.

SENATOR FROM WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. POMERENE. I am directed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to report a resolution to reimburse the Senator from the State of West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] for expenses incurred by him in defense of his title to his seat in the Senate, and I submit a report (No. 628) thereon. I ask that the resolution be read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 394) was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Hon. HOWARD SUTHERLAND, a Senator from the State of West Virginia, the sum of $2,435 in reimbursement of expenses necessarily incurred by him in defense of his title to his seat in the Senate, said sum to be considered as a full and final settlement of all expenses, including counsel fees, incurred by him in connection with the said contest.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that this matter be disposed of at once. I think the Committee on Contingent Expenses is ready to report.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico subsequently, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the foregoing resolution, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

PROMOTIONS IN OVERSEAS SERVICE.

Mr. McKELLAR. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate resolution 359, requesting the Secretary of War to furnish the Senate full information in reference to promotions in overseas service, and also of officers who have not seen overseas service, and so forth, and I submit a report (No. 629) thereon.

I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution. It is very short, and is of the same general nature as the resolution submitted by me a few minutes ago and which was adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, requested and directed to furnish to the Senate full information in reference to promotions in overseas service.

Also, full information as to promotions already made of officers who have not seen overseas service.

Also, any plans he may have of equalizing promotions, to the end that those who have become entitled to promotions by reason of service abroad or at home shall be accorded such promotion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not prepared to allow that resolution to be agreed to just now without question. At some later time I may not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The resolution will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred, as follows:

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 5220) donating captured cannon and cannon balls to the city of Santa Anna, Tex.;

A bill (S. 5221) donating captured cannon and cannon balls to the city of Galveston, Tex.; and

A bill (S. 5222) granting honorably discharged members of the armed forces of the United States during war with Germany one month's furlough on full pay, transportation and subsistence expenses to their homes, and permission to keep and wear uniforms; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 5223) for the relief of the Alabama and Coushatta Indians in Polk County, Tex.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 5224) to prohibit intoxicating liquors and prostitution within the Canal Zone, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Philippines.

By Mr. FERNALD:

A bill (S. 5225) granting a pension to Sarah F. Robinson; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 5226) for the relief of Daniel W. Booth, alias Daniel Frantz; and

A bill (S. 5227) for the relief of Edward H. Lockwood; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 5228) for an addition to Rocky Mountain National Park, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 5229) granting a pension to Elizabeth Crossley;

A bill (S. 5230) granting an increase of pension to Mary H. Doherty;

A bill (S. 5231) granting a pension to Alice B. Elliott; and

A bill (S. 5232) granting an increase of pension to George C. Hazeltine; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 5233) granting a pension to Annie Tullis (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HENDERSON (by request):

A bill (S. 5234) to supplement an act of Congress approved October 5, 1918 (Public, 220), and to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, from the funds appropriated by said act, to determine, adjust, and pay losses sustained by investments preparatory to production of war minerals mentioned in said act; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. HALE (for Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN):

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 201) relative to the payment of claims occasioned by or attributable to explosions at the plant of the T. A. Gillespie Loading Co. at Morgan, N. J., on or about October 4 and 5, 1918; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENT TO DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,000 to aid the Columbia Polytechnic Institute for the Blind in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC INFORMATION.

Mr. MOSES. I submit a resolution and ask that it be read and lie upon the table.

The resolution (S. Res. 396) was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Information be requested to supply the United States Senate with copies of all matter filed in Europe by the committee or any of its agents since December 3, 1918, for cable or telegraphic transmission to the United States or to any neutral or allied country.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 397) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That until the military, naval, and civil forces of the United States have been reduced to the normal requirements of the Government the respective heads of the executive departments, including also the United States Shipping Board, the Food Administration, and the Fuel Administration, be, and are hereby, directed to report to the Senate, beginning January 1, 1919, and every two weeks thereafter during the present session of Congress, the number of civil employees in their respective departments and the number discharged during the previous two weeks.

In addition to the above the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are directed to report each two weeks, beginning January 1, 1919, the number of officers and enlisted men in active service in their respective departments and the number discharged or retired during the previous two weeks.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not see the immediate necessity of that resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi permit me to explain? The resolution is simply for the purpose of securing information so that the Senate may know how fast the civil employees are being discharged.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the Senator wants the information every two weeks, and that would embarrass the department with an unnecessary amount of work.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is no work involved. We simply ask for the numbers; it is mere clerical information that is sought. I consulted the chairman of the committee before offering the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is that all it asks for—the number?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I shall not object.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

RELIEF OF PORTO RICAN SUFFERERS.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I move that House joint resolution 345, Calendar No. 553, to provide relief for sufferers from earthquakes occurring in Porto Rico during the month of October, 1918, be recommitted to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico. I will state the reason is that the committee desire to have hearings from some residents of Porto Rico who are in Washington, and we hope to hear them while the Senate is practically in recess.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Delaware.

The motion was agreed to.

AERIAL MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], who is detained at home by illness, I ask that a letter addressed to that Senator from the Second Assistant Postmaster General in regard to equipment for the aerial mail service be received and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs in connection with some matter which was submitted by the Senator from Illinois a few days ago.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS FOR PEACE.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD a statement by the famous French writer, M. André Chéradame upon the subject of a league of nations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho? There being none, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

PREMATURE DISCUSSION OF LEAGUE OF NATIONS IMPERILS PEACE—QUESTIONS OF IMMEDIATE PRACTICAL IMPORTANCE MUST BE SETTLED BEFORE THE PROBLEM OF CONFEDERATION IS TAKEN UP.

[By André Chéradame.]

I propose to demonstrate:

1. The success of the peace conference—hence real and definitive victory—depends in a very large measure on the order in which the different problems to be considered are taken up.

2. The discussion of the league of nations and of the "freedom of the seas" can have most unfortunate consequences if it does not come in its logical order; that is, if it is premature.

The establishment of a specific program of discussion for the conference is necessary for two principal reasons:

In the first place, it is evident that all questions can not be treated at the same time. Second, there are certain problems that can be resolved only after others apparently unconnected with them have been dealt with.

At an epoch when time is so precious, in order to end sufferings so long endured, it is obviously dangerous to engage in the discussion of unsolvable problems because it has not been foreseen that their solution depends on other and more urgent problems. As that perilous road seems to have been already entered upon, it is time for public opinion to realize the danger in order that its influence may prevent a catastrophe.

THEORIES AND THEIR APPLICATION.

To understand the subtle but very real peril before which we stand it is necessary first to grasp a very simple truth, which has, nevertheless, not been made sufficiently plain to the public: A theory, however good, is not necessarily practical.

There are theories whose justice can not be contested, but the mere attempt to put them in practice leads to a veritable catastrophe. For example, the theories that ruled The Hague conference, put forward by the Czar Nicholas II, were just, but, in fact, those theories contributed powerfully to making the war possible; that is, they killed millions of men.

This was so because The Hague conference led the British, the French, and other people to think the peace of Europe assured just at the time when Germany was preparing intensively for a war of aggression. Thus, The Hague conference without question put into circulation ideas not in conformity with the times, that were premature, hence unrealizable and by consequence infinitely dangerous.

In fact, completely reassurred regarding the intentions of Germany, the powers that now compose the entente neglected the armaments that would have made the Germans renounce their ideas of aggression on account of the risks a fully armed enemy would have entailed.

One sees clearly that by its psychological consequences The Hague conference contributed largely to provoke the war and make possible the aggression that surprised the nations now allies.

This example, drawn from The Hague conference, makes it plain that an idea may be theoretically good, but that its application would not be practical until there has been a further considerable advance in social evolution.

Absolutely the same result can be looked for from certain questions in the allied peace program, notably the league of nations and the "freedom of the seas."

The league of nations can not be organized until after the solution of certain other problems. Incontestably the league of nations is based on an idea theoretically of the highest justice, but it will end in an immense catastrophe if it is attempted to put it in practice in advance of the solution of other problems infinitely more urgent, and the solution of which, moreover, is indispensable to the creation of a state of things in which a league of nations can be developed.

What is the state of things which, according to all evidence, will be most favorable for the development of a league of nations? It is without question the situation that will result from the liquidation, as completely as possible, of the essential problems arising from the European war, notably the complete destruction of German militarism, realized not by treaties on paper but by accomplished facts (the destruction in Germany of the machinery specially designed for the manufacture of munitions of war; the imposing on Germany of the payment of annuities, moderate, but spread over a sufficiently long period to assure reparation and amounting to enough so that Germany will not be able to rearm; the creation of anti-Pan-German States in central Europe).

Once these things have been done, a state of things will have been created favorable to beginning the organization of the society of nations. On the contrary, it is clear that an effort to organize a society of nations has no chance of success if an attempt is made to regulate the affairs of Europe on paper, and if, in consequence, the league of nations rests on written conventions, like those of The Hague, and not on realities.

It is therefore plain that it is indispensable to follow a well thought-out program in the discussion of the diverse problems to come before the peace conference, and not to follow this program will lead to certain failure.

UTOPIANS, BOLSHEVISTS, AND THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Unfortunately, in each of the allied nations there are some Utopians who do not understand the situation and say, "Organize the league of nations first and we will negotiate the peace afterwards."

This is a party of which some of the most notable members are the French and British Socialists, who both before and during the war showed their inability to comprehend realities. It is the same lack of understanding that characterizes all the bolshevists of the entente—Germanophile, in truth, and knowing full well that such a program would be of the utmost benefit to the Germans during the armistice period.

We will now examine the reasons why to begin by studying the league of nations and the "freedom of the seas" would be at the same time absurd and playing into the hands of the Boches.

The situation created by the war that must be liquidated with the utmost speed is the most difficult ever known. To begin by discussing the league of nations and the "freedom of the seas," which one can talk to infinity, would result only in voluntarily complicating practical affairs and would be manifestly absurd.

Further, to discuss the league of nations as something still to be created is to forget that which already exists—the entente. Is not it, such as it is, a league of nations, since it brings into one group three-fourths of the people of the world, a proportion never before reached in history?

Does not common sense tell us to wait to see the results of this league of nations that already exists before creating another without knowing how the one we have will function? No engineer would think of building a new type of engine of 1,000 horsepower without knowing how an engine of the same type but of 500 horsepower worked.

Is it not evident that if—for the sake of argument—the league of nations we already have should not be able, with its infinite resources, to solve the problems arising from the war (reparations, reorganization of Europe territorially), a fortiori a league of nations still greater would be utterly incapable of doing better. Those who can do the most can do the least, but those who can do the least can not do the most. This is elementary common sense; but, alas! the partisans of the league of nations seem to care little for common sense.

Finally, and this is much more important, to discuss these immense and ill-defined problems, such as the league of nations and the "freedom of the seas," before the urgent, concrete problems are solved would be to do exactly what the Germans want.

The Germans count on the following sequence of events:

The discussion of great questions such as the league of nations and the "freedom of the seas" will divide the allies.

The time taken for those discussions will be lost for the settlement of concrete problems that Germany fears especially, such as reparation.

The allied armies, ceasing to believe in positive results from the negotiations, will demand demobilization.

The question of reparation will be decided only in principle and on paper.

No police force capable of compelling the Germans to pay their indemnities will be created.

The German people will pay only a very small part of the damage they have caused and will keep the greater part of the loot of all kinds they have stolen everywhere during the war.

Under these conditions the financial situation of the European allies, and especially of France, would carry self-evident consequences. The cost of living in France and England reaching intolerable proportions, industries could not be reorganized, and Bolshevism would be easily spread among the populations by Boche agents.

Finally, since the war expenses of Germany have been considerably less than those of the allies, and since, according to our hypothesis, Germany would retain her loot, there would be so great a difference of economic power in favor of Germany that within a short time she would have attained her victory, not on the field of battle, but none the less in reality, as a consequence of the economic situation without precedent created in Europe by four years of war.

The danger I have described is not chimerical. Already the discussion of the "freedom of the seas," because it is premature, has caused divergencies among the allies. As soon as it was intimated recently that England would be willing to give up her command of the seas Mr. Winston Churchill, as spokesman for England, declared that she would never think of such a thing. It was a very natural reply, if one remembers that the suggestion was made to England on the morrow of an experience that has demonstrated that her life was saved by her navy and that the military spirit is far from being destroyed in Germany.

On the other hand, Americans, seeing the turn of events, are saying, "Let us get back to the Monroe doctrine and keep out of European affairs, unless we want to see Europe, as soon as her hands are free, mix in our affairs."

But the continuation of American intervention in European affairs on a cordial basis is absolutely necessary. American intervention, by its noble, generous, and ideal character and its comprehension of the future dangers, is a tremendous page in the history of humanity. Anything that could weaken the extent of American intervention or change its character would be a veritable disaster. Hence, it is only necessary to know what is already being published in certain journals of the entente to be convinced that the discussion of the league of nations and the "freedom of the seas," because the discussion of these questions is premature, can only tend to weaken instead of strengthen the ties that now exist between America and Europe.

PROGRAM DICTATED BY COMMON SENSE.

For many reasons, following the French proverb, don't put the cart before the oxen. Solve first the most urgent practical problems arising from the war, problems that must be solved in order to bring an end to the sufferings of millions of human beings, sufferings that have already lasted only too long. It is easy to see in what order these essential problems before the conference should be put.

The first is the reparation and restitution the German people must make, both of objects stolen and material damages caused. It is not justice only that demands the immediate solution of this problem. Its solution is the single condition of victory, as has been said. The peace will be durable and assured only if in consequence of her enormous thefts and war expenses Germany will not be able to preserve an economic superiority over the allies.

The second problem, and which can be taken up at the same time, is that of the territorial reconstruction of Europe by the adjustment of frontiers and by forming new States to raise a barrier against the pan-Germanists, such States as Poland, Bohemia, Roumania, the Magyar State, and the Jugo-Slav State.

The problem of the league of nations comes in the third place, but it will then be in a position for more favorable consideration. It is clear that if the first two problems, reparation and territorial reorganization, are satisfactorily cleared up by the entente, it will be relatively easy to solve the third, as the world, convinced by what the entente will have done, will want to transform the entente into a league of nations of greater extent by taking in all the nations worthy of a place.

Last comes the question of the "freedom of the seas." And by coming last it has the best chance for success. It is easy to understand that a real and durable solution of that problem can follow only from the extension of the league of nations. Such an extension implies a real disarmament in Europe, but this disarmament can come about only after Prussian militarism has been absolutely destroyed. Land disarmament having been accomplished, it will be relatively easy to disarm on the seas and from that will result the "freedom of the seas."

In short, when England can be assured of not being menaced by any continental power she will have no longer any interest in carrying the huge burden of naval supremacy.

This program for the consideration of the problems before the peace conference is only an application of common sense. But it is indispensable to assure victory that this order shall be followed. Therefore public opinion must demand that the league of nations and the "freedom of the seas" shall be discussed only in their logical place; that is, after all the urgent problems growing directly out of the war have found a practical solution.

INDEPENDENCE OF ARMENIA (S. DOC. NO. 316).

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have here a memorandum in regard to Armenia and her claims to freedom and national independence, which I should like to have printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

THE REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. There are Senators here who desire to take up next the section with regard to the luxury taxes.

Mr. KENYON. Page 199, section 905. Does the Senator desire to take that up at this time?

Mr. SIMMONS. I have just stated that at the request of Senators I will take it up now.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to make a few observations before a vote is taken. Does the Senator wish to address the Senate on the subject?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not care to make any statement to the Senate further than I have already made. I will state to the Senator that I requested the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to look after this section for me if I happened to be out of the Chamber.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I wish to draw the attention of the Senate to section 905, page 199, of the printed bill. I realize how useless it is generally, especially amid the confusion in the Senate, to draw attention to these sections and try and have the action of the committee changed by a vote of the Senate. I think there have been at times as many as 12 or 13

Senators in the Chamber during the discussion of this bill—seldom any more—and when the time comes to vote on a section Senators rush in, the chairman of the committee announces in the midst of the roll call that a vote "yea" is to sustain the committee and a vote "nay" is against the committee, and Senators almost fall over themselves supporting the committee. I think if the people of the country could look down from the galleries on some of these proceedings they would wonder what is the use of having any Senate here outside of the committee.

So it is with great diffidence that I disagree with the committee in their action in striking out section 905. It is what is commonly accepted as a section providing for a tax on luxuries. I find in no report of the committee any reason for this action, neither in the majority report nor in the minority report. We have had no word on the floor from the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee as to why this was done.

The theory of the section as placed here by the House is that, while wearing apparel and articles that may be covered by the section are not in themselves luxuries but necessities, when more than a certain price is paid they become luxuries. In other words, it is a tax upon ostentation. As the House provided, as to suits of clothing of $50 this tax would not apply, but where more than $50 was paid there would be a tax of 20 per cent on the surplus above the $50.

Upon shirts under $3 in value, no tax; above that, a tax. That ought to be a sufficient price to pay for a necessary garment of that character, but if some people wanted to array themselves in a glory equal to Solomon's and pay more than that, the tax should be levied. That is the theory upon which the House concluded to make this section a tax upon luxuries. Now, the action of the committee, it seems to me, is amazing. At a time when we are raking every source of revenue and business in this country to secure taxes we are striking out of this bill the tax known as the tax on luxuries.

What the House committee in their report say I want to put in the RECORD, because I realize that the Senate will not pay much attention to this matter, but I realize that the people of the country some day are going to begin to inquire about this bill and begin to study it and observe the soft cushions for the lighting of those who have secured great war profits, and they are going to inquire why it is that the Congress of the United States, especially the Democratic Party, strikes out of the bill the tax on luxuries. The House committee say in their report:

> In recommending excise taxes in the proposed bill your committee has endeavored to select articles that fall within two classes: (1) Articles that are more or less a luxury because of their nature and (2) articles that become in the nature of a luxury when sold for more than a fixed price.

That is the basis of this provision.

> The purpose of the committee in recommending these taxes is twofold: (1) To provide revenue and (2) to reduce extravagance.

Of all the reports that come to the Senate from the committee, the only one at all referring to this, as I read it, is the report of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. He says:

> I am also of the opinion that the proposed taxes on occupation, amusements—particularly of the cheaper kind—taxes upon freight, express, and passenger rates, upon telegraph and telephone messages, and consumption taxes generally, should be eliminated from the bill and that a heavy tax should be imposed on luxuries.

Mr. President, not only is there the necessity of securing revenue, which this would do to the extent of $185,000,000, as estimated in the House report, but if the amendment which I shall propose to the text shall be adopted, providing for a tax on meals at hotels, restaurants, dining cars, above a certain amount in value, it will add enough to this to make a $200,000,000 tax on luxuries. Can anybody tell me, in these times when we are taxing everything under the sun except the air we breathe, why this tax on luxuries should not be levied? There is something more than raising revenue. Senators, there is a psychology about this situation. It is a blind man indeed in this country who buries his head in the sand and will not look out and see the conflicting tides flowing in the ocean of our national life to-day; and that psychology is this: You do not want to send word to the people of the country or have them believe that a tax bill is so shaped as to favor big business, and so shaped as to favor those who have secured the great war profits, and so shaped as to take the taxes off of the inconsequential and useless luxuries.

What can be said to you Democrats in doing that? What leadership are you following? For 100 years, since the second inaugural of Thomas Jefferson down to April 8, 1913, when Woodrow Wilson addressed the American Congress, your party has stood for a tax on luxuries.

I remember as a boy Roger Q. Mills coming out to Iowa to instruct our farmers as to the beauties of free trade. I traveled as a boy 125 miles to hear that speech. It did not impress me any about free trade, but I did remember what he said as to a tax on luxuries, and your leaders all the way down to the present moment have been for it.

What is the matter with you Democrats, anyway? One of your leaders is in Paris and another is retiring from public life in order to recoup his private fortune. You had better get some leaders back to try to get you back to your platforms through all these years, and not have you seduced by those who are against the proposition of taxes on luxuries.

I remember when we had the debate here on the Underwood-Simmons bill. The distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS]—I wish he were here now—one of the best men who ever sat in any legislative body on earth, one with a heart that has some responsive beats to the great heartbeat of humanity—in a speech he made here, enunciated that Democratic doctrine of a tax on luxuries; and that strong Democrat from Indiana—Senator Shively, who has gone to his reward—enunciated the same doctrine here; and that great Democrat from Kentucky—great of heart, great of brain, and great of body, who has likewise passed to his reward, dear old Ollie James, and I wish he were here now—on that night, with crowded galleries, made this Chamber ring with the old Democratic doctrine of taking the taxes off of the sugar bowl of the poor and putting them on those who could best stand it.

You have gone out on the stump from one end of this country to the other preaching that doctrine—and I am talking in a heartfelt way to you Democrats, because I like you—but you have just been thrashed completely, and when you do this you will be "wiped off the map." I do not want to see you come to such an untimely death so suddenly. You have gone to every part of this country and talked to the people about the tax on luxuries. I do not believe that there is a man on the other side of this Chamber who has not made that kind of a speech. I have heard some of you do it in days gone by.

What is the matter? What has gotten into you? Is there such a fetish for committee action that you do not dare vote against the committee? Have you any independence when a great question like this is involved—one that is fundamental?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KENYON. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator from Iowa give us any assurance of what support there will be on his side of the Chamber?

Mr. KENYON. There will be a very strong support; I will give the Senator from Nebraska that assurance.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am very glad to hear it. I have had some doubts.

Mr. KENYON. I think, while it has been one of the cardinal doctrines of the Democratic Party to tax luxuries, it has likewise been a cardinal doctrine of progressive republicanism as well. Not only that, Mr. President, but you could glean a good deal of wisdom from once in a while consulting the writings and messages of Grover Cleveland, that honest old Democrat, who was always willing to have the truth told.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I respectfully protest against the classification of the late Grover Cleveland as a Democrat.

Mr. KENYON. That may be the reason, Mr. President, why luxury taxes have been stricken out of this bill. Grover Cleveland stood for taxes on luxuries.

Mr. THOMAS. No, Mr. President; but because Cleveland, in his administration, was a great deal more of a Republican than he was a Democrat.

Mr. KENYON. I am afraid that if the old former President in the world beyond can hear that he certainly will be shocked. Anyway, notwithstanding this admonition, I will venture the suggestion that in his third annual message Grover Cleveland said:

> The taxation of luxuries presents no feature of hardship.

You Democrats have sent out to the country every year, bound in nice binding, these Democratic campaign textbooks [exhibiting], wonderful works of the veriest fiction, tales that rival those of Baron Munchausen, clothed in a modesty that is quite wonderful, that all the relations of the universe and everything that is good have come from the action of the Democratic Party.

I notice in one of these publications that credit is taken entirely for the Smith-Lever bill for the Democratic Party, when everybody knows that the old patriot from Vermont, Senator PAGE, had more to do with the passage of that bill than any other living man, a fact which has been so generously conceded many times by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH].

But I wish you would take up and read your own promulgations to the American people. Of course, there are some parts of these promulgations that you would not want to read. The arraignment of ex-President Taft, I imagine, in one of these books for junketing around the country at public expense when he ought to have been in Washington is something perhaps you would not want to read; but the general doctrine therein enunciated is that taxes should be imposed on luxuries. I am not going to fill the RECORD with them. You held out the Underwood-Simmons bill as something for the people to support, because it levied such duties on luxuries.

Why the change? There seems to be so much mystery about this bill. We had the newspaper announcement of the terrific fight that the Republicans were going to make against the bill, and then overnight it all seems to have been changed. I hope that some reason can be given us for this change.

I wish we could go further in the tax on luxuries. I never see an automobile coming down the street with distinguishably gowned ladies sitting in the rear seat, and a Pekinese pup sitting by their sides, or some stalwart man, as you can see every night, out exercising some of these chow-chow dogs, that I do not wish that we could put a tax on some of these things, and either blot out this nauseating ostentation or else raise some revenue.

I shall introduce an amendment to the text of the committee amendment, should it be voted down, providing, in addition to the taxes therein contained, that there shall be included in the prohibition against exemption the amount of every meal at any hotel, café, dining car, or eating house in excess of $2 per person.

If Senators would only understand this bill as it has come to us from the House, it provides that on carpets and rugs of over $5 per square yard there shall be a 20 per cent tax. Rugs may be necessities, but of course the usual necessities would be comprehended under the term of $5 per yard. If people want to surround themselves with oriental rugs and luxuries costing more than that, let them pay for it; that is reasonable.

The Senator from Washington, in his speech on the Simmons-Underwood bill, uttered something that I thought a good deal about under this problem of taxation, and it applies to that exact situation. He said at that time that we should tax superfluities. So with this bill.

As to the second item, picture frames in excess of $10 each; is that not enough to spend on an ordinary picture frame? If you want a picture frame that is gilded or bronzed to cost more than $10, it is in the nature of a superfluity; but if that should appeal to you, then pay for it. Those who can have these great luxuries are willing to pay for them. Taxes upon such articles can be collected without irritation and without injuring anybody.

Valises, in excess of $25 each. If anyone wants to pay more than $25 for a valise or a traveling bag, why not let him pay a tax on it?

Hand bags, in excess of $7.50 each. What harm will come to anyone who wants to buy a hand bag for $35 or $40 by being compelled to pay a tax upon the amount in excess of the $7.50? So it runs—umbrellas, suits of clothes, women's suits of clothes, and so forth.

But I leave this, Mr. President, without further remark, merely calling it to the attention of the Senate in the hope that there will be some discussion and some consideration——

Mr. CURTIS, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota, and Mr. JOHNSON of California addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to address the Senate if the Senator from Iowa has concluded, and I thought he had concluded.

Mr. KENYON. I will conclude in a moment.

I repeat, Mr. President, I merely call this question to the attention of the Senate in the hope that on this item, at least, we may have a vote which will reflect the individual judgment of Senators without any question of their being in any way afraid to oppose the Finance Committee.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question, but if the Senator has concluded, of course I will not do so.

Mr. KENYON. I have concluded, but I will be very glad to answer any question that I can.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I simply wish to ask the Senator if he does not believe this was a clerical error?

Mr. KENYON. I hope that may be true, but, as there has been no minority report, I assume that no error was made.

Mr. ASHURST. I am inclined to believe that it is only a clerical error, because the Democrats are bound, so far as faith and conscience can bind men, to tax the very articles of luxury which the committee, through some inadvertence, has stricken out, and I have no doubt that when the roll is called the vote on this side will be unanimous to correct this egregious blunder.

That provision—paragraph 905—of the House bill which the committee proposes to strike out imposes a tax—a small tax—on what we call the luxuries of life; in other words, it provides for a tax on those things which are beyond the reach of the man who is denominated in his life as a poor man. It lays a very small tax on luxuries, and I repeat that I feel bound to vote against the committee in this matter, because since I have been making political speeches it has been my particular text that we should tax luxuries.

I have gone about this country like a peripatetic volcano in constant eruption, urging a tax on luxuries. I think the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] has performed a very useful service to the country in calling attention to it.

Now, just one other word. The distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] objected to Grover Cleveland being called a Democrat. Grover Cleveland has passed from this earthly scene to, I believe, a better world. Whatever he was, whether he was a Democrat, a stand-pat Republican, a Progressive, or what not, he had two qualities that commended themselves to me: He had the chilled-steel nerve to do just exactly what he thought was right in spite of ten thousand furies that barked at his heels; and Grover Cleveland was honest. In his lifetime I did not agree with him on many questions; but Grover Cleveland never failed to sustain the honor and integrity of this country. It was the statesmanship of Grover Cleveland that built the Navy that showed our prowess during the Spanish War, and in the perilous times through which we have passed, I am very certain had Grover Cleveland been alive his voice would have rung out in support of President Wilson on the great questions that have confronted our people. We have Cleveland Democrats, Bryan Democrats, high protective tariff Democrats, and all other kinds of Democrats. We do not want any hyphenated Democrats; we simply want Democrats. A Democrat is a man who votes for a tax on luxuries; a stand-pat Republican is a man who votes against a tax on luxuries.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Iowa the amount of revenue, if he knows, which will be derived from this section?

Mr. KENYON. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I inquire the amount of revenue that will be derived under this section?

Mr. KENYON. Approximately $185,000,000, according to the House figures, and I think conceded by the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I expect to vote against the committee on this matter, and I wanted to know the amount of revenue that would be derived.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I wish to occupy just a very few moments this morning in the interest of historical preservation, and so I want to recall what has transpired in the past very, very briefly in one aspect concerning the revenue bill, and then I want to call to the attention of my colleagues what this particular revenue bill provides for.

A little over a year ago this Chamber was the scene of the greatest contest I have witnessed since I have been a Member of it, a contest rendered memorable by the fact that we were dealing then with a revenue bill such as the country had never before seen, and dealing then with modes of taxation concerning which there was a wide divergence of opinion. I recall during the consideration of that revenue bill in August, 1917, that a very small minority of this body—9 upon this side and 8 upon the other side, 17 in all—stood their ground as well as they were able in presenting to the Senate and to the people of the country the mode of taxation which that small minority believed to be just. I recall also during the consideration of the war-revenue bill then that that small minority—17 Senators—stood here upon this floor and demanded that war profits should be taxed 80 per cent, demanded it day in and day out, until overwhelmed by the vast number of their fellows and defeated in the amendments they then presented. I recall, Mr. President, during that time how the verbal shot and shell and shrapnel beat us to the ground, and how the poison gas on the part of the press that responds to the big business of this country spread broadcast the infamy of the 17 men who dared to stand upon this floor and ask that war profits be taxed 80 per cent. I recall a part of the great metropolitan dailies of the land telling of the anarchists and of the pro-Germans who were here in the Senate of the United States asking that we take with the strong arm of the law war profits, the money coined out of our blood, in the same fashion that we had clutched the bodies of the boys whom we love. I remember during that period how from the eastern border of our land to the uttermost corner upon the western shore there was abuse and denunciation and vilification and constantly applied epithets of all sorts to the men who dared ask 80 per cent of war profits. I recall how during those days the 17 who favored this sort of thing talked of England, and how England was taking 80 per cent of war profits, and how, in the year just previous, England had taken 60 per cent, and in the time immediately prior 50 per cent, and how it was related that for three years the great war profits of this country had gone untouched into the coffers of those who had coined war into dollars. I remember that as we talked about that 80 per cent it was asserted again and again to us that you could not take 80 per cent of war profits; that it was confiscatory; that it would not enable business to continue in its ordinary and normal flux and flow; that productivity would cease; and that you would destroy utterly the great industries of the Nation.

All of these things happened a year and a couple of months ago in this Chamber. The 17 went down to defeat with their proposition asking 80 per cent. They went down to defeat; and possibly that part of the great press of the country that responds always to profit, no matter how that profit may be coined, sent us down not only to defeat but possibly to infamy for all time.

I wish to recall the passing events since transpiring. In May of this year the President of the United States, in an address, said to Congress:

> Only fair, equitably distributed taxation, of the widest incidence and drawing chiefly from the sources which would be likely to demoralize credit by their very abundance, can prevent inflation and keep our industrial system free of speculation and waste. We shall naturally turn, therefore, I suppose, to war profits and incomes and luxuries for the additional taxes.

The President, in May of this year, recognized after the debate of last year and after the months that were spent in the endeavor to demonstrate the appropriate mode of taxation that we would turn to war profits and incomes and luxuries for additional taxes. Then he added in another part of his address:

> An intense and pitiless light beats upon every man and every action in this tragic plot of war that is now upon the stage. If lobbyists hurry to Washington to attempt to turn what you do in the matter of taxation to their protection or advantage, the light will beat also upon them. There is abundant fuel for the light in the records of the Treasury with regard to profits of every sort. The profiteering that can not be got at by the restraints of conscience and love of country can be got at by taxation. There is such profiteering now and the information with regard to it is available and indisputable.

And I may say that there was profiteering at the time we passed the revenue bill in 1917, and the evidence was indisputable and was put into the RECORD during the debates upon that bill.

But subsequently to the address of the President there was a discovery made by the Secretary of the Treasury, a discovery that sheds a great, white, effulgent light upon this subject; a discovery that finally brought home to all of us the taxation in which England was indulging, and the possibilities that might come to us in taxation which we should levy. The Secretary of the Treasury on June 5, 1918, in a letter to the Ways and Means Committee of the House, says:

> The existing excess-profits tax does not always reach war profits. The rates of excess-profits taxation are graduated, and the maximum is 60 per cent. In Great Britain there is a flat rate of 80 per cent on all war profits.

If the Secretary of the Treasury had not made this startling discovery in June, 1918, a waiting and an expectant Congress would have been in ignorance until now of the rate of taxation that was levied by Britain and the possibilities which might have come from a tax of 80 per cent on war profits. Last year when we were crying from the housetops for three months what Britain charged upon her war profits, when we were demanding that the very largest percentage of war profits should be taken from those who made these profits from our war, when we proved indisputably profiteering and that billions made from profiteering were escaping, where was the knowledge of the Secretary of the Treasury and where was the recommendation then in relation to 80 per cent?

You may answer me, and the answer, I presume, may be made upon this floor to-day, that we did not levy a tax of 80 per cent upon war profits last year in order that we might have a reservoir for this year of war profits. The very statement of the proposition is its own refutation. You could have taken 80 per cent of war profits last year and you could have relieved normal business, real, legitimate business, ordinary business, of a couple of billion dollars that ordinary normal business will have to pay in the days to come. Every dollar that was left of war profits in the last revenue bill, every penny that was coined out of the war that was permitted to go into the coffers of those who coined those war profits will have to be paid in the future, Mr. President, by normal business, peace business, in peace times, and by normal industry and normal productivity.

I resume reading what is said by the Secretary of the Treasury in his letter to the Ways and Means Committee:

> In Great Britain there is a flat rate of 80 per cent on all war profits.

How naively the Secretary of the Treasury says in June, 1918, that in Great Britain there is a tax of 80 per cent! How feeble were our voices in August, 1917, when for three months we were shouting that fact not only on the floor of the Senate but wherever and whenever we could obtain an audience to listen!

The Secretary of the Treasury proceeds, in his letter to the Ways and Means Committee:

> The Government departments, under great pressure as they are to get necessary war materials and supplies with the utmost expedition, can not in the nature of things fix their prices nor guard their contracts in such a way as to avoid the possibility of profiteering. The one sure way is to tax away the excessive profits when they have been realized. I do not say this in a spirit of criticism of the corporations or business men of the country, who have for the most part loyally supported the Government. In entering into war contracts they take grave risks. They are called upon to make vast expenditures of capital for purposes which may prove unproductive after the war. They are not to be blamed in these circumstances for asking for prices and terms which cover these risks. On the other hand, when the risk has been liquidated by proper allowances and the contract had proved profitable, the Government should take back in taxes all profits above a reasonable reward. Under existing law that does not happen, because the tax rates are not high enough and can not safely be made high enough, since the test now is not how much of the profits are due to the war but what relation the profits bear to the capital invested. A company with a swollen capital and huge war profits escapes.

So much for the justification of the position which we took a year ago—tardy justification and vindication—by the President and the Secretary of the Treasury, and now, Mr. President, what do we observe in the present revenue bill?

I have read the report of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], in which he takes issue with the percentage of war-profits tax that is stated by the Finance Committee to be in the revenue bill, but I accept for the moment, but only for the moment, the view of the chairman of the Finance Committee and the others of the Finance Committee who have spoken upon the subject, that the bill provides for a tax of 80 per cent upon war profits. Now, assuming that it does what the chairman of the Finance Committee and the members of the Finance Committee say, we have then presented to us a revenue bill which, adopting the language of the members of the Finance Committee flung at us a year ago in this Chamber, is anarchical, is designed to destroy business, is pro-German, is, indeed, a bill which is aimed at preventing the successful prosecution of the war, and is a bill which no man with an atom of financial sense, as they said to us a year ago, could for a moment advocate. What a marvelous change now! What a miracle, that the Finance Committee boasts it now taxes war profits 80 per cent!

I accept the conversion of the Finance Committee. I welcome the members of the Finance Committee finally, after two billions of war profits have escaped taxation, to an 80 per cent rate upon war profits this year, and I am delighted to-day, finally, in the latter part of 1918, after two billions of war profits have escaped taxation in 1917, to welcome the Finance Committee of the Senate to membership with the 17 who stood upon this floor a year ago and asked that 80 per cent of war profits then be taken while we had the opportunity.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator does not mean that the bill as reported by the Finance Committee takes 80 per cent of the war profits?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I accept, as I said, their statement in that regard; and accepting their statement as they have made it upon the floor here, while not admitting the fact, I welcome them to membership in the very small minority that a year ago advocated a tax of 80 per cent upon war profits.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator is aware that the bill upon its face first exempts 10 per cent of the capital?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, there is a little bill that passed the House some days ago that affects the Army uniforms. I wish to ask unanimous consent that it may be taken up and considered now.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator wait until we dispose of this item? Then I shall not interpose any objection.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not think the bill will require any further than the reading.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will wait until we finish this item, then he can take it up.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope the Republicans will support the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I make a suggestion to the Senator? I have not offered the amendment I had in mind. The question now is on adopting the committee amendment, which is to strike out that section.

Mr. CURTIS. Then I hope the committee amendment will be defeated.

I was glad to have the Senator refer to the Simmons-Underwood bill, because if that is an evidence of Democratic taxation on luxuries the people should know it. Last year we imported into this country $3,000,000,000 of merchandise. We collected on that merchandise a revenue of $180,000,000 only. Of that $3,000,000,000, $500,000,000 were luxuries. Why, there should have been collected upon the luxuries alone more than $200,000,000 in revenue. This provision, if retained in the bill, will carry only $185,000,000. We ought to have more than that from imported luxuries, to say nothing of a tax upon luxuries produced in this country. There should be a proper tax upon luxuries, a tax that would not be a burden upon anyone, for a tax should be fixed in accordance with ability to bear it. A proper tax on imports, a large tax on imported luxuries, and a reasonable tax on domestic luxuries would produce at least $1,000,000,000 a year, while the provision of the committee on luxuries will raise only $185,000,000.

A year ago, when the revenue measure was up, I took the position in this body that the expenses of the war, as far as possible, should be paid by those who are making large profits out of war contracts, those who have large incomes, and those who use luxuries. Nothing was done in that measure to tax luxuries to any great extent; and now, when the bill comes here from the House with a provision placing a very small tax on luxuries, it is stricken out by the committee!

I do hope that those on this side of the Chamber will vote against the committee amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish first to refer only very briefly to the statements made by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. The Senator rather felicitates himself and some of his colleagues who joined with him when the revenue bill of 1917 was under consideration in advocating an 80 per cent war-profits tax, and he congratulates himself that the Finance Committee and the Ways and Means Committee have, as he claims, come to his way of thinking upon that subject.

Mr. President, the Senator forgets that the present law, the one to which he refers, contains a war excess-profits tax rising as high as 60 per cent, and that a 60 per cent excess-profits tax is higher than this 80 per cent war-profits tax. That 60 per cent rate applies to income in excess of a deduction of only 8 per cent of the invested capital. This 80 per cent rate applies only to income in excess of a deduction of the entire net earnings of the corporation during the prewar period. So the maximum rate, if you take into consideration the deduction, is greater in the present law than in the proposed law, although, of course, the average rate is reduced by the lower brackets contained in the existing war excess-profits tax.

But it was not to that that I desired to call attention. The Senator from California knows, and every Senator here knows, that in 1917 we were levying a tax to raise about $4,000,000,000. To-day, even after the reductions that we have been able to make as a result of the armistice, we are levying a tax to raise $6,000,000,000. As a result of the fact that we are levying for the purpose of raising a larger amount of money than in the act of 1917, all the taxes in this bill, the excess-profits tax as well as many other miscellaneous taxes, are raised to a level considerably higher than that reached in the present law.

Mr. President, it would have been a crime against the people of this country if when we needed only $6,000,000,000 we should have levied as high taxes upon the people as when we need $8,000,000,000. If we have come to these higher taxes it is only because we have been forced to come to them by the necessities of the Government and by the increased expenditures of the Government.

Then I call the Senator's attention to a further fact. He says we permitted war profits to escape. While we imposed in the last bill a war excess-profits tax of 60 per cent at the maximum, there was also in existence a flat tax of 12½ per cent upon the profits arising from the manufacture of munitions of war. The term "munitions of war" includes practically everything that is manufactured for the purpose of equipping men to fight, outside of the clothes they wear and the food they eat. Under the last bill we imposed a maximum tax upon war profits of 60 per cent above a deduction which is small as compared with the present deduction, and in addition we had a munitions tax originally imposed at the rate of 12½ per cent and subsequently reduced to 10 per cent.

But, Mr. President, I do not wish to pursue that any further. I rose for the purpose of addressing myself to the very remarkable argument of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and to the statement that has been made by different Senators upon the floor with regard to this proposition.

Mr. President, I must believe that the remarks of the Senator from Iowa and of other Senators with respect to that matter are based upon an entire misconception of what has been done. I do not think there is anyone in this body who believes more heartily than I do in a properly adjusted luxury tax. I believe the members of the Finance Committee will bear me out when I say that when this bill was under consideration, when the Senator from Utah made a proposition to strike out all the luxury taxes in the bill, all these special taxes, all these excise taxes, and substitute for them a gross-sales tax, I said then that I never would consent to the elimination of what I regarded as luxury taxes for the purpose of substituting consumption taxes. That is the way I feel about it. I am as heartily in favor of luxury taxes as the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] or any other Senator upon this floor. I believe it is a just principle of taxation that the things which are unnecessary should be heavily taxed as compared with the things which are necessary. I think that is the principle which the committee followed in this matter. I do not remember with absolute certainty as to the vote in the committee upon this subject, but my impression is that there was no division in the committee upon the proposition to strike out these taxes; but if I am not correct, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], who is an honored member of the committee, will correct me.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will remind the Senator that there was.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am told the Senator voted against it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I voted against it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Did any other Senator in the committee vote against it?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I admit there was very little discussion upon the proposition. Many of us believed that these had better be retained and many of the taxes that were also retained eliminated so that we could get at more just taxes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think it was practically a unanimous vote.

Mr. President, when I say I believe in taxing luxuries, I refer to those things which in their nature and their essence are luxuries, which are not necessary, which can be dispensed with, and which if bought are bought only by those who can afford more than the comforts of life.

Let me call the attention of the Senate to what has been actually done by the committee. There are two classes of these taxes that have been designated by the press loosely, I think, as luxury taxes and semiluxury taxes. In my opinion they do not deserve to be so characterized, but there are in the bill distinctive luxury taxes, and these have been kept in the bill. There have been reductions, and those reductions were in keeping with the amount of money which by reason of the practical termination of the war we were able to remit to the people.

Let me ask Senators to take the bill and turn to page 193. That section begins with a tax upon automobiles. I am not going to discuss the question whether an automobile is a luxury or not. There are some people who think it is; there are some people who think it is not. In any event Congress has heretofore decided the question that automobiles are legitimate subjects of taxation under the circumstances which exist.

But passing that by, Mr. President, the next provision with regard to these taxes that we come to is the tax upon pianos and organs, piano players, graphophones, talking machines, music boxes, records, and so on. Those taxes were retained. Tennis rackets, nets, racket covers, toboggans, polo mallets, baseball bats, and a whole category of sporting articles are enumerated. The tax upon these is retained.

Then we come to chewing gum, supposed to be a luxury. The tax upon that is retained. On cameras the tax is retained. On candy the tax is retained but reduced. Upon firearms, shells, cartridges, and so on, the tax is retained. On hunting and bowie knives, dirks, daggers, stilettos, brass knuckles, and so on, the tax is retained. On portable electric fans the tax is retained. On thermos bottles the tax is retained. On cigar and cigarette holders the tax is retained. On automatic slot-device weighing or vending machines the tax is retained. On liveries and livery boots and hats the tax is retained. On hunting and shooting garments and riding habits the tax is retained. On articles made out of any fur, or articles of which fur is the component material of chief value, there is a tax of 10 per cent. On yachts and motor boats the tax is retained. On toilet soaps and toilet soap powders a 3 per cent tax is retained. Then there is a tax upon moving-picture films, which is retained. Upon paintings, sculptures, statuary, porcelain, and so on, the tax is retained.

Finally, Mr. President, without enumerating them all, we get to the tax imposed upon jewelry, pearls, precious and semiprecious stones, articles made of or ornamented, mounted, or fitted with precious metals or imitations thereof, opera glasses, marine glasses, field glasses, binoculars, and so on, the tax is retained.

That is what I have regarded as the luxury title of the bill. Those taxes are upon things that are unnecessary, as a rule. In the public mind they are regarded as luxuries, and they were properly and legitimately the subject of taxation under the circumstances.

But, Mr. President, when we come to these other taxes which the Senator from Iowa thinks are distinctively luxury taxes, I contend that they are in no true sense luxury taxes. They are taxes upon necessaries of life when those necessaries are sold beyond a certain price. That is all there is in that schedule.

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator just one question to illustrate my position? Does the Senator think that a woman's hat costing over $15 is a necessity?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think a woman's hat is a necessity.

Mr. KENYON. So do I; but one costing over $15? The Senator is a married man and he must know that it is a good deal of a luxury.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know whether it is a luxury or not, but the Senator will permit me to develop my idea.

Mr. President, here are things that are taxed. I will not read them all. First, is a tax on carpets and rugs in excess of $5 per square yard; then follows a tax on picture frames in excess of $10 each; then we come to trunks in excess of $50, valises above $25, fans above $1, smoking coats or jackets above $7.50, men's and boys' suits or overcoats, not including uniforms, on the amount in excess of $50; women's and misses' suits, cloaks, and coats in excess of $50; women's and misses' dresses in excess of $40; women's and misses' hats, bonnets, and hoods in an amount in excess of $15; men's and boys' hats in an amount in excess of $5; men's and boys' caps in an amount in excess of $2. The rate in each case is 20 per cent.

Mr. President, I want to say that not only the rich but during these times of high prices—and these taxes are imposed in times of high prices—not only the rich buy hats costing in excess of $5 but the laboring men of this country, and the men of moderate means have very generally purchased hats costing in excess of $5, because——

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. Because we must recognize the fact that a hat which can be bought in normal times at $3.50 can not now, as a rule, be bought for less than $5. So we are practically imposing a tax upon hats which in normal times would sell for not more than $3.50.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wished to ask the Senator if he thought it was possible to buy a woman's coat made out of wool for $40 to-day?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will tell the Senator that one was shown me only a couple of days ago, a very light woolen coat, that cost $74, and if it is a good woolen coat you can not touch it for less than $90, and even more than that. While to-day we are voting to take our war-working girls home because they have not money enough to return, you are wanting to put a tax upon a coat that they must buy in order to get home. On nearly every one of these articles the price is put over the demarkation between what might be called luxuries and what might be called a necessity, and they are below the lowest possible price at which you can buy them to-day, I do not care what the class may be.

Mr. KENYON. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me go on and finish the list here.

Mr. KENYON. I wish simply to call attention to an advertisement here in the city of girls' cloaks——

Mr. McCUMBER. And when you come to look at the advertisement you will have a piece of shoddy that will not last until you get home with it if you put it on.

Mr. KENYON. How many of the girls earning $1,200 a year are buying $70 and $60 cloaks?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is because they can not get it for anything less if it is fit to wear. If they would buy it for $20 or $25 or $35, I say it would not last them for a week. Anyone who knows anything about clothing will justify me in that statement.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me go on. I want the Senate to understand what these things are.

The next are men's, women's, misses', and boys' boots, shoes, pumps, and slippers in excess of $10, 20 per cent.

Mr. President, there are many war workers—these young girls who have come here to assist the Government in the great emergency from which we have very happily emerged—who came here from motives of patriotism, yet they would have been unable to come except for a salary. Thousands of these very girls have to buy shoes, and I will venture to say that while their everyday working shoes might not have cost $10, each one of them has a pair of shoes which cost over $10, for you can not buy a woman's good shoe for less than $10, and you can not buy a man's good shoe for less than $10 in these times. It is true you may buy shoes made of leather substitutes or you may buy shopworn shoes for less than that sum, but the shoe that you now buy for less than $10 is subject to the defects that I have described or it is made out of inferior material.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, there is no tax on shoes which do not cost $10 a pair.

Mr. SIMMONS. There is a tax on all shoes costing in excess of $10.

Mr. KENYON. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. The committee further reported to strike out:

(18) Men's and boys' neckties and neckwear, on the amount in excess of $2 each;
(19) Men's and boys' silk stockings or hose, on the amount in excess of $1 per pair;
(20) Women's and misses' silk stockings or hose, on the amount in excess of $2 per pair;
(21) Men's shirts, on the amount in excess of $3 each;
(22) Men's, women's, misses', and boys' pajamas, nightgowns, and underwear, on the amount in excess of $5 each; and
(23) Kimonos, petticoats, and waists, on the amount in excess of $15 each.

Mr. President, take these 23 classes as a group, and, except the first 9, they cover the clothing which the people of this country wear. It is now proposed, if a workingman is making good wages during these war times and is able to pay these higher prices, that he shall be taxed if his clothing shall cost him in excess of a modest sum. That is one reason why we did not feel that these were proper taxes to impose upon the people. We did not regard those as the luxury taxes which the political parties of this country are committed to impose. The taxation of luxuries is no more a principle of the Democratic Party than it is of the Republican Party; both parties of this country have committed themselves to the principle of taxing luxuries, but both parties, as represented upon the committee, agreed that these were not the kind of luxury taxes to which the principle in question has reference.

However, Mr. President, there is another objection to this which can readily be appreciated by Senators who will consider and reflect about the matter. All the stores of any considerable size in this country, if these taxes are imposed, will have to keep a separate account of each article, showing the amount for which it is sold in excess of a certain price.

As a result the business of the country would be put to great expense in keeping such accounts by reason of the time that would be lost by the salesmen and the number of bookkeepers that would be required in order to properly keep the necessary accounts, for the Government will not take the mere statement of a person that he has collected a certain gross amount under the luxury taxes imposed in this bill, but the Government has a right to require, and necessarily will require, that each merchant engaged in business selling any of these articles shall keep a set of books separate and apart from his other books showing each one of these sales and the correct amount of the tax received.

Mr. President, it was represented to your committee, and it is a fact, I think, that the actual expense to the business people of this country of keeping the necessary accounts and books will in many instances be even greater than the tax itself. Of course, this might not be so, as a rule; but, even as a rule, it can be seen by every Senator who will think about it that this is a tax which is imposed, not upon the merchant, but which is imposed upon the people though the merchant himself must bear an additional expense, for he has, of course, necessarily to pay the expense of keeping the books required by the Government. In many instances, I say, it will be found that this expense will average as much as the tax to be derived from this source by the Government.

Mr. President, I do not wish to elaborate this matter. So far as I am concerned, whatever the Senate decides to do I shall accept. I think it is an obnoxious tax; I think it is a burdensome tax; and I think it is not a luxury tax in any true sense of that word.

Mr. SMOOT obtained the floor.

Mr. GRONNA. If the Senator from Utah will permit me, I desire to ask a question of the chairman of the committee, merely for information.

Mr. SMOOT. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. GRONNA. On page 193, in subdivision (1), under the title of "Excise taxes," section 900, I find this language:

(1) Automobiles, motorcycles, automobile trucks, automobile wagons, automobile trailers or tractors.

It is the latter part of the sentence as to which I should like to have either the chairman of the committee or the Senator from Utah explain. Is it understood that all purchasers of farm tractors must pay a tax of 5 per cent?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; if it is an automobile trailer or a tractor.

Mr. GRONNA. What I had special reference to was farm tractors.

Mr. SMOOT. I will answer the Senator from North Dakota that the tax is imposed upon the manufacturer or the importer, but, of course, in reality it will reach the farmer who purchases the tractor.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; I wished to plainly understand it. We know that the smaller kind of tractors now cost about $1,500 or $1,600; that means that on every such tractor there will be at least an $80 tax. Many of these tractors cost $3,000. They are largely tractors that will pull about 6 plow bottoms; but a great many farmers buy the large tractors which will pull 10 plow bottoms, and which cost about $6,000. So that class of tractors will pay from $150 up to $300 tax on a common tractor. Is that the way that the committee understands it?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the way the committee understands it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to proceed. I merely want to explain to the Senate my position on section 905 and to also give some of the reasons for the action of the committee in striking out that section.

In the first place, I wish to say that I am opposed to all nagging and irritating taxes, and at some time in the future they are going to be wiped out of our revenue legislation, in my opinion, as all of the taxes imposed under the title in which section 905 is found ought to be eliminated from the bill, with few exceptions.

I wish to say to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] that the House inserted section 905 primarily for the purpose of discouraging consumption. If the Senator will read the House hearings and the recommendations of the department, he will see that the action of the House was based upon the idea that the labor of this country should not be employed in the manufacture of luxuries which the people could do without. Based upon the recommendations of the department, the House of Representatives put the tax in the bill primarily for the purpose of limiting, as far as possible, the production of so-called luxuries. I do not think, however, it acted wisely in the selection of items called luxuries as found in section 905.

I wish to emphasize the fact that, after the bill came to the Finance Committee of the Senate, it was stated to the committee by the officials of the department that the administration of the proposed tax was going to be not only expensive, but in many cases next to impossible. For instance, take the item of silk hose, to which reference was made a little while ago. A man goes to a store and buys a pair of silk hose for a dollar and a quarter. There is an exemption from tax of a dollar, leaving 25 cents to be taxed upon that sale. Twenty per cent of 25 cents would be the tax on that sale and it would amount to 5 cents. An account of this 5 cents must be made upon the books of the company making the sale and report of it made to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. It would cost the merchant many times 5 cents and the item would encumber the records of the department so long as the records are kept. Better would it be for the merchant, rather than to undertake to do this, to forego making the sale.

In referring, Mr. President, to the imposition of taxes upon so-called luxuries, an inference has been made that the committee had refused to impose luxury taxes but had proposed to secure the same amount of revenue from some other source, and inference was made that the business of the country was escaping just taxation under this bill. I am perfectly willing, Mr. President, to criticize this bill where it needs criticism, as all Senators are aware, and I know there are discriminations in the bill which can not be defended. Section 905, under consideration, does not impose taxes in a just way.

If Senators will note, they will find that out of the taxes to be raised under this bill, amounting to $5,974,466,000, as estimated, there will be raised $5,467,000,000 from the income tax, the war excess-profits tax, the inheritance tax, beverage taxes, cigar and tobacco taxes, and the floor tax on cigars, tobacco, and liquors. In other words, from the income tax there will be realized $2,207,000,000—and we must remember that there is an exemption upon the income of every citizen of the United States before any income taxes are imposed—from the war excess-profits tax, $2,400,000,000; from the inheritance tax, $100,000,000; from beverages, $450,000; from cigars and tobacco, $240,000,000; and from the floor tax on cigars, tobacco, and liquors, $70,000,000, or, as I have said, a total of $5,467,000,000. From those sources alone there is to be collected of the amount of taxes imposed under this bill 91½ per cent, or, in other words, all of the taxes imposed by this bill outside of the six sources which I have named only amount to 8½ per cent of the aggregate.

I voted to strike out this provision because I wanted to strike out every item under Title IX with the exception of about half a dozen. They would be expensive and difficult of administration on the part of the Government. They are nagging, irritating taxes, falling upon all of the people, and they ought to be eliminated. That is the reason I voted to strike out this section, and if I had the chance I would vote to have the others go out, as I said in my speech upon this bill.

Mr. WEEKS and Mr. GRONNA addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WEEKS. I merely wish to ask a question.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Massachusetts rose first. I will yield to him, and then I will yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. WEEKS. I wish to ask the Senator from Utah if any estimate has been made of the cost of collecting the taxes provided for under this section?

Mr. SMOOT. None was given to the committee, but I will say that it was stated that hundreds, if not thousands, of employees of the Government would have to go from one end of the country to the other to check up the tax returns under this section, and nobody could tell what the cost of collecting it would be.

This is my position: If we want to impose a luxury tax, let us say what luxuries are, and impose a tax upon every cent of the sale price of such luxuries, and not over and above a certain price.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Under the House provision, if a suit of clothes sells for less than $50 it will pay no tax, but if it sells for $60 there will be a tax on the $10 over and above $50; and, if the Senator from Iowa will allow me just a moment, I wish to say to the Senator that a tax of that kind would simply mean this: If a suit of clothes made of wool sells for $60 to-day, and there were imposed a tax upon the $10 excess over $50, the first thing the merchant would do would be to buy a suit of clothes which, through the addition of shoddy, if in no other way, could be sold for $50, and thus escape the tax entirely.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator yield to me right there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from Utah yield?

Mr. McCUMBER. The suggestion I wish to make is in reference to the very point just brought out by the Senator from Utah. Would not that so reduce the quality of those goods that the actual wearing capacity of the article manufactured would not be half of what it would be if it were all wool, and would we not thereby compel the person who bought the cheaper suit in reality to buy two suits to equal the wearing value of the one all-wool suit?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the bad effects of the use of shoddy has never been demonstrated so thoroughly as during this war. You can take ladies' clothing manufactured to-day, costing more money than the same kind of article cost before the war, sometimes twice as much, and it is loaded with shoddy, and it does not wear half as long.

I called attention some time ago to the overcoating that was furnished our Government for our soldiers. I have seen soldiers' overcoats that could not possibly wear very long, 80 per cent of it being shoddy and only 20 per cent of it wool.

I now yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I rose to ask a question of the Senator, not to make a speech. Would it be any more difficult, in the Senator's judgment, to collect these taxes than taxes on telephone messages and telegrams and transportation?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. KENYON. I do not see why.

Mr. SMOOT. I will tell the Senator why. On telephone messages all that is necessary is to keep track of the number of telephone messages sent. Under the pending section say there are a dozen sales made in the same day at a price over the limit provided in the section, a record must be kept and return made on each sale showing amount of sale and tax collected. If it is a $60 suit of clothes sold, a deduction is made of $50; then a tax of 20 per cent is imposed on the balance, and a separate record must be made of the sale and report made. The only proper way to impose a tax is to impose it upon all of the sales, not a part of them. That is why it is hard of administration; and it is going to be very costly to administer.

If the Senate will take the position that every item enumerated in the section is an article of luxury and wants to impose a tax of 20 per cent upon them, then there would be some sense to a tax of that kind. Such a tax would be easy of administration. The House imposed this tax, as I said, not because these articles were luxuries per se, but because the House wanted to restrict the consumption of the articles enumerated, if possible. We all know that it takes the labor of the country to make these goods, and labor was wanted upon the farms, in the factories and machine shops. It was wanted in making munitions for the country and for our allies; and the provision was put in the bill more for the purpose of discouraging the production of such articles than it was for the imposition of the tax.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would not the same difficulties of collection apply to hunting and shooting garments and riding habits, which, on page 196, are taxed at the rate of 10 per cent, that would apply to the articles here?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no. That is a straight 10 per cent tax upon the sale of the article.

Mr. McKELLAR. Well, this would be a 20 per cent tax upon sales above a certain price.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and that is just where the difficulty comes in, not only of keeping account of it by the merchant but of reporting it to the department, and showing just what the tax was on a certain percentage of the sale. In other words, the whole transaction must be reported and kept track of in detail, whereas the other sales can be made in bulk.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I call the Senator's attention to two or three paragraphs following that cited by the Senator from Tennessee, where pleasure boats and canoes, if sold for more than $15, are required to pay a tax.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes, Mr. President. I will say to the Senator the reason for that is that there are little boats that are used for personal use in going to and from their homes; and we did not want to tax the individual or the family that only used a boat for such a purpose as that, and had to use it every day.

Mr. LENROOT. But it does present the same difficulty?

Mr. SMOOT. It does, as far as that goes; but, as I understand, there are only a few of these boats in the United States, and we did not want to impose a tax upon them.

Mr. THOMAS obtained the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Touching the matter taken up by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] with regard to the excise tax on automobile wagons, automobile trailers and tractors, I just want to say that a few days ago I introduced an amendment to strike that from the bill; and I shall take it up as soon as I can get the floor after the Senator from Colorado concludes.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator will not be able to take it up until the committee amendments are all disposed of.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It is a committee amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. An amendment to a committee amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I voted in the committee for the excision of this line of taxes, first, because I thought they were too high in view of the sudden and happy close of hostilities, and for the additional reason that the application of the term "luxury" to the great bulk of these articles was a misnomer; I also believed, and I still believe, that if the House provision is retained in the bill it will serve to place a premium upon the manufacture and sale of shoddy and imitation goods.

For instance, take the subject of clothing. A suit of clothes costing in excess of $50 under the provision of the bill requires the payment of a tax of 20 per cent upon the excess over that sum. I wonder if there is a Senator in the Chamber wearing a suit of woolen clothes which cost less than $50 if purchased within the last 12 months? Such a thing may be possible, but I do not think it is at all probable.

I am wearing a suit of clothes which cost me nearly $100. It is the first new suit of clothes that I have indulged in since the war began, and for some time previous to that period. It was made to order, and perhaps for that reason it cost more than would have been the case if I had bought it ready made, but owing to the symmetry of my figure and the perfection of my form it is impossible for me to obtain any custom-made clothing that will pass muster in the eyes of my wife, and I am therefore compelled to resort to the other method. I do not consider that I indulged in a luxury when I secured this suit of clothes.

We must remember, Mr. President, that the price of raw material has advanced enormously since the war began. Wool has increased several hundred per cent since the war began, and unless I am mistaken the price of wool to-day in the market is in excess of 65 cents a pound. That is raw wool. When scoured it shrinks fully 70 per cent. Consequently the actual wool in the raw material that is fit for manufacture will cost three times 65 cents, or $1.95 a pound. With wool at that market price, to say nothing of the increased cost to manufacture the cloth and make the suit, who will contend that a $50 suit of clothes is a luxury?

In this excluded list is an item of 20 per cent upon all rugs and carpets costing in excess of $5 per square yard, except those which are imported. To-day the sum of $5 will not secure the wool that goes into a square yard of carpet, and a carpet is not a luxury in this latitude. This is one item.

Take that of shoes. The price of shoes has increased some 200 or 300 per cent—200 per cent, at least—and as a consequence the price of good shoes ranges all the way from $10 up, and particularly shoes which are made for women, which are much more expensive than those which are made for men. Is it possible that we are to impose a tax of 20 per cent upon the excess of the cost of shoes to the consumer over the sum of $10 per pair?

Silk, Mr. President, has ceased to be a luxury. There are luxurious silken goods, but silk has become as common and as necessary a fabric as cotton and wool in the ordinary consumption of the day. All silken garments and articles of wearing apparel—neckties, even—have increased in price enormously; yet we are levying a tax upon silken goods as luxuries, when they form a part and parcel of the necessities of everyday life.

Much opposition was made to the consumption tax proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] of 1 per cent upon retail sales, because it was a tax upon consumption; yet, under the pretense that we are placing a tax upon luxuries, we propose to penalize the consumers of the country to the extent of a 20 per cent tax upon articles which they must have, which are necessities, and which I think they will surely resent if, under the guise of luxuries, this enormous tax is placed upon them.

There may be here and there a number of items in this excluded list which are not absolute necessities. It may be that ladies' fans are luxuries. It will be pretty hard to convince a woman that they are, especially in the summer time; and I know of few women who would be satisfied with a dollar fan in these times, for fans also have increased in price. But if more than that amount is paid a direct tax of 20 per cent is immediately placed upon the excess. Now, as a matter of fact, the excess will be largely, I think, above the minimum price fixed for this line of goods. It may be, now that hostilities have ceased, that prices will show a tendency toward reduction. I have not yet observed it, and I do not believe that appreciable reductions will appear for some time to come, because of the enormous demand for the necessaries of life which will at once exhibit itself when normal conditions shall have returned and the interchange of commerce between the nations really begins. So, Mr. President, I cast my vote in the committee, as I shall cast it here, for the excision of these items.

Now, Mr. President, a word upon another subject.

I was much impressed with the brief but graphic address of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] a few moments ago with regard to the war-profits and excess-profits schedule or title of this bill. My position upon that subject is known, though perhaps not as well known as it would have been if I had been honored with a greater attendance in the Senate a few days ago when I discussed my proposed substitute for the entire title. I fully agree with the Senator in his attitude regarding a tax upon war profits. I think they should be made the basis of an immense amount of the revenue that we propose to raise by this bill. The difficulty with the bill, however, is that it not only confounds so-called excess profits, condemned by the Secretary of the Treasury and by the President, with war profits, but it extends both to profits which are not the result of profiteering, not the result of the war, thereby combining and confounding the just with the unjust, the good with the bad, by treating them all alike.

I believe, too, that the war-profits tax should be extended to partnerships and to individuals, for there be profiteers and profiteers; and the corporation is not the only sinner, neither is the capitalist. The man who sells raw material, the man laboring in that raw material, who takes advantage of war conditions and demands undue profit or compensation, is a profiteer. His unjust gain may be comparatively small, but it is a profiteering gain just the same. This bill does not reach these people. This bill, on the contrary, exempts and excludes a very large class of individuals, and a comparatively large class of individuals associated together as partners, whose undue war profits we can reach only by a system of income-tax levies.

The Senator, of course, knows that Great Britain reaches this line of profiteers by a very heavy increase in its percentages of tax upon comparatively small incomes, but if we attempted to do that here we would at once awaken the same outcry against taxing the man of modest income, the poor man, that we have confronted under the provisions reported in the bill upon those subjects.

In the report of the House committee upon this bill, on page 8, is a table which illustrates what I am saying by a comparison of the income tax under the United Kingdom laws and under the laws of Canada and of France. It will be observed that where we get $30 on a given income of $2,500 Great Britain takes $210.94. If we go up to $5,000 the rate of levy under this bill is $180. The rate in the United Kingdom bill is $750. I will ask leave to print in my remarks page 8 of the House report upon the revenue bill of 1918, under which the enormous excess of percentages of income-tax rate upon small incomes in Great Britain as compared with ours is very graphically shown:

Income taxes upon specified incomes of married persons or heads of families with no dependents levied in the United States, United Kingdom, Canada, and France.

Income of married persons or heads of families.	United States tax under—				United Kingdom tax.				Canada.		France.
	Existing law.		Proposed bill.		Amount.		Rate (per cent).		Amount.	Rate (per cent).	Amount.	Rate (per cent).
	Amount.	Rate (per cent).	Amount.	Rate (per cent).	Unearned.	Earned.	Unearned.	Earned.
$2,500	$10	0.40	$30	1.20	$281.25	$210.94	11.25	8.44	$10.00	0.40	$31.25	1.25
$3,000	20	.67	60	2.00	445.31	356.25	14.84	11.87	20.00	.67	50.00	1.67
$3,500	30	.86	90	2.57	568.44	453.75	16.24	12.96	40.00	1.14	72.50	2.07
$4,000	46	1.00	120	3.00	725.56	581.25	18.16	14.53	60.00	1.50	97.50	2.44
$4,500	60	1.33	150	3.33	843.75	675.00	18.75	15.00	80.00	1.78	128.75	2.86
$5,000	80	1.60	180	3.60	937.50	750.00	18.75	15.00	100.00	2.00	160.00	3.20
$5,500	105	1.91	220	4.00	1,237.50	1,031.25	22.50	18.75	120.00	2.18	191.25	3.48
$6,000	130	2.16	260	4.33	1,350.00	1,125.00	22.50	18.75	140.00	2.33	222.50	3.71
$6,500	155	2.38	330	5.08	1,462.50	1,218.75	22.50	18.75	171.50	2.64	253.75	3.90
$7,000	180	2.57	400	5.71	1,575.00	1,312.50	22.50	18.75	203.00	2.90	285.00	4.07
$7,500	205	2.73	470	6.27	1,687.50	1,406.25	22.50	18.75	234.50	3.13	316.25	4.21
$8,000	235	2.93	545	6.81	2,100.00	1,800.00	26.25	22.50	266.00	3.33	347.50	4.34
$8,500	265	3.12	620	7.29	2,231.25	1,912.50	26.25	22.50	297.50	3.50	385.00	4.53
$9,000	295	3.28	695	7.72	2,362.50	2,025.00	26.25	22.50	329.00	3.66	422.50	4.69
$9,500	325	3.42	770	8.11	2,493.75	2,137.50	26.25	22.50	360.50	3.79	460.00	4.84
$10,000	355	3.55	845	8.45	2,625.00	2,250.00	26.25	22.50	392.00	3.92	497.50	4.98
$12,500	530	4.24	1,320	10.56	3,750.00	3,281.25	30.00	26.25	639.50	5.12	691.25	5.53
$15,000	730	4.87	1,795	11.97	4,812.50	4,812.50	32.08	32.08	887.00	5.91	910.00	6.07
$20,000	1,180	5.90	2,895	14.48	6,812.50	6,812.50	34.06	34.06	1,382.00	6.91	1,397.50	6.99
$25,000	1,780	7.12	4,245	16.98	8,937.50	8,937.50	35.75	35.75	2,042.00	8.17	1,960.00	7.84
$30,000	2,380	7.93	5,595	18.65	11,187.50	11,187.50	37.29	37.29	2,702.00	9.01	2,522.50	8.41
$35,000	2,980	8.51	7,195	20.56	13,562.50	13,562.50	38.75	38.75	3,472.00	9.92	3,147.50	8.99
$40,000	3,580	8.95	8,795	21.99	15,937.50	15,937.50	39.84	39.84	4,242.00	10.60	3,772.50	9.43
$45,000	4,380	9.73	10,645	23.66	18,437.50	18,437.50	40.97	40.97	5,012.00	11.14	4,397.50	9.77
$50,000	5,180	10.36	12,495	24.99	20,937.50	20,937.50	41.88	41.88	5,782.00	11.56	5,022.50	10.05
$55,000	5,980	10.87	14,095	26.72	23,562.50	23,562.50	42.84	42.84	6,827.00	12.41	5,647.50	10.27
$60,000	6,780	11.30	16,895	28.16	26,187.50	26,187.50	43.65	43.65	7,872.00	13.12	6,272.50	10.45
$70,000	8,880	12.69	21,895	31.26	31,437.50	31,437.50	44.91	44.91	9,962.00	14.23	7,772.50	10.75
$80,000	10,980	13.72	27,295	34.12	36,687.50	36,687.50	45.86	45.86	12,327.00	15.41	8,772.50	10.96
$100,000	16,180	16.18	39,095	39.10	47,187.50	47,187.50	47.19	47.19	17,607.00	17.61	11,272.50	11.27
$150,000	31,680	21.12	70,695	46.73	73,437.50	73,437.50	48.96	48.96	34,282.00	22.85	17,522.50	11.68
$200,000	49,180	24.59	101,095	50.55	99,687.50	99,687.50	49.84	49.84	50,957.00	25.48	23,772.50	11.80
$300,000	92,680	30.89	165,095	55.03	152,187.50	152,187.50	50.73	50.73	96,857.00	32.28	36,272.50	12.09
$500,000	192,680	38.54	297,095	59.42	257,187.50	257,187.50	51.44	51.44	195,407.00	39.08	61,272.50	12.25
$1,000,000	475,180	47.52	647,095	64.71	519,687.50	519,687.50	51.97	51.97	499,157.00	49.92	123,772.50	12.38
$5,000,000	3,140,180	62.80	3,527,095	70.54	2,619,687.50	2,619,687.50	52.39	52.39	3,415,157.00	68.30	623,772.50	12.48

It is a method and perhaps the only method for reaching the small profiteers, yet I do not believe there is a man within the sound of my voice who would vote for such a raise on incomes to-day, simply because it reaches too many people, it takes in too many profiteers; it gets the small profiteer as well as the large one.

I confess I should not advocate it myself for the very good reason that I do not believe in placing such a heavy hand upon the man with a legitimate income for the purpose of reaching the profiteering income of the man whose returns are practically at the same rate. I mention that——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. Just a moment. I mention that for the purpose of emphasizing the difficulty which the committee studying this very important and complex question would be confronted with, all along the line from the man with a $2,500 income to the man with an income of $100,000. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I was somewhat struck with the statement of the Senator that the application of the British rule was so widespread it would find no sanction here.

Mr. THOMAS. Only as to small incomes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. As to small incomes. But does not the Senator think that the virtue of an income tax lies or should lie in the universality of it?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That ought to apply to all incomes.

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly, to all income in excess of six or seven hundred dollars.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Any attempt to relieve classes of citizens is fraught with danger and ought to be avoided. I am sorry the Senator believes that a rule so universal would have no special favor here.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator misunderstands me. I believe that there is a very strong sentiment against placing high taxes upon small incomes. I do not believe there is a Senator here in favor of placing a large tax upon small incomes. The British tax upon small incomes is much more than twice as heavy as the American tax upon small incomes. I agree with the Senator that the exemptions from income tax should be very low, the lower the better.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Under the British system I believe the exemption is $640, but if this system is to be permanently successful it must be fair and just and apply to all people alike in proportion to their income. In that way invidious distinctions are avoided. I think there is no person so poor as that he would not be happy to contribute his mite toward the expenses of the Government if he had an opportunity to do so.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not think the Senator and I disagree. But to illustrate my contention let me call attention again to this table. Under the proposed law the amount collected from a $5,000 income would be $750 in Great Britain. The same income would pay $180 here. Take $7,500. Here the tax is $470. In Great Britain it is $1,687, or nearly four times as much. It would be impossible for us, if we would reach the small profiteer, to impose such enormous percentages of tax upon small incomes. The difficulty is one which can not be overcome by that means, and the small profiteer will escape that contribution which even under a 40 or 50 or 60 per cent war-profits tax the big profiteer must respond to.

Mr. President, before I take my seat I wish to refer to a little incident of this morning, and for which my genial and very dear friend the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] has taken me to task. During the remarks of the Senator from Iowa in support of this amendment I challenged his statement that Grover Cleveland was a Democrat. Let me assure my friend from Arizona, and the Senate as well, that I intended and I made no reflection whatever upon the character of the former President. Such was not my purpose. Of his honesty, of his integrity of purpose, I make no possible question. Of his courage no man can make any question. Indeed, his courage was, in my judgment, a defect rather than a merit in his official career, warped as it was in a wrong direction. An honest and courageous man in high position who goes wrong is more dangerous than one of weaker fiber. My remark was based upon the fact that Mr. Cleveland was elected by an overwhelming majority of the American people both in the popular vote and in the Electoral College upon a platform unmistakable in its meaning and voicing the sentiments of his supporters. He set his face against one of its principal features regardless of consequences. He found his party strong, supreme, and effective. He left his party ruined, broken into a thousand fragments, and doomed to an exile of many, many years. For this he was responsible more than any other man.

There can be no question, Mr. President, that the utter lack of harmony between the administration and the mass of the Democratic Party during the last two years of his last administration, due to his stubborn disregard of his party associates, doomed it to the calamity of political defeat. And everyone knows that Mr. Cleveland opposed his party in the campaign of 1896. It was for these reasons that I made protest to his democracy. I have made it frequently. I made it everywhere in 1896 and again in 1904, and so did many other Democrats far more prominent in its councils than I ever have been.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I shall occupy a very few moments. I desire to say to the Senate, and I trust I will not be misunderstood in saying it, that there is a very general desire that the Senate shall be at recess the balance of the week after to-day. It has transpired that that conviction has permeated the Senate to such an extent that it is now practically certain that there will not be a quorum of the Senate in the city after to-day. As it is very important that this bill shall pass the Senate and go to the House before the recess commences, I feel that I am taking no unreasonable liberty when I bring it to the attention of Senators that the bill will have to be passed to-day or we will be without a quorum and the bill be unpassed.

My object is to appeal to Senators on both sides of the Chamber to unite in the purpose to conclude the bill to-day and let it go to conference, in order that we may not break up here, as we certainly will have to do to-day, when there will be no quorum of the Senate in the city after to-day. I am assured that reservations have been made sufficient to demonstrate the fact that the bill must pass to-day or it will not pass this week and will not go to conference until after the 2d day of January.

I appeal to Senators to cooperate to that end. In doing that I know, of course, Senators will understand that I have no wish to interfere with any Senator who desires to express his views about the bill, but I want him to do it with a full knowledge of the situation, so that he may, as far as he is inclined to give his views, do so, but that he may limit his remarks, so that we may be enabled to reach a final disposition of the bill to-day, for if it goes to conference before the recess it must be passed to-day.

I am sure Senators will appreciate the need as fully as I do. I simply desired to bring to their attention the conditions which confront us and appeal to Senators on both sides of the Chamber to unite and cooperate in completing the bill to-day.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think the warning given by the Senator from Virginia is very timely and necessary. I think he has stated the absolute fact, but I want to say that it is a humiliation to me as a Senator to be required to stay here and attend to public business in face of the fact that so many seem to prefer a good holiday season at this critical period of American affairs to staying here and attending to the public business.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I had intended to speak for seven or eight minutes on this particular subject, but I appreciate the force of the suggestion and statement of the Senator from Virginia, and hence I will consume but three or four minutes.

There has been much doubt as to whether or not this was a mistake on the part of the committee. That doubt has been dispelled, and I am bound to say in seriousness that the speeches made by the chairman of the committee [Mr. SIMMONS], by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] have cleared up a good deal of misunderstanding as to what was the intent and purpose in striking from the bill this tax, which a great many Senators believe to be a tax on luxuries. I have no doubt the misapprehension arose from a statement that was given to the press by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who announced that all taxes on luxuries would be removed as soon as the committee could reach a report. I will read from the Toledo News-Bee, a newspaper printed in Toledo, Ohio, under date of November 23, 1918. The headline is:

War taxes to be lower soon, says Senator BOIES PENROSE.

The headlines continue as follows:

In the meantime be an optimist on America. Share prosperity. This is the view of Senate's tory leader.

That is the headline. Here is the editor's note:

One of the most powerful men in the Republican Party is Senator BOIES PENROSE, of Pennsylvania. He is also a silent man. Both in Republican national conventions and in the Senate he does his most effective work in committee rooms. He seldom makes speeches in the Senate, confining himself to keen-edged questions which are hard to answer on the spur of the moment. He is also very seldom interviewed. His views, as here set forth on the Nation's future and its finances, may be taken as the views of the dominant faction in the Republican Party, which expects to control the next Congress.

Then there is an article by Mr. Milton Bronner, a very celebrated writer, who says:

WASHINGTON, November 23.

On the immediate future of this country be a bull. In other words, be an American optimist. The country is in for prosperity which will be shared alike by the capitalist and the wage earner.

This is the view of Senator BOIES PENROSE, from the industrial State of Pennsylvania. PENROSE, as everybody knows, is the leader of the conservative, or tory, or reactionary forces in the Senate. He is the big boss of the Republican organization in Pennsylvania.

MAY BE A SENATE LEADER.

If the old leadership of the G. O. P. succeeds, he will be the chairman of the Finance Committee in the next Congress, and, therefore, will have a very large part in shaping the fiscal policy of the Nation.

Then follows the interview, and I am bound to say it is largely a very sane, statesmanlike paper; but the Senator from Pennsylvania, like Cyrano de Bergerac in the play, in his last line hit. I will read that paragraph. The Senator concludes his interview as follows:

It may be some consolation to know that those huge burdens of taxes will only be paid once. The annoying taxes of a smaller variety, taxes on transportation, sales, luxuries, and similar articles and transactions will be among the earliest to go.

To a wayfaring man, a Senator who is not on the Committee on Finance when a great bill is brought in of nearly 300 pages, the ranking member of the Republican minority announcing in advance that all taxes on luxuries would be removed, such Senators must be pardoned, when they see an appearance of taxes on luxuries having been removed, for believing that those appearances are justified, especially in view of the interview of the Senator from Pennsylvania, which announced that luxury taxes are to go.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator misunderstands the last declaration the Senator from Pennsylvania made, that transportation, sales, and luxury taxes must go. When he said that he was referring to some future time when we get rid of the war taxes. The transportation taxes are still in the bill. He could not have referred to their going out, because there never was any suggestion that they should go out. They have not been raised, however. They are the same as the present law. They have not been increased.

Mr. ASHURST. That is all I care to say, Mr. President.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I realize the great difficulty in bringing any number of Senators to a consideration of a review of their own conclusions, conclusions that are very often formed upon a mere surface glance at a provision without study, without considering any of the reasons, and immediately expressing themselves and finding themselves in a position where they must either plead guilty of inconsistency or else stay by their first conclusions. The Senator from Arizona has stated that for years he had been making speeches to his constituents in which he had proclaimed that it was the duty of Congress to lay good and strong and heavy taxes upon luxuries, and he sees something in the bill which he deems does not conform to that view, and immediately announces that he is against it and hopes that his party will be against it. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] immediately declares that he hopes that every Republican will vote against the amendment that was adopted by the committee, because as he views it is not conforming to his idea.

Now, let me put that question straight to the Senator from Arizona, and I think I will be able to get his own views, and I believe when I get them upon a true statement of the facts we will not very materially differ.

Mr. CURTIS. May I interrupt the Senator before he goes into that?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. What I said to-day did not relate to domestic luxuries. I asked for a very high duty on imported luxuries.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; and I will agree with that part, not only that we should have a duty but a high duty. The Senator from Arizona has said to one of his confiding constituents that it is his purpose as a Senator to see that in a tariff bill luxury shall be taxed, and the Senator hopes for the retention of the provision of the House to carry his own statement into effect. Now, let us see what the result will be.

If the Senator says to this constituent, "I know that you can not buy a good woman's coat, all wool, for less than $60 or $70, but you can buy cheaper goods—that is, an article 15 or 20 per cent shoddy for $40—and thereby I have taxed the luxury, but I have not taxed you," and if that constituent is a lady who knows anything about the worth and value of an article which she is buying she will say to the Senator, "Wool is not a luxury. I am entitled to a woolen coat; it is not a luxury and has never been considered as a luxury. It is true that I can buy a shoddy coat for $40, but my $70 suit will last me two years, while the shoddy suit I could wear only six months. If I am going to wear coats, I shall have to buy two of those shoddy suits or three to get the same value that I would get out of one of the $70 suits, which is all wool." Will not the good lady, the constituent of the Senator, immediately call his attention to the fact that instead of relieving her from paying this excessive tax he has compelled her to buy two suits where she ought to have bought but one? The Senator knows as well as I do any anyone else who has bought a shoddy article to wear that one good woolen suit of clothes for man or woman will outlast three suits that have even 10 or 15 per cent of shoddy in the mixture.

As a matter of fact, I do not care what your advertisements are in your papers, you can not go into the city of Washington to-day and buy a good woolen coat of wool, a winter coat, for $40 or even $50. I have some reasons for knowing.

I want to say that there are some articles in this list that probably could stand that tax, and it would apply only to those who are able to buy what you call luxuries, but remember that the suit of clothes which cost you $40 before the war, and which was not a luxury then, costs you $70 or $80 to-day. Now, you are getting the same thing. It is no more a luxury to-day because you have got to pay twice as much for it than it was a luxury before, and yet you are going to put a heavy tax on everyone who is already taxed to death in order to be able to buy that woolen suit.

Now, I come to shoes. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] says you can not get a good pair of shoes short of $10. I believe that is true. He is correct when he buys women's shoes, and probably he could get men's shoes that would be first class short of $10. You can buy a $6 shoe to-day, but is it economy on the part of those who can afford even to buy a $10 shoe to pay $10 for a pair of shoes that will last them 18 months rather than to pay $6 for a pair of shoes that will last them 6 months? Are you doing a kindness to that purchaser when you say to him or her we will compel you to buy a cheaper grade?

You can draw your own conclusion without a great deal of study, that if on a man's suit of clothes or a woman's suit of clothes that costs $50 you put a tax of 20 per cent on all the excess everyone knows that you are taxing a thing that 99 per cent of the people of the United States buy every day in the year, and you are putting a very unjust tax upon it; and you know further, if you know anything about manufacturers, that they will attempt the moment you pass this bill to manufacture one class of suits that can keep them just below the taxing amount, and to do that they have got to shoddy it enormously. They will manufacture the other of good wool, which every American citizen is entitled to have, and you will have a tax of $10, $20, $30, and $40 to pay. I ask the Senator if he considers that that is just to his constituents who want to buy woolen goods. I know that a pair of shoes that costs $10 is worth more than the difference between a pair of shoes that costs $6 or $5 in its wearing quality.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator has asked me a question, and I think I ought to answer it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly; I would just as soon have the Senator answer it now.

Mr. ASHURST. What the Senator has said about clothing and shoes is in the domain of true controversy, and I am bound to say it is quite true when he limits it possibly to clothing and shoes. I am not going to dispute his suggestion that when you go to get a good suit of clothes you have to pay $50. There is no doubt about that fact.

Mr. McCUMBER. You can not get a woolen suit of clothes to-day that is made up rightly and good to last for $50.

Mr. ASHURST. I will grant that, and in inveighing against this particular section, which I have said is also a tax on luxuries, I am going to ask the distinguished Senator from North Dakota this question: The House bill laid a tax on picture frames where each picture frame cost over $10. Does the Senator think a picture frame that costs $10 is a luxury or not?

Mr. McCUMBER. I say you would not want one for $10 that you would have in your house.

Mr. ASHURST. I say a picture frame that costs over $10 when you are constantly appealed to to be economical is a luxury. I know that boys of the age of 15 and 25 frequently want to have their neckties and socks match in color and I respectfully assert that a necktie that costs over $2 is a luxury.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well. The person who buys a $2 necktie has parted with $2; he has paid somebody a profit, and somebody who made that profit is going to be taxed. That is all.

Mr. ASHURST. So I could go on down the bill. I repeat, I am bound in fairness to say that the Senator from North Dakota makes a very strong point with reference to shoes and with reference to clothing, but there are in the bill items other than those relating to shoes and clothing.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to suggest that the purpose of the other House, as I understand, in fixing the tax upon picture frames costing in excess of $10 was not to tax a luxury, but to prohibit a certain line of commerce during the war.

Mr. McCUMBER. That was the purpose of all of these provisions.

Mr. THOMAS. It was the purpose of all of them.

Mr. McCUMBER. The purpose was not to collect anything out of them; but the operation of the tax and the natural effect of it, as a whole, would be enormously to tax people who are now paying extravagant prices for everything which they purchase.

I further yield to the Senator from Arizona now, if he has not finished.

Mr. ASHURST. The House bill, among other things, laid a tax on boys' pajamas where they cost over $5. I think that in these times, when we are urging contributions for the Red Cross and when we are all trying to buy liberty loan bonds, the ordinary American boy would be satisfied with a pair of $4.50 pajamas. I think a pair of pajamas costing over $5 may, in fairness, be considered a luxury. Indeed, there are very few of the sons of toil, those who produce the wealth, who, in my judgment, wear pajamas at all.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will say that I do not, and I do not know anything about pajamas. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. Neither do I; and that is the reason I think they are a luxury.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know what they cost; I have an idea, however, that if they are woolen they may not be purchased for $5.

Mr. ASHURST. That may be true.

Mr. McCUMBER. And I rather think that your mountaineers or your men out on the plains in the cold season in Arizona are entitled to woolen pajamas.

Mr. SIMMONS. This is also a tax on men's and women's pajamas as well as on boys' pajamas.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not care to say anything further. I am going to be fair enough to admit that a vast deal which has been said by the Senator from North Dakota is true, but I maintain my original ground that a vast number of these articles from which the tax has been excluded, in the domain of honest intellectual expression and by the standard of ordinary Americans, are luxuries.

Mr. McCUMBER. Well, it may be that we could pick out a few of those that one does not very often buy, where you might call the price above the price that is fixed as being somewhat luxurious; but there are very few of them to-day which I think would come under the category of luxuries.

However, let me ask the Senator from Arizona another question, and it is based upon an entirely different view of this whole subject. We purpose in this bill to tax incomes, and we propose to tax incomes all they will stand. If we have not done it, then we have not gone far enough on some of the incomes; that is all. Is it not a far better way to do to tax the income and then let a man spend his money, paying such prices as he sees fit for the clothing he buys or for the carpet he buys to put down on his floor? We may tax the dog woman of whom the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] was speaking, by taxing her income so greatly that she can not afford to keep the fluffy dog and the fluffy man to lead him around. Would that not be a far better way to meet that situation than it would be by placing a tax on collars, for instance, to put on dogs?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, when the Senator from North Dakota begins to talk in favor of the income tax, his feet are on rib rock; his position is impregnable; and with merely one amendment the income tax would be almost a perfect tax; that is, if we required the returns to be made a public record we should have, in my opinion, almost an ideal tax.

Mr. McCUMBER. That may be a subject as to which there might be considerable disagreement; but I am trying to speak to this provision and to see whether or not we really ought to impose a tax.

I desire to carry my thought a little further along that line; and that is as to the right of individuals when they have earned their money and when they have paid their proportion of tax out of that money to do as they have a mind to do with what they have left. One man may make a sum of money and think he wants to travel, and he uses his money in travel. He goes over to Europe, and he views the battle fields. That is what he does with what remnant of his salary or of his income that he has left. Another man would prefer to buy a little better carpet for his home. Why not let men spend their money in that way so long as the Government has taken its share out of that money?

I know people even in this city who, I do not think, have enough to eat; they skimp and economize in every way in order that they may go to the theater two or three times a week. They enjoy the theater more than they do a good meal. I might enjoy a good meal with my family better than I would enjoy going to the theater. Then why, in heaven's name, can you not let the other man and his family go to the theater and spend his money in that way and let me buy a little better carpet for my home and enjoy my fireside? Why should you make the distinction where it is not necessary to do so?

I do not object to a tax on luxuries; tax them all you have a mind to if they are real luxuries, but do not measure the price of an article in war times in order to determine whether or not it is a luxury. If we were to determine the standards of what is and what is not a luxury by the standard of the price to-day, I do not know a thing you can buy that would not be classed as a luxury. All articles cost from two to three times as much in price as they did before the beginning of this war, and they are still going up. I do not want to send the $60 coat up to $70, for I know the American people have got to buy. I do not want to send the $10 pair of shoes or the $12 pair of shoes, if they are the only pair of shoes one can get which are good, up to a price which will be three or four dollars more and which is still added to by making the tax a little higher.

An ordinary pair of boots for an officer now costs him $35, where before the war he could have bought as good a pair of boots for $8 or $9. Taking your standard of shoes at $10, at $20, or $25, he must pay 20 per cent tax on them.

The Senator says that some of these things could stand a luxury tax, and that is true; they could stand a luxury tax. In other words, people could buy something, maybe, a little cheaper which, in some instances, might last practically as long, but there is no need for the provisions under this title. That is one good reason against the whole of it. There is no occasion for it; we raise enough taxes without it. If we raise enough taxes without taxing everybody for practically everything that he buys, let us do it, for, God knows, what one buys now is heavy enough in its price.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there are no luxury taxes imposed in this bill. This is a part of the title which is called "Excise taxes," and in section 900 there are a number of articles which are purely luxuries; that is, they are articles which are not in the least essential to life, but as to these particular ones which it is now proposed to strike out I think almost every article is a necessity. What the other House has done was to arbitrarily say that above a certain price these articles ought to be taxed.

In the first part of the bill, for instance, it is proposed to tax pianos and all mechanical musical talking devices. It is proposed to tax sporting goods, firearms, hunting knives, cigarette holders, liveries, livery boots and hats, hunting and shooting garments, articles made of fur, yachts and motor boats, toilet soaps, and toilet powders. Those are luxuries that are included there. These are additional taxes based solely on price. Hardly any of them may properly be described as luxuries in themselves. On trunks and valises, purses, portable lighting fixtures, umbrellas, men's and women's clothing, boots, shoes, and everything of that sort which make up the mass of these taxes, 20 per cent additional taxes are imposed.

We say arbitrarily that if a man pays more than $50 for a suit of clothes he ought to be taxed. It is not because it is a luxury, for he has got to have the suit of clothes. Though it is a necessity that he should have a $40 suit, it is assumed that it becomes a luxury if he buys a $51 suit. It is not a luxury in either case; it is an arbitrary determination that above a certain price we shall tax these suits, because the theory is that the people who are ready to pay more than that amount for a given article are able to pay the tax. From the practical side, the effect will undoubtedly be to make people buy the cheaper article, just under the line, and thus avoid the tax.

These taxes went out on the recommendation of the Treasury. They were put in the bill originally to meet the exigencies of war; they had been put in to furnish taxes very late in the war, when it was sought in every corner to obtain revenue. When it was found that we could reduce the amount of the bill, this was one of the taxes that the Treasury recommended should be eliminated, because it was said the cost and difficulty of its administration would be very great, and it would throw the retail business of the country on all these articles, which in themselves are necessities, into great confusion.

These taxes will not fall with any great weight upon that abominable class who are known as rich people; they will fall quite as much upon people of ordinary means who may like to have a good suit of clothes and save their money for that purpose. They will either have to buy an inferior article or pay the tax. The rich who will pay it will not feel it materially at all; but business will feel it, and people who have to look at the dollars they spend will feel it, and they will be the only people who will feel this tax.

I voted very cheerfully to strike it out in the committee, because it seems to me an annoying and troublesome tax, injurious to business, extremely difficult of collection, serving no good purpose, and only defensible at a time when we needed to exhaust every source of taxation.

The general policy, which I am not going to enter into now, has been adopted of avoiding, so far as possible, consumption taxes. Every one of these is a consumption tax, and therefore, when it came to striking out the provision, if I am not mistaken, the vote in the committee was unanimous to strike it out.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, is the Senator quite sure that the vote in the committee was unanimous? I have been told it was not unanimous.

Mr. LODGE. Possibly not. The majority, however, in favor of striking out the provision was certainly very large; but that is wholly immaterial as to the merits of the question. I thought that it was so nearly unanimous that the opposition was not noticeable.

Mr. President, I do not wish to take the time of the Senate, but I want to call attention to one or two articles to illustrate what I mean. I think we may say that a carpet is a necessity. There are people, of course, who live without carpets; life can be supported without carpets; but I think in our climate—or, as Mark Twain said: "We have no climate; we only have weather"—in our weather, I think, an umbrella may be described as a necessity. I have observed periods in Washington when I thought a fan might have been described as a necessity. I should say men's waistcoats; men's and boys' suits and overcoats; women's and misses' suits, cloaks, and coats; women's and misses' hats and bonnets; men's and boys' hats; men's and boys' caps; men's, women's, misses,' and boys' boots and shoes; men's and boys' neckties and neckwear—all are necessities. Silk stockings, I may say, are purely luxuries. Men's shirts—a man can go without a shirt; one is not absolutely necessary. Men's pajamas; kimonos, petticoats, and waists.

Now, I have read nearly all of the items, and they are of themselves necessities; yet it is proposed to say that above a certain price they shall be taxed. That does not make them luxuries; that is simply an arbitrary determination that when they cost above a certain amount we shall tax them.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator is a very fair debater and is a very scholarly and able man. He has selected certain articles which I am bound to concede are necessities, but he can not in debate merely select one thing from the text and wrench it from its context and make it stand apart.

Mr. LODGE. I think I omitted all the things that can possibly be described as luxuries.

Mr. ASHURST. To attempt to sustain my position, I want the Senator to be frank, as I know he will be, as to the items that I am about to mention, as he has been as to the others. Take the top of page 200, where the House puts a tax on purses, pocketbooks, and hand bags that cost in excess of $7.50. Does not the Senator think in these times that a hand bag or a purse that costs in excess of $7.50 is a luxury?

Mr. LODGE. I did not mention those articles as necessities.

Mr. ASHURST. I know the Senator did not, but the Senator selected a number of articles which he said were necessities.

Mr. LODGE. I read them and stated that I read nearly all, and I did read nearly all. Purses may be called a luxury.

One can carry bills in an envelope and his change loose in his pocket; I know that.

Mr. ASHURST. That is not the point exactly.

Mr. LODGE. I am perfectly willing to assume that a portable lighting fixture is not a necessity.

Mr. ASHURST. Very true.

Mr. LODGE. One may use a candle.

Mr. ASHURST. Now, take the item on line 8—smoking jackets.

Mr. LODGE. I did not read that item; that is a luxury, I admit.

Mr. ASHURST. The distinguished Senator has been just as fair as I thought he would be. The only point I sought to make was that there were some articles in the list that were luxuries.

Mr. LODGE. There are a few.

Mr. ASHURST. That is all there is to the controversy.

Mr. LODGE. I omitted silk stockings, but I think most of the articles in the paragraph in themselves are necessities. All we do here is to say that above a certain price we will tax them. We do not say they are luxuries; it is a misnomer to call them luxuries; they have not been so mentioned in the bill at all; but we fix an arbitrary price and say we will tax them. Mr. President, when we come to argue what people need, I think there are some lines in Shakespeare that show the difficulty of defining such a thing, as, for instance, where King Lear is made to say:

> Oh, reason not the need; our basest beggars
> Are in the poorest things superfluous.
> Allow not nature more than nature needs;
> Man's life's as cheap as beast's.

I think we can not lay down any hard-and-fast line of that kind. As I have said, these taxes are defensible only on a war basis. We have reduced the taxes in this bill $2,000,000,000, and we propose to eliminate a few millions dollars by striking out a tax which the administration urges us to take out, a tax that would be difficult to collect and difficult of administration, extremely annoying, and the kind of tax which I think is much better out of the bill than in it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me, it was put in before the war closed, was it not?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; it was put in by the House.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And it was put in for the purpose of discouraging investment in that kind of articles?

Mr. LODGE. Absolutely; that was its purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And now the reason for it has passed.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I simply wish to say that I know, as a matter of fact, that the Committee on Ways and Means put this provision in the bill because at the time it seemed to be necessary in order to get the amount of revenue required, and also for the reason the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] has just given. I know that many of the members of that committee would like to see these taxes go out of the bill.

Mr. President, I think that the Senate clearly understands this matter, and I hope we may have a vote upon it. If we are going to discuss every item that is likely to come up to-day as long as we have discussed this item, of course there will be no possibility of passing this bill by midnight to-night. I had hoped that it would not be necessary to keep the Senate here until midnight, but we can not pass it even by that time; we can not pass it in a week if we devote as much time to other provisions as we have devoted to this provision.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, on this question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not think the Senate understands what they are voting on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it should be understood by the Senate by this time.

Mr. SIMMONS. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; and that strikes out the House text. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRANDEGEE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BAIRD] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). I am paired for the time being with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]. I do not know how he would vote on this amendment, and therefore I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and vote "nay."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], which does not apply to votes hereafter to be taken on this bill nor to this one. If present, he would vote as I shall vote. Therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. As he is absent, I will transfer that pair to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] and vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GERRY (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. GERRY. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York, which I transfer to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], who is absent. As I am unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON]; and

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS].

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—32.

Bankhead	Knox	Saulsbury	Sutherland
Brandegee	Lewis	Simmons	Swanson
Culberson	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.	Thomas
Dillingham	McCumber	Smith, Ga.	Underwood
Gerry	Martin, Va.	Smith, Md.	Warren
Gore	Moses	Smith, Mich.	Watson
Henderson	Page	Smoot	Williams
Jones, N. Mex.	Penrose	Spencer	Wolcott

NAYS—38.

Ashurst	Hale	La Follette	Poindexter
Beckham	Harding	Lenroot	Pollock
Borah	Hitchcock	McKellar	Pomerene
Chamberlain	Johnson, Cal.	McNary	Shafroth
Cummins	Johnson, S. Dak.	Martin, Ky.	Sheppard
Curtis	Kellogg	Nelson	Trammell
Fernald	Kendrick	Norris	Vardaman
Fletcher	Kenyon	Nugent	Weeks
France	King	Overman
Gronna	Kirby	Phelan

NOT VOTING—26.

Baird	Hardwick	Pittman	Sterling
Calder	Hollis	Ransdell	Thompson
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Reed	Townsend
Fall	McLean	Robinson	Wadsworth
Frelinghuysen	Myers	Sherman	Walsh
Gay	New	Shields
Goff	Owen	Smith, S. C.

So the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I ask the Senator in charge of the bill to permit me to report from the Committee on Military Affairs an emergency bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall yield for that purpose, because the Senator from Nebraska tells me that it will take only a few minutes to read the bill and that it will lead to no debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside.

INDEMNITY FOR DAMAGES IN FRANCE.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. From the Committee on Military Affairs, I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 5213) to amend the act approved April 18, 1918, to give indemnity for damages caused by American forces abroad, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved April 18, 1918, entitled "An act to give indemnity for damages caused by American forces abroad," be amended by adding the following section:

"SEC. 5. That this act shall be held to include claims for damages or remuneration arising out of contracts, informal purchase orders, or other obligations for supplies for the American military forces in Europe given by authorized representatives of such forces prior to November 12, 1918, and later canceled, reduced, or discontinued."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, by way of explanation of this measure I will say that the Secretary of War forwards me a cablegram received from Gen. Pershing, in which he states that the armistice found some 2,000 contracts or informal orders that have been made for supplies that are not now needed, and he desires immediate authority to cancel them and settle them. He says that it can be done at once at a very much less cost than if it is allowed to delay, and damages accumulate; and this bill simply adds to the power of settlement of claims granted in a bill which was passed last summer.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, does this bill confer upon Gen. Pershing the unlimited power to settle them according to his discretion? I am very much opposed to this way of settling these matters.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It permits the officers in charge of our purchases over there to cancel and settle claims for supplies ordered in good faith, in order that the contracts, instead of being carried out and resulting in the accumulation of large supplies, may be cut off now.

Mr. BORAH. I am perfectly willing to have the contracts canceled; but what I want to know more about is, who is to pass upon the amount of damage which is to be done by reason of the stoppage?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The same officials who were allowed to pass upon the damages incurred by our troops over there in the bill that we passed last summer. Those damages are constantly arising, and we gave to the authorities under Gen. Pershing the power to cancel and settle them. The bill gives large powers, but the amount involved in this case is not very large. I will say to the Senator that the question is now pending as to how we can settle the contracts in this country. It has been proposed to give the War Department officials the power to settle them, but we think the amount involved is so huge that a commission should be appointed, and we shall probably report a bill for that purpose. We think, however, that in the case of these 2,000 contracts and informal orders in France, a great deal of money will be saved by giving Gen. Pershing the power to settle them at once. He states in this cablegram that the total amount of the settlement will not exceed $3,000,000, and he says:

Delay in payment would naturally very much increase the amount. The contractors will be embarrassed, and many of them perhaps ruined if relief can not be given at once. They are willing to accept reasonable terms now, but if compelled to wait, their claims will be greatly augmented and heavy damages may have to be paid.

Mr. BORAH. It will be understood, I suppose, that this is no precedent for this kind of a settlement in this country?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; I am very much opposed to doing anything of that sort in this country. I believe there ought to be a commission for that purpose.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, one is at a great disadvantage in knowing whether or not it is a good precedent for any place, and is not in a position to object, perhaps, by reason of that fact; but it should not be considered for a moment the proper method of settling damages here.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I agree with the Senator fully in that matter, and I will say that the committee agrees with him fully, but regards this as an absolute necessity.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator if this bill does not carry with it the validation of very informal and not strictly legal contracts?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It probably does.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And it is to give dignity to that kind of contracts and then allow them to be settled?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. On matters that have been ordered informally over there under the stress of war and which would have been paid in the normal course of events, which we want to settle promptly now.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has an amendment which he desires to offer.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] submitted an amendment to the committee some days ago and asked me to present it to the committee and then report it to the Senate. I now offer that amendment. It is as follows:

On page 132, line 14, insert:

Provided, however, That the amount of the tax shall be finally determined by the commissioner within five years after the decedent's death, unless the due date is extended by the commissioner, in which case such tax shall be finally determined by the commissioner within one year after the termination of the extended period.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I accept that amendment. It has been presented to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 132, in the amendment of the committee, in section 410, at the end of line 14, after the word "paid," it is proposed to insert a colon and the following:

Provided, however, That the amount of the tax shall be finally determined by the commissioner within five years after the decedent's death, unless the due date is extended by the commissioner, in which case such tax shall be finally determined by the commissioner within one year after the termination of the extended period.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I call the chairman's attention to page 226 of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. We are not through with the committee amendments yet.

Mr. MCCUMBER. This is on a committee amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is it an amendment to a committee amendment?

Mr. MCCUMBER. Yes; on page 226.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will allow me to offer some committee amendments first——

Mr. MCCUMBER. This is an amendment which was really agreed to by the committee, as I understand, and which we failed to insert in the bill.

On page 226 the Senate struck out lines 15 to 20, relating to the Harrison Drug Act. Before the committee there was a proposition made compelling druggists who compounded any of these habit-forming drugs also to keep a list of the persons to whom they furnished them, a list of the goods, and so forth. I notice that it is not in the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is correct. I shall accept the amendment.

Mr. MCCUMBER. The experts have drawn it, and I ask that it be inserted. It is on page 226, line 15, section 1009.

That section 6 of such act of December 17, 1914, is amended by striking out the period after the word "act" at the end of the proviso, and adding a colon and the following:

"Provided further, That a record is kept by the manufacturer, producer, or compounder of such preparations, remedies, and specifics containing such drugs, or by the dealer who knowingly sells the same, giving the date, quantity, name, and address of persons to whom such remedies, preparations, or specifics are sold, distributed, given away, or dispensed."

I offer that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have some amendments which I wish to present.

On page 5, line 25, after the word "title," I move to insert in parentheses the words "excepting section 246."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. On page 51, lines 18 and 19, I move to strike out the words "paragraphs (1) to (10), inclusive, of subdivision (a) of."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment at that point was agreed to will be reconsidered. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I send to the desk several committee amendments which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 23, line 19, it is proposed to amend section 213 by striking out the words "and including."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. Also, at the end of line 21, insert——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, before that is reached, in relation to the amendment just prior to that on line 19, does the Senator mean to strike out the words "and including"?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Would that make sense, Mr. President? It does not seem to me that it would.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it would not, but that does not make any difference.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think one of the words should be left in. If the amendment as proposed by the Senator is adopted, it would read:

Or other interest-bearing obligations of residents, corporate or otherwise, dividends from resident corporations.

It does not seem to me to be intelligible.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was going to offer another amendment. It is not intelligible without the other amendment which I am going to offer right now.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If there is something else that will make it intelligible, I have no objection, but with the amendments being offered one at a time in this way it is impossible to see what it is desired to accomplish.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am going to offer another amendment in that same connection.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well; I have no objection.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask to have the next amendment stated.

The SECRETARY. On line 19 strike out the words "and including," and at the end of line 19 add the words "and including all amounts received (although paid under a contract for the sale of goods or otherwise) representing profits on the manufacture and disposition of goods within the United States."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, before these amendments are agreed to I should like to have the amendment read as it will be if agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Very well. I will send it up. It was due to inadvertence that I did not send it up.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed on page 23, line 19, to strike out the words "and including," which has been agreed to, and at the end of line 19, after the word "corporations," to insert "and including all amounts received (although paid under a contract for the sale of goods or otherwise) representing profits on the manufacture and disposition of goods within the United States," so that if amended the paragraph will read:

(c) In the case of nonresident alien individuals, gross income includes only the gross income from sources within the United States, including interest on bonds, notes, or other interest-bearing obligations of residents, corporate or otherwise, dividends from resident corporations, and including all amounts received (although paid under a contract for the sale of goods or otherwise) representing profits on the manufacture and disposition of goods within the United States.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is intelligible now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the same amendment has to appear at another place in the bill, on page 53. I send it to the desk and ask to have it stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 53, line 21, strike out the words "and including," the first two words in the line, and after "corporations," at the end of the line, insert the same words as before.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. I send to the desk another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 60, line 5, in the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out the numerals "13" within brackets and insert "10."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the committee amendment at that point was agreed to will be reconsidered.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. I send another amendment to the desk and ask to have it stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 64, lines 7 and 8, it is proposed to strike out the words "not exempt under subdivisions (1) to (13) of section 231" and in lieu thereof to insert the words "subject to taxation under this title, and every personal-service corporation."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. I send to the desk another amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 225, lines 11 and 12, it is proposed to strike out the words "in personal attendance upon such patient."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. I send to the desk a series of amendments, which simply provide for filling in dates where we struck out the dates as the bill passed the House, and left blanks, because the bill will not be passed as early as the House thought it would.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 137, line 3, after the matter stricken out, it is proposed to insert, in the blank, "April 1, 1919."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 177, line 22, before the comma insert "May 1, 1919."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 188, line 12, after the matter stricken out insert "April 1, 1919."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 191, line 24, insert "April 1, 1919."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 202, line 8, after the matter stricken out, insert "April 1, 1919."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 204, line 4, insert in lieu of the blank the word "May."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 205, line 3, after the matter stricken out, insert "May 1, 1919."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 228, line 13, after the matter stricken out, insert "April 1, 1919."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from North Carolina a question. Was the amendment on page 202, line 20, providing for a reduction from 10 per cent to 5 per cent on jewelry, precious stones, and so forth, adopted?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; that has been adopted.

Mr. KENYON. I was anxious to have a vote on that amendment, but I suppose it will not do any good to have it reconsidered. I therefore think perhaps I will not ask for a vote, as it will do no good.

Mr. SIMMONS. We reduced one-half nearly all of those taxes that have been imposed by the House. Some of them we did not reduce, however.

Mr. KENYON. It occurs to me, in view of the fact that section 905 remains in the bill, providing for a 20 per cent tax above certain amounts, that these other reductions are not now in harmony with that section. I will content myself with expressing opposition to that reduction, however, and will not take up time in asking for another vote.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not think the amendment on page 47, beginning at line 23, has been agreed to. I will ask the Chair if that is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 137, in subdivision (a), where the committee proposes to strike out all of lines 12, 13, 14, and 15.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, just a moment. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] desired to make some observations with reference to that amendment, but he is not in the Chamber. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] is present, and I should like to take up the title of "Inheritance tax."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, on page 123, line 23, I have moved to strike out——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the vote to be reconsidered whereby that amendment was agreed to?

Mr. THOMAS. Why, Mr. President, it has not been agreed to. I reserved the right when the title was reached to make this motion. It is to strike out all after the word "decedent" on line 23 of page 123.

It will be observed, Mr. President, that the paragraph to which the motion relates requires an inheritance tax to be paid upon the receipt by a beneficiary of an amount of insurance in excess of $25,000 under policies taken out by the decedent upon his own life.

In effect, that means that if a man has a policy of insurance upon his life for anything in excess of $25,000 an inheritance tax is levied upon the excess.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think we will agree to the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not care to take up the time of the Senate if the chairman of the committee and the Senate are willing to accept the amendment. I may say, however, it will require the striking out of certain other portions of the title in order to make it harmonize.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; that can be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote whereby the amendment was agreed to is, without objection, reconsidered.

Mr. THOMAS. There has been no vote taken upon it at all; at least, I am so informed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair knows a few things, and the Chair knows that this amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not pretend to know anything; but I know, however, that when this page was reached I reserved the right to make this motion, and I was informed that the entire title would have to be suspended until that motion was disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The fact about the matter is that I suppose nobody knows.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not want to be put in a position of differing with the Chair.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let a motion be made to reconsider.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is reconsidered, without objection.

Mr. THOMAS. Then the amendment is presented; and I understand the chairman of the committee will accept it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 123, beginning at line 23, after "decedent," strike out: "and (3) the receipt by a beneficiary of an amount of insurance in excess of $25,000 under policies taken out by the decedent upon his own life."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is to strike out that paragraph.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; to strike out the paragraph.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to striking it out? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is agreed to. Are there other amendments to the inheritance title?

Mr. LODGE. Some other amendments will be necessary now that that amendment has been made.

Mr. GERRY. I will offer the amendments. On page 131, line 9, there was an insertion and an amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. An amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. GERRY. That should be stricken out.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What was the amendment agreed to?

The SECRETARY. To insert after the word "taxes," in line 9, page 131:

INHERITANCE TAXES.

Each beneficiary of an amount of insurance in excess of $25,000 under policies taken out by the decedent upon his own life shall within 20 days after coming into possession of such insurance give written notice thereof to the collector, and shall also at such time and in such manner as may be required by regulations made pursuant to law file with the collector a return under oath setting forth (a) the total insurance received, (b) such additional data as may be necessary to establish the correct tax, and (c) the tax paid or payable thereon. At the same time or upon his later appointment a duplicate of such return shall also be furnished the executor. The beneficiary shall pay the tax upon such insurance to the executor within 30 days after receipt of the amount, or, if the executor has not then been appointed, within 30 days after such appointment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the vote whereby the amendment was adopted. It is reconsidered, without objection. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GERRY. On page 133, line 1, another amendment should be made. I ask the Secretary to state it.

The SECRETARY. After the word "decedent" in line 1 of the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] was agreed to, which inserted a comma and the words "except payment of insurance upon the life of the decedent."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote whereby it was adopted will be reconsidered, without objection, and the amendment rejected.

Mr. GERRY. On page 133, line 19, after the word "transferee," there was inserted "except payment of insurance upon the life of the decedent."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote whereby the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered, without objection, and the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. GERRY. On page 134, line 12, after the word "period," there were inserted the words "except where such annuities or limited estates are created in the proceeds of insurance taxable under this title."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered and, without objection, the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. GERRY. That covers all the amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further amendment to the so-called inheritance-tax title?

Mr. SIMMONS. There are two amendments on page 137, lines 12 to 15.

The VICE PRESIDENT. But this is another section. Are there further amendments to the inheritance-tax amendment?

Mr. SIMMONS. There are no other amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then it is agreed to as amended, without objection.

Mr. JONES of Washington. There are two committee amendments on page 137 that went over at my request. I understand that the chairman of the committee is willing to have those two amendments rejected.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Therefore I will not take the time of the Senate to refer to them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 137, beginning at line 12, strike out the words "and a like tax on the amount paid for such transportation within the United States of property transported from a point without the United States to a point within the United States," so as to read:

TITLE V.—TAX ON TRANSPORTATION AND OTHER FACILITIES, AND ON INSURANCE.

SEC. 500. That from and after ——— there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid, in lieu of the taxes imposed by section 500 of the revenue act of 1917—

(a) A tax equivalent to 3 per cent of the amount paid for the transportation on or after such date, by rail or water or by any form of mechanical motor power when in competition with carriers by rail or water, of property by freight transported from one point in the United States to another.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 137, after "another," to strike out the following words: "and a like tax on the amount paid for such transportation within the United States of property transported from a point without the United States to a point within the United States," so as to read:

(b) A tax of 1 cent for each 20 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid to any person for the transportation on or after such date, by rail or water or by any form of mechanical motor power when in competition with express by rail or water, of any package, parcel, or shipment, by express, transported from one point in the United States to another.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Are the committee amendments disposed of?

Mr. SIMMONS. No.

The SECRETARY. An amendment passed over is on page 176, line 17, after the word "half," to insert "of one"; in line 19, after the word "to," to strike out "30" and insert "15"; in line 20, after the word "all," to strike out "unfermented grape juice"; in line 23, after the word "drinks," to insert "(except fruit or berry juice)"; at the beginning of line 26, to strike out "20" and insert "10"; on page 177, line 3, after the word "containers," to strike out "at over 10 cents per gallon"; and, at the beginning of line 4, to strike out "of 2 cents per gallon" and insert "equivalent to 5 per cent of the price for which so sold," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 628. That there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in lieu of the taxes imposed by sections 313 and 315 of the revenue act of 1917—

(a) Upon all beverages derived wholly or in part from cereals or substitutes therefor, and containing less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol, sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, in bottles or other closed containers, a tax equivalent to 15 per cent of the price for which so sold; and upon all ginger ale, root beer, sarsaparilla, pop, artificial mineral waters (carbonated or not carbonated), other carbonated waters or beverages, and other soft drinks (except fruit or berry juice), sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, in bottles or other closed containers, a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the price for which so sold; and

(b) Upon all natural mineral waters or table waters sold by the producer, bottler, or importer thereof, in bottles or other closed containers, a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the price for which sold.

This was passed over at the request of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. SIMMONS. I think we can act on the amendment now. The senior Senator from Wisconsin has presented a substitute for the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 197, to insert lines 1 and 2, in the following words:

(18) Articles made out of any fur, or articles of which fur is the component material of chief value, 10 per cent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That was passed over at the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER].

Mr. LODGE. I suggest that that be passed over for a minute until the Senator from Missouri returns.

Mr. SIMMONS. It can be passed over.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over was on page 251, at the request of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], following line 3, to strike out "from lists of eligibles to be supplied by the Civil Service Commission, and in accordance with the civil-service law," and to insert "as provided by law."

Mr. SMOOT. I have been assured by the Civil Service Commission or the officials of the commission that the wording as adopted would cover all that I intended to cover by the amendment that I proposed to submit. Therefore I shall not ask for a vote upon it but will let it be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary informs the Chair that this completes all the committee amendments except the one passed over at the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER].

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Missouri is not in, and I should like to call attention to section 905. I want to ask the Senator from Iowa if he desires that section to remain as it is. There were certain amendments that were offered in the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. On what page?

Mr. SMOOT. Page 199. There were certain amendments to this section adopted by the committee. As to the first one, I want to ask the Senator from Iowa if he desires the bill to remain just as it passed the House? Before he answers I wish to tell him what effect it will have, and I think he will agree that the amendment that was agreed to by the Finance Committee ought to be adopted. The provision in the bill as it passed the House reads:

SEC. 905. (a) That on and after November 1, 1918, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a tax equivalent to 20 per cent of so much of the amount paid for any of the following articles as in excess of the price hereinafter specified as to each such article, when such article is sold on or after such date for consumption or use.

That means that if the manufacturer sells it 20 per cent is imposed upon him; then on the jobber who buys it there will be 20 per cent imposed, and then on the wholesaler 20 per cent, and then the retailer 20 per cent. The amendment that was agreed to in the committee was, after the word "sold," to insert "by a dealer." Then it confines itself to the dealer who sells the article to the consumer. If that amendment is not made, we shall have at least four 20 per cent taxes imposed upon the articles enumerated.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask right in that connection whether the tax is not excessive, in view of the changed conditions, and whether 10 per cent would not be more fair than the very large tax of 20 per cent?

Mr. SMOOT. I understand there is a proposition to strike out "20" and insert "10," but I want to get this fairly before the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. I had no such intention as that.

Mr. LODGE. Is this a proposal that it shall not be collected from the purchaser?

Mr. SMOOT. No; the way it stands now is this: Twenty per cent upon all sales no matter who it is sold by, the manufacturer or jobber, and then 20 per cent from the wholesaler to the retailer.

Mr. LODGE. Collected four times?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. That is now expressed at the end of the section—that we collect 20 per cent from the purchaser at the time of the sale.

Mr. SMOOT. The Committee on Finance inserted, after the word "sold," the words "by a dealer," so that it shall only apply to a dealer who sells to the consumer. I suggest an amendment after the word "sold" in the House provision.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator from Wisconsin suggests, in line 18, the words "for consumption" be used. Would not that obviate the difficulty the Senator raises?

Mr. SMOOT. It may be sold for consumption. If it is a piece of cloth and made into a garment, it is consumption as far as the manufacturer is concerned.

Mr. KENYON. I have no objection to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I think there would not be any doubt if that is put in.

Mr. KENYON. I think those words should be inserted to make it clear.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I move, on page 199, after the word "sold," in line 18, to insert "or by a dealer."

Mr. SIMMONS. I accept that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am misinformed or my recollection is at fault if the committee amendment on page 20 has been agreed to. If it has been agreed to, the action of the Senate in agreeing to it was inadvertently overlooked by me, because I certainly intended to ask for some modification in that paragraph. It is on page 20, paragraph 4, the paragraph which relates to State and municipal bonds, the interest on those not being subject to tax.

If I am permitted to do so, I should like to modify the paragraph as amended by the committee, or, in other words, as the committee reports it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered and the paragraph is now subject to amendment.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. On page 20, beginning in line 20, after the figure 4 in parentheses, I move to strike out all of the paragraphs down to the word "That" on page 21, line 6. The purpose of the amendment which I now propose is to exclude from gross income only the interest derived from the holding of $5,000 in the aggregate in State and municipal bonds. It is a question which I discussed at some length the other day, and it has been the subject of discussion in the Senate.

The senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] expressed his views with regard to it when I was making my general presentation, and I understand that the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] made rather an extended argument upholding the constitutionality of the tax upon interest derived from State and municipal bonds. I know there is a difference of opinion among Senators as to the constitutionality of such a tax; but for one I believe that it is constitutional, and if it is the tax ought to be levied.

There are now in this country about $6,000,000,000 or $7,000,000,000 of State and municipal securities, and the bill as amended would exempt from taxation any interest on all those bonds. It would likewise exempt from taxation the interest derived from future issues of such bonds. It would simply enable people to invest their holdings in such bonds and escape high surtaxes.

As I stated the other day, the market for these bonds is on the boom simply because of the attitude of the Senate committee in putting in this provision. I also called attention to the fact that in the issue of our own bonds we restricted the exemption of the interest on those bonds from taxation, because we did not want to withdraw that much of the wealth of the country from taxes which was needed to support the Government.

The first issue of bonds provided for a rate of interest of 3½ per cent. The interest derived from those bonds is exempt from all tax. The result is that those bonds are selling for about par to-day. We placed the interest on the next issue of bonds at 4 per cent, and then later at 4¼ per cent for the reason that we declined to exempt the interest upon any of those bonds from taxation. So we are paying 4¼ per cent upon bonds of the Government which are selling to-day at about 5 per cent discount for the reason that we were not willing to exempt the interest of those bonds from taxation. The result is that the Government to-day on its own financing is willing to pay about 22 per cent additional in interest for the present in order to preserve the right to tax the interest which may arise from such bonds. Now, shall we make a present to the States of that amount—of that advantage—and have no returns to the Government? The Senate has considered this as of vital importance and we are paying for it at the rate of 22 per cent to-day. We are paying for that privilege. We do not want to permit the capital of this country to bury itself in these bonds and escape any support of the Government.

So I say if we permit individuals to own as much as $5,000 of the bonds and hold the interest upon that amount free from tax it is quite sufficient; we are making a sufficient present to the States and to the municipalities. If anyone wants to make a small investment in bonds of his own State or municipality, the provision which I propose would exempt it to the extent of $5,000. Even of the 4¼ per cent bonds we have issued we exempt only $30,000 from surtaxes and that only for a period of two years after the war. We are paying for that privilege by levying surtaxes upon income from our own bonds. Shall we give the States and municipalities an advantage which we are willing to pay for ourselves? If we do this, it simply will result in making a donation to the holders of these bonds which will amount to at least 20 per cent of their holding.

There is opposition to this tax on the part of some Senators, because they think it is unconstitutional. That question has been argued. Those who believe that it is unconstitutional, of course, will not vote for taxation upon such bonds, but it is my judgment, as the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] some time ago argued, that it is constitutional to levy the tax. Therefore, Mr. President, I propose that amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I trust the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico will be rejected. I have the very highest opinion of the Senator's judgment as a lawyer and a legislator, but I am so profoundly convinced that this is a question beyond the power of the Congress of the United States that I believe the only effect of it will be that the Supreme Court will set aside, as it always has set aside, legislation like this.

It is true that the junior Senator from Pennsylvania delivered a most profound argument some two or three months ago upon this subject, and that his argument was favorable to the imposition of such a tax, but it is significant that the Senator based his argument entirely upon the proposition that in the exercise of its war powers the tax could be imposed as a war tax. The Senator did not challenge or criticize the many decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States to the contrary, but the position which he took was one whose legal consequences necessarily involve the proposition that during the period of war the Government could impose any tax upon anything or anybody at any time, because of the supposed necessities and exigencies of a war condition.

The war is over for all practical purposes, and consequently the Senator's argument can not or should not prevail at present, even if it was sound in principle, which I do not think is the case.

At first blush, it may be said that income derived from interest upon certain municipal securities should not be exempt from Federal taxes, but at first blush it is equally true that income derived from Federal securities should not be exempt from the State taxation. Every argument which may be urged in support of the one necessarily requires the sustaining of the other. The fundamental difference is the same in each instance. The securities are issued upon, and they are payable by, sovereignties which are entirely distinct from each other as to that exercise of power. If therefore we concede the capacity of the Federal Government to levy this tax, we admit the capacity of the States to levy a similar tax upon Federal securities.

The Senator emphasizes the proposition that there are some $5,000,000,000 invested in State and municipal securities, the interest upon which will be exempt from taxation unless this amendment carries.

Mr. President, some thirty-five to forty billion dollars are invested in Federal securities, which the State can not tax because the State did not issue the bonds or the securities in which this capital is invested. If the Government can withdraw $40,000,000,000 from the taxing power of the State, then a fortiori can the State withdraw $5,000,000,000 from the taxing powers of the Federal Government?

Mr. President, this proposition to my mind is so plain, in view of the many decisions of the Supreme Court upon the subject, that I can not for the life of me understand what the possible basis can be for the argument that we can impose this tax, except as the exercise of the war power, which as I said no longer exists, because the war has virtually ended. We have voted to reduce the tax for 1920 by $2,000,000,000, because, although a treaty of peace has not been formally made and ratified and we are still theoretically in a state of war, the emergencies and the necessities arising from the state of war disappeared with the armistice, except in so far as the maintenance of the Army and Navy is concerned.

Mr. President, I occupied the greater part of the day sometime last September in presenting reasons and authorities in support of the proposition that these securities were not taxable by Congress. The junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], in one of the most able addresses ever delivered on this floor, in reply to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania, emphasized and more than emphasized the soundness of that great constitutional proposition.

I had intended, Mr. President, if occasion required, to address myself to the argument of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], but in view of changed conditions and of what I regard as a complete reply by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], it is not necessary for me to do so. In looking into the subject, however, some time ago I encountered an expression, regarding the lack of this constitutional power, by Mr. Webster upon the floor of the Senate on May 28, 1832. I quote from the Congressional Globe of that date:

> The question being on the amendment offered by Mr. MOON of Alabama, promising, first, that the bank shall not establish or continue any office of discount or deposit or branch bank, in any State, without the consent and approbation of the State; second, that all such offices and branches shall be subject to taxation according to the amount of their loans and issues in like manner as other banks or other property shall be liable to taxation.
>
> Mr. Webster spoke as follows: "Now, sir, I doubt exceedingly our power to adopt this amendment, and I pray the deliberate consideration of the Senate in regard to this point."
>
> "In the first place let me ask what is the constitutional ground on which Congress created this corporation and on which we now propose to continue it? There is no express authority to create a bank or any other corporation given to us by the Constitution. The power is denied by implication. It has been exercised, and can be exercised only on the ground of a just necessity.
>
> It is to be maintained, if at all, on the allegation that the establishment of a national bank is a just and necessary means for carrying on the Government and executing the powers conferred on Congress by the Constitution. On this ground Congress has established this bank, and on this it is now proposed to be continued. It has already been judicially decided that Congress, having established a bank for these purposes, the Constitution prohibits the States from taxing it. Observe, sir, it is the Constitution, not the law, which lays this prohibition on the States. The charter of the bank does not declare that the States shall not tax it. It says not one word on that subject. The restraint is imposed not by Congress, but by a higher authority—the Constitution.
>
> Now, sir, I ask how we can relieve the States from this constitutional prohibition? It is true that this prohibition is not imposed in express terms, but it results from the general provisions of the Constitution and has been judicially decided to exist in full force. This is a protection, then, which the Constitution of the United States by its own force holds over this institution, which Congress has deemed necessary to be created in order to carry on the Government. So soon as Congress, exercising its own judgment, has chosen to create it can we throw off from this Government this constitutional protection? I think it clear we can not. We can not repeal the Constitution. We can not say that every power, every branch, every institution, and every law of this Government shall not have all the force, all the sanction, and all the protection which the Constitution gives it.

Mr. President, ever since this has been a subject of litigation the courts have recognized the reciprocal relations of the Federal Government and the States to each other with regard to the absence of power to levy taxes upon their respective securities. The very moment Congress has the power and is declared to have the power to tax the interest upon a municipal bond, that moment it is declared ex necessitate that the State may tax the securities of the Government of the United States. There is no escape from it. The two relations are inseparable; they are based upon the same reasons precisely; and no man can assail the exemption of State securities from the Federal power of taxation without assailing the exemption of Federal securities from the State power of taxation.

Mr. KING. The power of each to destroy the other.

Mr. THOMAS. The power of each to destroy the other is necessarily involved in the power of each to tax the agencies of the other. But for the purposes of my statement it is immaterial whether the thing to be taxed represents $5,000, $5,000,000,000, or $50,000,000,000; it is a principle which inheres in the very nature of our dual system of Government, in the very nature of the respective sovereignties of each, the Federal Government upon the one hand and the State governments upon the other. So believing, Mr. President, I trust that the action of the committee will be sustained by the Senate.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I am not going to take the time at this late hour to again discuss the question of constitutional power, but I should like to call the attention of the Senate to what the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] proposes to do. It proposes to tax the income on all State bonds heretofore issued, not only by the normal tax, but by the surtax.

The House provision simply taxed the income from State bonds hereafter to be issued, and it was no secret that the only object was to prevent the States from issuing bonds during the remainder of the war. No one pretended that with this tax any State would be able to issue and sell any bonds at a price for which the State would be willing to market its securities. Now, it is proposed to tax the incomes from all bonds which have been issued with the pledge of exemption from taxation.

What would the Senate think if it were proposed to tax the income from United States bonds that had been issued with that guarantee of exemption in them? We only apply the surtax to the income from liberty bonds which were issued with that condition placed in the bonds. It would be like the United States going back on its pledge in a bond issued 20 years ago that it should be exempt from taxation and that the income should be exempt, and repealing it and placing a tax upon the income of such bonds.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes; I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to inquire by what authority the bonds to which the Senator from Minnesota refers were exempted from taxation.

Mr. KELLOGG. The bonds were issued by the States under the conditions of the law placed in the bonds that they were exempt from taxation, and under a line of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States from the earliest day to the present time, without any dissent, that State bonds could not be taxed by the Federal Government. That is the condition under which they were issued.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Does the Senator from Minnesota mean to leave the impression that the State, through its agreement that the bonds should not be subject to tax, would guarantee an exemption from Federal taxation?

Mr. KELLOGG. No, sir; I did not say anything of the kind. I said that when the bonds were issued it was the law of this country, as laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States, and it is so yet, that the Federal Government has no power to tax the securities. I said that those bonds, therefore, were issued under a pledge just as sacred as though it had been the pledge of the Federal Government.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. May I ask the Senator if the Supreme Court has made any such decision since the adoption of the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution?

Mr. KELLOGG. It has; and it has construed the sixteenth amendment and decided what it meant, and has repeated and restated the proposition that State bonds could not be taxed. I wish to say further, that for a hundred years that has been the law of this country, and there is no decision of the Supreme Court to the contrary.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to inquire——

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator from New Mexico will pardon me for a moment, I desire to suggest that the Senator from Minnesota might have added that Mr. Justice Hughes, then a member of the Supreme Court, concurred in that opinion.

Mr. KELLOGG. He did.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Justice Hughes having been the man who, as governor of the State of New York, expressed some doubt as to whether or not this sixteenth amendment as drawn would not subject these identical securities to taxation.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. Justice Hughes had done so. He merely suggested to the Legislature of New York that the sixteenth amendment might authorize the taxation of State securities, but when the Legislature of the State of New York came to consider the speech of Senator BORAH, the opinion of Senator Root, and of many others, the Legislature of New York came to the conclusion that the sixteenth amendment was not adopted to authorize the Federal Government to tax State securities, and Justice Hughes became convinced that he was wrong in his suggestion, and he joined in the decision stating for what the sixteenth amendment was adopted and that State securities were so exempt.

Now, I hope that the war being over the Senate will not undertake to tax the States in the exercise of their borrowing power.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, this question is only an academic question to me now that the war is at an end. I take it that the war is at an end; I accept the statement of the President of the United States to that effect. The war is certainly at an end so far as any necessity exists for hunting up unusual sources of taxation for the prosecution of the war.

I have heard it stated on this floor frequently before to-day, I have read it from the pen of so distinguished a statesman as ex-President Taft, that this question had been settled practically in this country for the last 50 or 75 years. Mr. President, I venture to repeat the assertion that I made in the remarks which I submitted to the Senate some time ago upon this subject, that the question that I raised, namely, the right of the Federal Government to tax the income on State bonds in the hands of the holders during a defensive war, has never been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, and has never been raised in that court. One writer has gone so far as to say of the House of Representatives and those of us in this body who thought that during the war we might tax incomes from State bonds in the hands of the holders that we were playing politics with a grave constitutional question. Abraham Lincoln signed a bill imposing such a tax during the Civil War; William McKinley signed a bill imposing such a tax, which was passed by both branches of Congress, during the Spanish-American War.

Mr. President, the nearest they can come to producing a case which they say rules that the Federal Government has no such power in time of war is the case of Collector against Day, and their argument there is predicated solely upon the fact that the law under which that tax was imposed was passed during the Civil War. Ergo, the Supreme Court having declared the law unconstitutional there was no right to impose the tax.

Now, let me call your attention to the facts in the case of Collector against Day. Day was a judge of probate in a county in Massachusetts. The tax was imposed by the act of 1864, and there is every probability, in fact, I think it is almost a certainty, as there was no litigation over the matter, that Day paid his tax in 1864 and in 1865 while the war was going on. The levy made in the Day case was for the tax of 1866–67, after the war had ceased to exist; and the Supreme Court of the United States held that that tax levied in 1866–67, during time of peace, was unconstitutional. I say again——

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KNOX. I do.

Mr. KING. I dislike to interrupt the Senator in his splendid address, but the thought suggested itself, as the Senator was submitting his observations, what difference there would be in levying a tax during war times upon State securities for the purpose of meeting the current expenses of the war and levying a tax after the war was over for the purpose of meeting expenses that were contracted during the period of the war?

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, if the Senator will do me the honor of reading the remarks I made, and which were carefully thought out at the time—I remember the Senator was not present, and I do not believe he has read them—he will find that I put my argument upon this ground—and it does seem a shame to take the time of the Senate to discuss this matter, because I think it is entirely academic; it is certainly so from my point of view, the war now having ceased—I put it upon the ground that the Constitution of the United States imposed upon the Federal Government all of the obligations to carry on war to defend the States and to preserve to them a republican form of government. It not only does that, but it denies those powers to the States themselves; so that during war there is imposed upon the Federal Government the duty to take care of the States, and the States themselves are excluded from the field. I say, while that situation lasts no wealth of the country is exempt from the power of Congress to reach out and tax it for the purpose of the common defense.

I have only just one word more to say, and that is in reply to the very positive statement made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], that if the right of the Federal Government to tax the bonds of the States exists, the corresponding or reciprocal right of the States to tax the bonds of the Federal Government exists. There is no foundation for that claim. Under my contention the power only exists during time of war, because the Federal Government owes the obligation to the States during war to defend them; hence the power to tax; but the States owe no obligation to the Federal Government in respect to war, and therefore have no power to tax Federal securities, if the power to tax rests, as I contend, upon the existence of war and the necessities of defense.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it is true, as the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] has stated, that the Supreme Court has not in terms ever decided that a tax such as is here under discussion, laid during times of war, could not be sustained as an exercise of a war power; but it is equally true that in every instance of which I am aware, where the question has been squarely presented to that court, it has denied to the Congress the constitutional power of such taxation. The case of Collector against Day arose under a provision of the law subjecting the salaries of State officers to Federal taxation, enacted during the period of the Civil War. The decision succeeded the war, but it was based upon the exercise of the taxing power in time of war. If it be true that in times of war constitutional restrictions upon our power of taxation are removed, it is surprising that the tax was not there defended upon that ground.

I have been unable to find a single authority, either in the reported cases or in the opinions of lawyers of eminence, in which the exercise of this power or the right to exercise it was recognized or approved, excepting, of course, where the doubt as to the probable effect of the sixteenth amendment, expressed by Gov. Hughes and the speech of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania a month or so ago, in which he contended that a tax of this sort was justified by war conditions, and which now, he says, is academic. I thought then, Mr. President—and I have not changed my opinion—that the Senator proved entirely too much, because if it be true that the Federal Government in times of war may levy an income tax upon sources of income which but for the war would be exempt from such tax, then it is equally true that in times of war Congress may levy taxes notwithstanding express limitations and restrictions of the Constitution.

No direct tax except an income tax can be levied unless upon the basis of population. There are many taxes other than income taxes, of course, which the Government can not lay because of constitutional prohibitions, but which it may lay, if the Senator be correct, in time of war, without any reference to these limitations. For example, it may levy a tax upon real estate, which would be a direct tax, not because the Constitution or the decisions permit it, but because the urgent needs of war conditions demand it.

Mr. President, I am willing to go as far as any man in recognizing the vast extent of the war powers of this Republic when the exigencies of war require it, but I am not willing to concede that the power of taxation extends so far as that during the war every limitation can be swept aside and taxes imposed as Congress may see fit. I fear that if this restriction is ever broken down the flood of taxation imposed by the States upon Federal securities may overwhelm them and may reach so far as to affect the integrity of the Nation itself.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, whatever there may be in the contention of the able Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] as to the power of the Government to levy this tax in time of war, a defensive war, as he says, as I understand, according to the contention of the Senator himself, that does not apply at this time; that principle would have no application under the conditions in which we are now seeking to legislate. As he has said, that proposition is academic. I do not desire to discuss it or express any opinion upon it in view of the fact that it has no application at this time. If I were compelled to pass upon it, I would be, as now advised, unable to accept his view. That being out of the discussion, I do not suppose that there is any question more thoroughly settled by the decisions of our Supreme Court than the proposition that the National Government can not levy a tax upon the agents or instrumentalities of the State governments. Unless the exception which the Senator from Pennsylvania mentions be well taken, there is no exception to the rule of which I know.

It was decided early in the history of the court; it has been repeated a number of times, and since the adoption of the sixteenth amendment it has been reiterated; it is a thoroughly well settled principle of the court as the decisions now stand, and I entertain no doubt at all that this tax if levied would be held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court.

There is a question involved, Mr. President, aside from that merely of raising taxes, a principle which goes deeper and reaches further than the mere question of raising a certain amount of revenue. It involves the structure of the Government, because, as Marshall said, the power to tax is the power to destroy, and if we may tax some instrumentalities and agencies of the State, we may tax them all, and the State becomes no longer a sovereign power, which it is necessary for it to remain if we are to be a Federal Union, but merely a geographical expression of the Government to be taxed at our will and our wish. I am opposed, therefore, to the proposition to tax State securities.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I concur in what has been said in opposition to the levying of a tax on the instrumentalities of the States. I believe that the decisions of the court have clearly defined the line where the Congress of the United States must stop in the power to levy taxation, unless we intend to destroy the integrity of the State governments. But those questions have already been discussed, and I did not rise for the purpose of repeating what has already been said. I wish to say, however, that there is another reason, in my judgment, outside of the constitutional argument why this tax should not be levied.

When it was first proposed that a tax should be levied upon the bonds and securities of the States and municipalities, it came with the argument that it was necessary to levy a tax on these instrumentalities in order to secure a reservoir in which the liberty bonds could be sold, because if State securities were untaxed and the Federal Government's securities were taxed, to a certain extent it gave preference in the financial market to the State securities. Under those circumstances Congress still upheld the constitutional privilege of the States and refused to levy the tax.

Now the war is over. The Government securities are sold, except possibly one issue, which no one doubts the capacity of the country to absorb, and the result of a tax on State securities would not be to affect the Government of the United States; but if we levy such a tax now, the result of that tax would be to make a better market for industrial and railroad securities, which must bear the tax now. Idle money hunting investment at somewhere near the same rate of interest will naturally flow into the channels of State and municipal securities rather than into industrial and railroad securities.

It is not that we need the money, because the Senate has already agreed to reduce this bill $2,000,000,000 for 1920. It is not proposed to put a tax on State securities for the purpose of getting more money, because we have already found a verdict on that question, and said we do not need any more money. If we should conclude to tax these State securities, our action would have a tendency to bring the State securities down to the plane of the industrial and railroad securities and let them have equal competition in the money markets of the world.

So far as I am concerned, I believe that it is necessary, in order to maintain the integrity of the State government, that its securities should not be taxed by the National Government; but I also believe that it is the wise part of governmental action that we should continue to leave the State and county and municipal securities on the basis they are on to-day and give them a preference in the money markets of the world. The great industrial and railroad plants have their agents and their business connections to sell their securities throughout the money markets of the world. It is often difficult for a State or a municipality to accomplish that result at a reasonable price; and I think it is clearly in the interest of the people who live within the States and the counties and the municipalities of this country that their bonds should have the right of this preference in the market.

Outside of any constitutional question at all, I think it is a good public policy that the present status should be maintained, and for that reason I think the amendment should be defeated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask the Secretary to state.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand that all of the committee amendments have been acted upon.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; the committee amendments have not all been agreed to yet. The action of the Senate a few minutes ago makes certain formal amendments necessary.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator stated awhile ago that the amendments had all been acted upon. This one will take but a minute, and I may as well proceed with it, if the Senator will allow me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

The SECRETARY. On page 197, line 3, it is proposed to strike out the semicolon after the words "motor boats" and insert the words "not used exclusively for trade, fishing, or national defense."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I want to explain that amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. I accept the amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator will accept it, very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I will ask the Secretary if there are any other amendments.

The SECRETARY. The last amendment passed over was passed over at the request of the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], on page 197, lines 1 and 2. The committee amendment reads as follows:

(18) Articles made out of any fur, or articles of which fur is the component material of chief value, 10 per cent.

The Senator from Missouri proposes to strike out the figures "10" and to substitute therefor the figure "5."

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to correct what seems to be an inequality between the tax on jewelry, including pearls and precious stones, and the tax on furs. The Senate has agreed, in regard to jewelry, to a reduction of the tax from 10 to 5 per cent. The tax on furs remains 10 per cent. Jewelry has no wearing utility. It can not be used for apparel. It is difficult to understand why furs, which have a utility as clothing, should be taxed at a higher rate than jewelry, which has no such utility. The purpose of this change is to reduce the tax on furs from 10 per cent to 5 per cent, making it the same as the tax upon jewelry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes appear to have it.

Mr. THOMAS. I call for a division, Mr. President.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, it is necessary, since the action of the Senate with respect to these 20 per cent taxes, to make a number of pro forma amendments in various sections of the bill. I send the amendments to the desk and ask to have them stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 198, line 24, after the word "or," strike out "905" and insert "906."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 199, line 13, strike out "905" and insert "904."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 199, line 13, strike out "November 1, 1918," and insert "May 1, 1919."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 201, line 19, after the word "apply," insert "(1)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 201, line 23, after the comma, insert "or (2) to any article made out of fur or of which fur is the component material of chief value," and a comma.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On line 23, after the word "or," insert "(3)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On line 24, strike out "(20)" or "(21)" and insert "(16)" or "(17)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 202, line 8, strike out "904" and insert "905."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 204, line 7, strike out "905" and insert "906."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 205, line 3, strike out "906" and insert "907."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, when section 905 was under consideration, the question was upon the motion to strike out. I had intended then to offer an amendment reducing the rate from 20 to 10 per cent; but in order to expedite the passage of the bill I did not offer it at that time, because if the committee had been sustained the section would have gone out. Inasmuch as the committee has not been sustained, I now move to reconsider that vote, in order that this amendment may be proposed.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have no objection to that being done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the motion to reconsider will be deemed carried.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, one moment. I will suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin that there is no use in reconsidering it, because now the tax provided in the House bill stands in the Senate bill.

Mr. LENROOT. But not in the committee amendment.

Mr. LODGE. No; not in the committee amendment. That is all right, then.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask to have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 199, line 15, it is proposed to strike out the numeral "20" and insert "10," so that it will read:

A tax equivalent to 10 per cent of so much of the amount,

And so forth.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I have just a word to say in support of that. Upon these other luxuries——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I will accept that amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not accept it. I want to say one word upon the amendment, and not allow it to go through by mere acceptance.

I have no objection to the tax being reduced from 20 to 10 per cent, or from 10 per cent to nothing; but I think there are three of these items that ought to be stricken out entirely, and I want an opportunity at least to offer to amend the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin so as to strike out that which relates simply to clothing. I do not care for hats, or for any of these articles such as fans, umbrellas, purses, and so forth; but I do think that provisions 11, 12, and 13, which relate to men's and boys' suits or overcoats, and women's and misses' suits, cloaks, and coats, and women's and misses' dresses, ought to be stricken out entirely, leaving the others to stand.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. The adoption of this amendment will not in any way interfere with the Senator's proposed amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I am not certain whether or not it would be subject to further amendment in the Committee of the Whole if that amendment should be adopted. If the Chair rules that after the adoption of this amendment, reducing the tax from 20 to 10 per cent, we can still move to strike out those three sections, I will leave it in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota would still have the right to offer any amendment he saw fit after this was adopted or rejected.

Mr. McCUMBER. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KIRBY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the noes appear to have it.

Mr. LENROOT. I call for a division.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask to have the amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 199, line 15, it is proposed to strike out "20" and insert "10," so that it will read:

SEC. 905. (a) That on and after November 1, 1918, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a tax equivalent to 10 per cent—

And so forth.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask for a division upon that.

On a division the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Now, let us have the yeas and nays. Let us try for it once more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin asks for the yeas and nays. Is the call sustained?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I ask, for information, how many were voting? I believe the call was sustained. May I have the tally?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The call for the yeas and nays was seconded by eight Senators.

Mr. GRONNA. The rule provides for one-fifth of those present, Mr. President; and——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has ruled, and there can not be anything further to it.

CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of Title II it is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

SEC. 261. That there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in respect of the excess over the sum of $500 which any person, firm, or corporation shall give, advance, pay, expend, subscribe, or contribute in the aggregate during any taxable year for the purpose, directly or indirectly, of influencing the nomination or defeat of any candidate or candidates for nomination, or the election or defeat of any candidate or candidates for office, or the success or defeat of any proposition to be voted upon at any primary election or general or special election at which candidates for Members of the House of Representatives or for United States Senator or presidential electors are to be nominated or elected, a tax equal to 100 per cent of such excess; such expenditures or contributions to include all sums in any form contributed, subscribed, advanced, expended, paid, or given to or for such candidate or candidates or to or for party or other political committees or campaign funds, but not to include expenditures made by such candidates or regular political committees or out of such campaign funds of moneys lawfully contributed to them.

Every person required by this title to make a return shall state therein specifically each item and the date thereof of all gifts, advances, expenditures, subscriptions, payments, and contributions made, and to whom, for the purpose of influencing the result of such primary and general elections, and of all taxes due thereon under the provisions of this section. And the treasurer or chairman of all State or congressional committees and of all political committees as defined in the act of Congress approved June 25, 1910, entitled "An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected," and of all associations or committees organized to promote or prevent the nomination or election of any candidate for Member of the House of Representatives or of the Senate of the Congress of the United States or for presidential elector or electors, shall within 30 days after the passage of this act, and thereafter within 30 days after any election to be held therefore file with the collector for the district where the headquarters or other office where such committee or association is located a return stating specifically all sums of money received, from whom received, and the date thereof. Such return shall be verified by the chairman or treasurer of such committee or association.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I offered this amendment in the committee, and reserved the right to present it to the Senate at the time of its rejection, while the committee was in session.

The amendment proposes a tax of 100 per cent upon all contributions in excess of the sum of $500 to elections at which any Federal officer is to be elected or nominated, excepting, however, candidates who are permitted by Federal or State law to make greater contributions, and provides methods for ascertaining and assessing the amount of the tax.

Mr. President, my purpose in offering this amendment is not to raise revenue so much as it is an attempt to make our present corrupt-practices act effective. The States and the Nation have sought, by restrictive acts, to limit the expenditure of money at elections and primary elections to a decent and reasonable amount. These statutes, if my experience is any guide, have been honored far more in the breach than in the observance. There is no statute of the sort of which I am aware, through which coaches and fours have not been driven and about which there is any sort of regard or observance. The last election in some States of the Union was scandalized by the expenditure of enormous sums of money, my own State amoung the number, where the report filed under the State law by the Republican chairman shows an expenditure of $127,000, and the report of the Democratic committee an expenditure of $38,000, which means that perhaps two and a half to three or four times that amount of money was actually used for the purpose of influencing the election.

In the State of Michigan it is a matter of record that nearly $200,000 was expended in the interest of one candidate at the primary election in the interest of his nomination. The amounts of money which are said to have been expended in West Virginia in behalf of both the candidates are far in excess of the statutory limitation, and the probabilities are that these things will have been done with impunity.

Now, I have a belief, which may or may not be well founded, that a man who will violate the law for the purpose of securing his nomination and election to a public position will violate the law after he fills that position. This may be an extravagant view, but I can perceive no difference in principle between the violation of a restrictive statute before and the violation of some other statute after an election. Perhaps by requiring gentlemen who are so liberal with their money in campaigns to contribute to the Treasury of the United States an equivalent in the way of taxation over and above this allowance of $500, which is ample, we may or may not produce the desired result. It certainly will have the effect of obtaining sworn statements both from committees and from contributors, official in character, upon which we will be able to ascertain something about this very important subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado. [Putting the question.] By the sound the "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. PENROSE. I call for a division, Mr. President.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I ask for a roll call, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts calls for the yeas and nays. Is the call sustained?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). As announced before, I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement of my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], I withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I again announce my general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and withhold my vote.

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. In his absence, I am not at liberty to vote. I have tried to secure a transfer of my pair, and have been unable to do so. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GERRY. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. KENDRICK. I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS. I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], who is not present. In his absence, not knowing how he would vote if present, and being unable to obtain a transfer, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence, on account of illness, of the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. He is paired with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am paired with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BAIRD] and vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]; and

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS].

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 28, as follows:

YEAS—34.

Ashurst	Johnson, S. Dak.	McNary	Saulsbury
Beckham	Jones, N. Mex.	Myers	Shafroth
Borah	Kendrick	Nelson	Sheppard
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Norris	Thomas
Cummins	Kirby	Nugent	Trammell
Gronna	La Follette	Overman	Vardaman
Henderson	Lenroot	Phelan	Williams
Hitchcock	Lewis	Pollock
Johnson, Cal.	McKellar	Pomerene

NAYS—28.

Bankhead	Hale	Martin, Ky.	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Harding	Martin, Va.	Smith, Md.
Dillingham	Kellogg	Moses	Smoot
Fernald	King	New	Spencer
France	Knox	Penrose	Sutherland
Gerry	Lodge	Poindexter	Swanson
Gore	McCumber	Simmons	Warren

NOT VOTING—34.

Baird	Goff	Reed	Townsend
Calder	Hardwick	Robinson	Underwood
Colt	Hollis	Sherman	Wadsworth
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Shields	Walsh
Curtis	McLean	Smith, Ariz.	Watson
Fall	Owen	Smith, Mich.	Weeks
Fletcher	Page	Smith, S. C.	Wolcott
Frelinghuysen	Pittman	Sterling
Gay	Ransdell	Thompson

So Mr. THOMAS's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I understand that the committee amendment on page 193 was passed during my absence from the Chamber. I now desire to offer an amendment to it. On page 193, line 18, I move to strike out "automobile wagons, automobile trailers, or tractors" and the comma.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. President, I had expected to discuss this at some length, but owing to our condition here and at the request of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], I shall take only a very few minutes.

I wish to call attention first to the importance of this machinery to agricultural communities. As no doubt all Senators know, the automobile tractor is a great plow. It prepares the ground for the crops. Without its use the farmer would not be able to prepare over one-half of the ground for crops that he can with the tractor. The automobile wagon is a wagon that the dairymen and farmers and all who produce carry the productions of the farm and the dairy to the towns. The automobile trailer is a small trailer that is hooked on behind the automobile, which enables the farmer to take a small load to or from town with his automobile.

Mr. President, I appreciate the great work that the committee has done. I know they have done their best, and they should have our commendation, but if there is one mistake that has been made in this whole bill it is this direct tax at production by taxing that which is necessary for production. A tractor will put in just about as much crop or prepare the ground for the crop as 12 horses can. The trailer and automobile wagon are equally potent for the purpose of moving these productions of the land to market.

I just want to say this, and then I will leave it for your consideration. There is only one thing in all this country that is actually a necessity of life, and that is bread. You might just as well tax the farmer's horses and his wagons, his harness, and his machinery and seed as to tax the instruments of procuring and furnishing his crop for market. This tax of all the taxes in the bill is the worst. It is an excise tax. It is nothing more nor less than a license. It says to the manufacturer of these products, you may sell the products, the necessities of which are apparent to the farmer, providing you will charge a certain price, and every farmer in the United States who has to buy a tractor will have to pay in the neighborhood of $200 tax, in addition to all the other taxes, if this 5 per cent excess tax remains in the bill, and the automobiles, wagons, and trucks in the same proportion to cost.

This bill contains some peculiar legislation. There is one provision in the bill, as I see it, which does nothing but grant a subsidy to the Curtis Publishing Co. and concerns of like character of many millions of dollars. Then you turn right around and tax the real necessities of the country with this excise tax on things that help produce the bread of the country.

Mr. President, I do not intend to take up the time of this body. I only want to call the attention of Senators to the importance of eliminating these items from the bill in order that they may not stop a certain per cent of the production of the country all over the land.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I had intended to propose an amendment to this part of the bill, and I had hoped when the Senator from South Dakota rose that he would include all that ought to be included in his amendment. He can make no special plea for farmers on account of tractors under this section which does not apply to men engaged in other occupations. This class of taxes under the excise taxes is levied because they are supposed to be luxuries. You will notice in looking over the list that in it are included all sporting goods, bowie knives, cameras, firearms, shells, dirk knives—all things which are supposed to be luxuries—but I submit, Mr. President, that, in my judgment, no one will contend that automobiles and automobile trucks are luxuries. I submit no one will contend, it seems to me, that automobiles and automobile trucks are any more luxuries than automobile wagons or tractors. The automobile truck certainly has come to be an absolute necessity in this country.

The producers of them are taxed under the income-tax law in the excess-profits clause. Why, then, there should be a special tax levied because they are luxuries is more than I can understand.

I made this point before the committee, and said then inasmuch as we were striking out certain other taxes on automobiles if it were necessary for the Government to have the money, if we must have money as a war necessity, I would urge no further objection to it. But that time has passed. We have already written into the bill the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, a provision taxing alleged luxuries further on which will more than compensate any loss of revenue which might occur from leaving out this tax on actual necessities. I trust the Senator from South Dakota will agree with me that the subdivisions 1 and 3, on page 194, should go out of the bill. They are quite as much necessities as the item to which the Senator from South Dakota has called special attention. There would be no embarrassment to the Government revenue if they were stricken out. I believe all will agree that at this time when many of these concerns have been hard hit by the war, and they are now just readjusting themselves to the peace basis, those particular items should be eliminated from the special tax—the luxury tax, as some have seen fit to call it—because they are not luxuries. I ask the Senator if he will not be willing to modify his amendment so as to strike out, first, paragraph 1—the whole of it—and, second, paragraph No. 3, on page 194.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Answering the Senator from Michigan in regard to luxuries, I do not see how he can get the idea that an automobile tractor or automobile wagon is a luxury. They can possibly be used for but one general purpose. However, if my amendment to the committee amendment which is printed there is included the automobile trucks would go out, too.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I was not contending that the tractor was a luxury. I say it is no more of a luxury, however, and no less so than the automobile truck, and most of the automobiles that are used in this country are quite as essential to the western farmer as possibly the tractor itself in many respects. I am asking simply that all these articles be eliminated from the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will accept the amendment to the amendment as to automobile trucks, but I would not accept the amendment as to automobiles and motorcycles, because I figure that they are to some degree a luxury.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If the Senator will include automobile trucks we can vote on that, and I will offer the other amendment later.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, as the bill came from the House there was a tax on gasoline. There was a tax per horsepower upon each user of an automobile. There was a tax provided by the two paragraphs on automobiles, automobile trucks, tractors, and so forth.

The provision on the next page covers the tax on inner tubes, parts, accessories, and so forth. We struck out the gasoline tax. We struck from the bill the tax on users of automobiles, so much per horsepower. We cut out two-thirds of the tax which the House provided with reference to automobiles and the gasoline required to operate automobiles, and we have reduced one-half the tax on accessories.

From the tax on automobiles, motorcycles, automobile trucks, and automobile wagons we expected to raise about $70,000,000. From the tax as levied on the next page referred to by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] we expected to raise about $15,000,000. So you have $85,000,000 in these two items which the Senator from Michigan desires to have stricken out. The tax on automobile trucks, automobile wagons, automobile trailers, and so forth, is expected to raise about $30,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. The information that I have—and I think it is authoritative—states that we would raise about $18,500,000 on those four items.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I give my figures from the tax experts who have cooperated with us in working upon the bill. They have just given me again their estimate as to this part of the bill, and I repeat it as they furnished it to me.

I am not anxious to levy a tax on anything. We went as far as we felt justified in going in reducing this branch of taxation, as provided in the bill as passed by the House, and it is for the Senate to say what it will do. The committee reached the conclusion that they had removed the burden incident to this tax at the place where it was best to remove it, and left it in connection with manufacturing production, reducing one-half even, as to manufacturing production, the accessories.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Georgia, who has just been speaking, to lines 20 and 21, on page 193 of the bill, which read, "including tires, inner tubes, parts" of automobiles, and so forth. That was all stricken out by the committee, was it not?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Clause 2 was stricken out; the words "automobiles, motorcycles, automobile" were included in paragraph 2, and the tax was reduced from 10 to 5 per cent on automobiles, motorcycles, and so forth. We reduced one-half of the tax on that portion of those vehicles.

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I ask the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] if he included in his amendment automobile trucks?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. No; I merely included automobile tractors, automobile trailers, and automobile wagons. That was my original amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understood the Senator from South Dakota to say that he would include automobile trucks in his amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I stated, or intended to state, that the Senator from Michigan could move to amend the amendment by inserting those words. I do not, however, know that I would have any objection to accepting that modification of my amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understood the Senator from South Dakota to say that he did include those, but would not include the balance. I understood him as did the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND].

Mr. TOWNSEND. I so understood the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Therefore I presented the figures as to the reduction of the tax on the class of vehicles which I understood the Senator from South Dakota desired to cover by his amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will accept the amendment to include automobile trucks, but not the balance of the section. That is left in.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That is what I understood the Senator to say.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will agree to insert "automobile trucks, automobile wagons, trailers, and tractors."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I can not see why there should not be a tax upon automobile trucks. There is nothing destroys the roads of the country as do automobile trucks. There has got to be some change either in the building of roads or in the weight of trucks, or else the cost of the maintenance of the roads in this country will be so great that communities can not stand the expense. The committee decided that automobile trucks should at least pay a 5 per cent tax on the sale price of the truck, and I thought the committee had gone very far, indeed, if we are going to impose any tax upon the manufacture of any articles in the United States when they reduced the tax imposed upon automobiles and motorcycles from 10 per cent to 5 per cent.

We eliminated the tax upon gasoline for the motorcycle, the automobile, the automobile truck, and all tractors that must of necessity use gasoline. The House proposed to impose a tax of 2 cents per gallon upon gasoline; and that would have amounted to more than any tax which the Senate committee has proposed to impose under this provision. Not only that, but there was imposed a tax for the use of automobiles, and the committee thought they would eliminate that tax entirely; so that all the tax that is proposed to be imposed by the Senate Committee on Finance is the tax of 5 per cent upon automobiles, motorcycles, automobile trucks, automobile wagons, automobile trailers, and tractors. If we are going to have any tax at all, it seems to me that we ought to adhere to the 5 per cent tax, and especially so when we take into consideration the elimination of the taxes which the House imposed upon this industry. I sincerely hope that the Senate will at least sustain the committee in the imposition of this tax.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I see now a new reason for taxing automobile trucks. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] says that they destroy the roads, and therefore we should turn this money over to the Federal Government which will never reach the roads and which will not in any manner affect the roads nor maintain them. I did not suppose that this tax was proposed to be put on as a penalty. I supposed that the only reason that we put the tax on was because we regarded these vehicles as luxuries. There is no other reason that can be urged for putting a tax on this class of articles, except that they are luxuries.

Mr. POINDEXTER. A truck a luxury?

Mr. TOWNSEND. An automobile truck. That is clearly not true. Automobile trucks are not luxuries; they are just as much necessities as is the ordinary wagon, the ordinary buggy, or any other vehicle which the farmer, the business man, or the truckman on the streets of any city uses. So, although we may have proposed to reduce the tax on gasoline, that does not in the least affect the tax.

As I said to the committee, if the Government needs the money and you are proposing to tax things of this kind, I will vote for it. I am perfectly willing to put the tax on; but the Government does not need the money. You have already voted into this bill to-day items variously estimated at over $187,000,000 more than the bill provided for when it came here. That being true, it seems to me clear that we should eliminate from the bill the tax on these necessities. The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] says that in cutting the taxes we have reduced the luxury taxes, so called, to a loss of $90,000,000 of revenue; but that more than compensates for the loss that comes from these few items of actual necessity to the people of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now, there is an involved parliamentary situation existing here. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, has already adopted an amendment to strike out the word "automobile" and to insert "automobiles, motorcycles, automobile." That amendment having been agreed to, it will have to be reconsidered and the amendment rejected. Then an amendment agreed to striking out the word "automobile" and inserting the words "automobile and motorcycles," and then striking out line 19. The Chair suggests that the vote be taken, and if the amendment carries the Secretary will make up the record accordingly.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). As heretofore announced, I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]. Therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as heretofore, I vote "yea."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY], in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair, unless I am able to secure a transfer I shall withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GERRY. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and vote "nay."

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence, on account of illness, of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. He is paired with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK]. I will let this announcement stand for the remainder of the day.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I find I can transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. I therefore vote "yea."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]; and

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS].

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 28, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Fernald	Kendrick	Myers	Sheppard
France	Kenyon	Nelson	Spencer
Gore	Knox	Norris	Thomas
Gronna	La Follette	Nugent	Townsend
Hale	Lenroot	Overman	Trammell
Henderson	McCumber	Phelan	Vardaman
Johnson, S. Dak.	McKellar	Poindexter
Jones, N. Mex.	McNary	Pollock
Kellogg	Martin, Ky.	Shafroth

NAYS—28.

Bankhead	Harding	Page	Smoot
Borah	King	Penrose	Sutherland
Brandegee	Kirby	Pomerene	Underwood
Chamberlain	Lewis	Simmons	Warren
Dillingham	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.	Watson
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.	Weeks
Gerry	Moses	Smith, Md.	Wolcott

NOT VOTING—35.

Ashurst	Frelinghuysen	New	Smith, Mich.
Baird	Gay	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Beckham	Goff	Pittman	Sterling
Calder	Hardwick	Ransdell	Swanson
Colt	Hitchcock	Reed	Thompson
Culberson	Hollis	Robinson	Wadsworth
Cummins	Johnson, Cal.	Saulsbury	Walsh
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Sherman	Williams
Fall	McLean	Shields

So the amendment of Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota to the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the understanding that the Secretary will correct the bill as has been indicated.

Mr. TRAMMELL and Mr. TOWNSEND addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to offer an amendment to the pending bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section to the bill, as follows:

SEC. 1407. That all officers and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps serving the United States in the war against Germany who have been honorably discharged from the service since November 11, 1918, or who may hereafter be honorably discharged, shall be paid one month's salary in addition to the regular pay heretofore authorized.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I ask the Senator if he will not withhold his amendment until we finish the consideration of the section with which we have just been dealing? I had proposed an amendment. Then the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] included part of it in his amendment; and now, if we could dispose of the remainder of it, we could have made all at once the correction the Chair has suggested.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I dislike very much not to accede to the request, but we are working on rush time to-day, and I do not think it will take very much time to dispose of the amendment I have offered.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I think we are going to have time enough to consider all amendments which may be offered.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I dislike very much not to accede to the request of the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not think that this amendment has any proper place in a revenue bill. I am so much in sympathy with the purpose of it that I do not feel disposed to make any resistance, but I can not see its pertinency to the pending measure. It ought to have been offered as a separate proposition.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I will take but a moment. I will say that some four weeks ago I introduced a bill embracing the subject covered by this amendment and granting one month's additional pay to all officers and enlisted men in the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps. This policy was at least approved by Gen. March, in a public interview a short time after the introduction of my bill, and I believe that it will meet with the general approbation of the tax-bearing public of this country. I believe the American people feel that we should make this allowance as a contribution to our soldiers, who have met so faithfully, so bravely, and so heroically the duties devolving upon them. It will be a little pittance to assist them in going home and getting once more reestablished in civil life; and, in order that it may not be delayed longer, I very much hope that it will be adopted as an amendment to the pending bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator says that he introduced a bill upon this subject some time ago. I should like to ask him what reference was made of it?

Mr. TRAMMELL. It was referred to the Military Affairs Committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does the Senator know why that committee has not acted upon it?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

Mr. TRAMMELL. I can not say why the committee has not acted upon it. I see the chairman of the committee present, and if he has a statement to make I should be very glad to hear from him upon the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do.

Mr. NEW. I did not see the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee present, and I was going to say something about the disposition that was made of that bill; but I observe now that he is here.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, in the multitude of bills that the Military Affairs Committee have had to consider, we have not been able to consider this particular measure. We have been constantly at work when we could get a quorum. Some of our members, as the Senator knows, are on the Finance Committee, and the Finance Committee have been in constant session, and they have kept the members of the Military Affairs Committee away and kept it from maintaining a quorum; but the bill will be considered in due course by the Military Affairs Committee, and action upon it by the committee will not be delayed.

Mr. SIMMONS. I simply want to say that if the Senator from Florida insists upon it, I can not myself resist the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we all agree that this is not the proper place for the amendment; but I think every Senator is in favor of the amendment, and the quick way to get it through is to let it be added to this bill now. So far as I am concerned, therefore, I shall be glad to have the chairman of the committee accept it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I would accept it if I had the power.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Florida why the date is limited to the 11th of November. What about a man who is discharged on the 10th or on the 1st for ill health, and who has gone back?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, the object of specifying that date was that it should apply to those who had served until the conclusion of actual hostilities, and therefore it was made to apply from the date of the armistice on November 11.

Mr. KNOX. Does not the Senator from Florida think that the claims of a man who was discharged, say, on the 9th or the 10th, by reason of wounds or illness, are just as meritorious as those of one who was discharged on the 11th?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, you have to draw a line somewhere, and I thought it was best to fix the date at the conclusion of actual hostilities. Those who were discharged prior to that time were discharged at their own request, unless they were discharged for disability; and this will apply to what took place after the demobilization began.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question? Will this cover cases where men were called quite recently and inducted into the service, some of whom served only, perhaps, 10, 15, or 20 days, some of them less than a month or two months? Do they get the same compensation as the men who have been in France?

Mr. TRAMMELL. It will apply to them just the same. Of course, there will be some few cases of that character.

Mr. KING. There will be thousands of them.

Mr. TRAMMELL. There has been no induction that I know anything of, however, since the armistice was signed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I want to make an additional suggestion to the Senate with regard to delay in acting by the Military Affairs Committee, and that is that there are various bills pending before the committee covering this subject, and covering uniforms and other gratuities to the soldiers. This particular bill was acted upon favorably by the committee, and not reported to the Senate because we took all of the bills covering these various subjects and sent them to the War Department, with the request that they reconcile them and report to us as to the propriety of reporting back the bills as they were, or making such changes as would unify the law and harmonize the different statutes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Do I understand, then, that the Military Affairs Committee has reached the determination that the principle of this bill is worthy of acceptance?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And it is only a matter of how it should be framed in formal legislation?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is all.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, having a bill similar to that referred to, as I have no doubt many other Senators have presented similar bills, may there not be an understanding that in voting for this amendment of the Senator from Florida we do not yield the other measures, nor is it regarded as a substitute for them? They will remain before the Military Affairs Committee for such action as it may give them.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have received a very large number of letters in respect to the bill which I introduced some weeks ago to grant three months' pay to each discharged soldier and give him his uniform and overcoat and other articles of apparel as his own property. I appreciate the necessity for early action on the revenue bill, and therefore I will take but a moment.

The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has assured me that the bill (H. R. 13366) will undoubtedly pass the Senate at an early date, giving to each soldier, marine, and sailor, when honorably discharged, his uniform, his overcoat, and other articles of personal apparel as his own property. I ask leave at this time to include in the RECORD a few letters I have received on this subject. I have received over a thousand; but I have here only about half a dozen in favor of the passage of this bill, urging that the uniform be given to the soldiers, and three months' pay additional.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEATTLE, WASH., December 13, 1918.

Whereas a bill has been introduced in Congress to allow 90 days' pay and the uniform to all soldiers being discharged from the United States Army, and we, being in sympathy with this movement and knowing that it will be of great benefit to our brave defenders, heartily indorse said bill: Therefore be it

Resolved by Geo. H. Fortson Camp No. 2, of the Department of Washington and Alaska, United Spanish War Veterans, in regular session assembled on this 12th day of December, 1918, that we indorse the granting of said 90 days' pay and the presentation of the uniform to each of the men being discharged from our Army; and be it further

Resolved, That Senator ASHURST be notified and that copies of this resolution be forwarded to our Senators in Congress.

This resolution was proposed and adopted by the unanimous vote of all members present.

GEO. H. FORTSON CAMP NO. 2, U. S. W. V.,
E. A. VORIS, Adjutant.

FREEPORT, ILL., December 12, 1918.

Senator HENRY F. ASHURST,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Permit me to congratulate you on the bill you presented to Congress with reference to soldiers' and sailors' uniforms and pay. If the bill does not go through, let me suggest that you offer a bill prohibiting eulogy, as 80 per cent of these men can not live on eulogy, and if they are not entitled to their old clothes and the ordinary pay that private individuals would give to a suddenly discharged chauffeur, I believe such a bill would be in order.

The American public assisted in furnishing amusement and extra comforts which the Government did not furnish, and as such an American citizen I am willing to pay for a uniform for any discharged soldier. I have had no near relatives in the service and am beyond the age myself, but God knows I owe to a discharged soldier a suit of clothes and a pair of shoes, in addition to such amusements as I have assisted in furnishing him. As I say, I will pay for one suit, and I hope Congress will see its way clear to pay for the balance. Let the boys know we mean what we say.

I will send a copy of this to our Senators—SHERMAN and LEWIS; also to our Congressman Mr. JOHN C. MCKENZIE.

Wishing you success and assuring you that I believe the American people, if their attention is called to it, approve of your bill, I remain,

Yours, very truly,

——— ———.

BREWTON, ALA., December 11, 1918.

Senator HENRY F. ASHURST,
Washington.

DEAR SIR: I have just read the newspaper report of your bill to give our discharged Army and Navy men their old uniforms and 90 days' extra pay. I heartily indorse the proposition and I think every loyal, soulful American citizen will do the same. Your statements in support of the plan are just and thoughtful and do you great honor.

We are going to have a great big debt to pay in the coming years and these boys will help us pay it. Some of them will return to well-to-do homes and good bank accounts, but 9 out of 10 of them will feel good with the hundred extra dollars in their pockets.

How glorious, that their courage and sacrifices have left us able to make this small demonstration of our appreciation of their honoring services to the Nation. Greeting cheers we will give them heartily, but these are cheap and evanescent. Your bill will furnish a tangible token of the Nation's gratitude.

This writer is 74 years old—reached his home June 27, 1865; buried his old gray jacket with the honors of war, and framed his Confederate $50 bill payable by the Confederate States of America—after treaty of peace with the United States—bless its old soul. I took its promise and will for the deed, but our boys are luckier than their fathers.

They tell us that our Nation is the richest in the world and sending billions to feed the hungry of Europe and Asia. If we order our boys to haul off their khaki for other soldiers and another war, might we not as well furl "Old Glory" that we may quickly forget the story of Chateau-Thierry, St. Mihiel, and Argonne Forest?

Yours, very truly,

SAGINAW, MICH.,
December 13, 1918.

Hon. JOSEPH W. FORDNEY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR FRIEND: I see that a bill has been introduced in the Senate by Senator ASHURST, of Arizona, to permit the soldiers, sailors, and marines to keep and wear their uniforms and also to give them three months' pay.

I believe this is one of the very best bills that has ever been introduced in Congress to relieve and assist the young men who have been in the Army or Navy. I believe that the uniforms should belong to the young men who have bought them and that they be at liberty to wear them any time when they see fit. Surely no one but a soldier would want to wear these uniforms, and they would not have to sell to a person who is not a soldier.

Every person that I have talked with approves of this measure, and I hope that you will do all you possibly can to see that this bill becomes a law.

With kind regards, I remain,
Sincerely, yours,

E. L. BEACH.

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y.,
December 16, 1918.

Senator ASHURST.

SIR: I am pleased to note in Army and Navy Journal your bill S. 5050.

I trust you will make it apply to discharged officers as well as enlisted men.

The officers have made just as large sacrifices in proportion, many giving up established businesses, which it will take many months to reestablish. I speak from experience, as I am back to my business and find it is not easy under present uncertain conditions of business.

Officers have each paid $400 to $500 or more for uniforms, and it would be only fair to permit them to wear their uniforms three months and get some wearing value out of them. It would also seem only fair to allow the officers 50 per cent of the cost of their uniforms on discharge.

Appreciating your efforts in our behalf, I am,
Sincerely, yours,

Eighteen months' service in United States and in France.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., December 18, 1918.

Senator HENRY F. ASHURST,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I notice in the press that you have introduced a bill to pay soldiers and sailors three months' salary after the date of actually mustering out. As a citizen, I feel that this is so eminently just and proper that I take the liberty of writing you.

It is very important to the country that each soldier and sailor keep his uniform for use in after years, and not only for use but as one of the physical evidences of his devotion to his country and his association in this great world crisis, that is to mean so much to this country in years to come.

In addition to the numerous grounds assigned in the press that you have advanced in support of your bill, all of which are most excellent, I beg to suggest an additional reason why this is proper, to wit: I know from personal observation in not less than a half dozen of the large cantonments of the South that a large percentage of the men when they went to camp were compelled to wear their own clothing for quite a while, until they could be properly equipped with Government uniforms. They, therefore, furnished the Government their own equipment for a considerable time.

I am sure that it will require from two to three months' pay for the average soldier or sailor under present conditions to buy sufficient clothing, shoes, etc., to enable him to return to private life decently; and since, in most instances, he wore out one full suit in the service of the Government before he was fully equipped it does seem to me to be simple justice for the country to provide him the funds with which to reimburse himself. This seems to me a sufficient reason, and when coupled with the many reasons you have assigned, as brought out in the press, to impel the passage of some bill to give the relief along the lines as suggested.

Respectfully, yours,

PORTLAND, OREG., December 2, 1918.

SENATOR: Note your bill to give soldiers and sailors their uniforms and 90 days' pay.

God knows this is little enough, when they were willing to give their lives. They are not ashamed of the uniform, either, and why make them lay it aside after 60 or 90 days? Why not allow them to wear it as long as it lasts? Our fathers did so in 1812 and 1865. Why not the sons?

E. T. MORRIS.

CAMP LEWIS, VA., November 30, 1918.

Senator ASHURST, of Arizona.

GREETING: As a constituent of yours and a former newspaper publisher of Tucson, Ariz., I take this liberty to recognize your effort in behalf of the United States soldiers. Your idea of advancing 90 days' pay to the soldier upon his discharge from the Army has the unanimous approval of all the soldiers of Camp Lewis for the following reasons:

1. The average soldier has an allotment, war-risk insurance, and liberty bonds as an obligation.

2. His capacity for attaining the same amount of money as a civilian has been curtailed by his sacrifice in the present emergency.

3. The winter is at hand, and as it will be several months before conditions industrially will be normal again it would be a splendid idea to give him a nucleus for his new start in life, as they term it, and also to prevent any opportunity of social or industrial dissensions.

4. It is true that if the soldier is so remembered that the favor, plus the experience he has gained in economy with the Army, will make a basis for a brighter and better citizenship than before the war.

5. May it come about so as the soldier will receive it upon the day he is discharged and not 90 days after.

Hoping you will be able to interest all of the Senators in this essential idea, I remain,
Respectfully,

CAMP FUNSTON, KANS.,
December 18, 1918.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: It was noted with a great deal of satisfaction by all the men in the Army that you had introduced a bill into the Senate to pay the men for three months at the rate of pay of their grade upon their discharge from the Army.

A great deal of interest has been manifested in the ultimate outcome of this bill since the time it was introduced, but up to the present time there has been nothing shown in the papers as to what disposition was made of it. As you know, immediately upon the discharge being granted from the Army it will be necessary for a vast majority of the men discharged to purchase complete outfits of civilian clothing. This as you know can not be done for less than the amount you have proposed to have paid the men.

The French Republic has agreed to the introduction of a similar bill into the Chamber of Deputies which proposes to indemnify discharged soldiers in the amount of 250 francs. Is France more able or more willing to give her men returning to civil life at least a chance for an even break than is our own, the richest and most prosperous nation on the earth?

I am writing this letter in my own behalf as well as that of the many other men who were taken away from their civil pursuits of happiness and profit to serve in the Army, and who without complaint have served to the best of their several abilities in such places as they were sent, and now that they are about to be discharged find that a hardship in being properly equipped to reenter civil life is about to be encountered; hence this appeal to you to urge this bill and show the men who have served just the attitude of the men whom they have helped to send to the Halls of Congress to represent them.

KANSAS CITY, MO., December 9, 1918.

DEAR SIR: Hope you get your bill through, as I have three nephews over in France and I know they would like to keep their uniforms as a relic. I herewith mail you two statements of Kansas City Star. There has been several like this and you may not see them. This to show what interest is being taken.

Respectfully, JOHN MEREDITH.

GIVE DISCHARGED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS UNIFORMS AND 90 DAYS' PAY.

To the Star:

I read in to-day's paper Senator ASHURST, of Arizona, had proposed a bill giving soldiers and sailors the uniforms they wear at the time of their discharge and 90 days' pay.

I think that the best proposition made for our returning soldiers and sailors. With what pride they will look on those uniforms in days to come—just as we look at the relics used by our ancestors! It keeps in the heart real patriotism and love of country. It will not be a memory only, but something tangible.

What with the drilling, the embarkation, the arrival in foreign countries, the terrible battles they have been in, and the home-coming, it seems to me they will be dazed and hardly fit for work. What will they do? They must live. Some have no homes to come to. I am sure Uncle Sam is willing to let them rest without worry.

I hope the bill will be passed.

DAUGHTER OF AMERICAN REVOLUTION.

LYNCHBURG, VA., December 10, 1918.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am writing you to say that I heartily agree with your bill to allow the retiring soldiers to retain their uniforms and to be given 90 days' extra pay, too.

The uniforms will be worth nothing to the Government, but will mean a great deal to the soldiers now, as well as in after years.

They will all be broke when they return, and certainly 90 days' extra pay is little enough compensation for the magnificent work they have done. I believe the people are with you practically unanimously on this proposition.

Yours, truly, G. M. BRASFIELD.

BALTIMORE, MD., December 11, 1918.

United States Senator ASHURST.

SIR: In to-night's paper I read of the bill you have introduced to give each discharged soldier his uniform and three months' pay, and from experience I can say it is the most humane bill I have ever read. When I state "from experience," I was discharged in 1898—November 7—and being a newly married man with $28 finals, my uniform was a godsend. Some will spend it in a few days, but the majority will see it as I do. I also wish to state that I hope to be a resident of Arizona soon—where at, I do not know. My reason is that, being a sufferer from tuberculosis, malarial poisoning, and pyorrhea, I am compelled to keep moving to keep able to support my family, and my wife's help. Now, I will tell you of a little incident. Being an ex-soldier, I have always endeavored to make my home pleasant for as many of the boys as I could financially entertain. So last June I saw, while working at my trade at Fort McHenry Base Hospital No. 2, an artilleryman from France. He looked as if he had gone through some hard times, and I accosted him and invited him to my home, as I had done to other boys. He told me he had not been paid for nine months. His record, or papers, could not catch him. And he had been operated on for appendicitis in mid-ocean, and since then in New York, and was due for one in Fort McHenry. Anyhow, I fixed him up financially, also with tobacco, and took him home. He picked up wonderfully since then. His last operation has been successful and I introduced him to a perfect young lady, and they get married Christmas, and when he gets his discharge we are all going to Arizona. We had decided to go before, and now since I have read your bill it confirms my idea of Arizona. I am no novice to the West, as I spent seven years in California. We intend to go as soon as we are able. He is a farmer and I am a practical bungalow builder (as they are built in California).

Hoping your bill will pass with no opposition, and when we become voters in Arizona you can rely on two, no matter which political party.

I am, most respectfully,

W. S. HARRIS,
1316 James Street, Baltimore, Md.

P. S.—My penmanship comes from nervousness, which came from my own physical troubles. W. S. H.

—

ANNISTON, ALA., November 30, 1918.

Senator ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Notice of preparation of your bill was published in a local newspaper, the Anniston Star, Anniston, Ala. The same newspaper published statements of Quartermaster Department, and it said that millions of articles of clothing were on hand unissued.

It occurred to me that inasmuch as such equipment was on hand, and, too, inasmuch as all present issued clothing was "second hand" when issued, that some or all of the surplus new uniforms be given the boys, who would like to go home looking decent, but who are ashamed to wear the oversizes and patched trousers, etc., home. It is perfectly proper that we soldiers should sacrifice our pride and even substance and life if necessary, but as we go home after such as we have been through, "much or little," it is no more than right that we should have the $90, or three months' pay, and the clothes which are on hand now unissued.

Most men would be able to find employment, and maybe the $90 would be the means of them getting started over in some new or old occupation.

We boys admire you and appreciate such a man in the Senate.

Yours, respectfully,

Pvt. B. E. PROCTOR, JR.,
First Company, Ninety-eighth Division, Camp McClellan, Ala.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I think I can say for the members of the Committee on Military Affairs that there is really no opposition in that committee to the bill offered by my colleague [Mr. TRAMMELL].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, is it not true that that bill has been approved now by a majority of the members of the committee; that they have signed their approval to it, and it is ready to be reported and passed?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think so.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We could call it up this afternoon.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, do I understand that this amendment, in substance and effect, is approved by the Military Affairs Committee?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true. It has been approved by the Military Affairs Committee and directed to be reported, subject only to the Secretary of War changing its verbiage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I desire now to complete the amendments in relation to section 900, in completion of the work which was done by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] in his amendment.

By that amendment we have stricken from paragraph (1) everything except automobiles and motorcycles. Now, it has occurred to me that all of these items should be treated in exactly the same way; that there is no reason which may be urged in behalf of one which is not good in relation to the others. They are not luxuries. That has been determined, I think, by everyone who has given the matter consideration.

Then in section 3, on page 194, is the tax on tires, inner tubes, parts, or accessories for any of the articles enumerated in this other paragraph. In other words, I ask now to amend the bill further by striking from it the tax on automobiles, motorcycles, and the new parts which apply to those particular items.

This is all one subject. It is all treated, or should be treated, in exactly the same manner. These were luxury taxes. They are not such; and we having decided that in some cases, it seems to me that we ought to include the other matters.

I do not care to occupy the attention of the Senate on the subject, and I am perfectly willing to take the judgment of this body upon it. Therefore I move to have it treated the same as the other amendment, which was carried, and to strike from the bill subdivision "(1)" on page 193, and subdivision "(3)" at the top of page 194.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of lines 18 to 22 on page 193 and lines 1 to 5 on page 194.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we make no point at all upon the time when the motion is made, and agree with the statement of the Chair that it can be considered; but I think we ought to state again, from the committee to the Senate, just what you are doing.

The committee took the bulk of the burden off of the automobile business and the automobile operation. The House put a tax on gasoline. We struck that out. The House put a tax upon each owner and user of an automobile. We struck that out. The House put a tax of 10 per cent on automobiles and motorcycles. We reduced it to 5. The House put a tax of 10 per cent on accessories, tires, and things of that kind connected with automobiles. We reduced it one-half. Now, you are about to strike out the last $55,000,000 that we have left in this bill. It is estimated that the automobiles and motorcycles will pay $40,000,000, and that the accessories will pay $15,000,000. That is $55,000,000 more. You are about to strike that out, also, or the motion is to strike it out.

Speaking for the committee—I think I can speak for a large majority of them—we do not think this ought to be done. We do believe that this tax is reasonable on the manufacturers of automobiles and motorcycles and on these additional supplies for automobiles. It is reduced one-half from what the House had it, and the industry has been freed from the balance of the tax by taking it off of gasoline and taking it off of the operators of automobiles.

I do not believe it is possible to get this bill through without some of this tax being left. I believe it will either go back on gasoline, or it will go back on the operators of automobiles, or it will go back somewhere; and this is the best place to leave it—on the manufacturers of the automobiles and motorcycles. I think the action of the committee was at least wise in leaving this tax in the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the argument that was made in favor of striking the tax off of the tractors, and so forth, was an argument made seemingly for the benefit of the agricultural class, and for the benefit of no one else. I know enough about the agricultural class to know that there are $10 or perhaps $50 invested in automobiles by that class where there is $1 invested in these other articles which you wish to protect from the tax. A little Ford is no more of a luxury to the farmer than a horse and buggy were a few years ago. Nearly every farmer has one of that kind, or one similar to it. It is just as necessary for him to run to town in his automobile, especially in the Western country, where quite often he is 30 or 40 or 50 miles from a town of importance, as it was in the olden days to drive his horse and buggy that distance.

It does seem to me that none of these are really luxury taxes, and if they are not luxury taxes they ought to go out, all of them. I voted to take them all out, and I would vote again to take them out to-day, because I think it applies just as much to one class as to another; and, although I represent a purely agricultural State, I do not want to say to the man in that State: "You can have your article free, but the merchant in the little town must pay taxes on an article that is produced by the same manufacturer." I think they ought to be all treated alike.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, we are just adding about seventy-five or eighty millions——

Mr. NELSON. Oh, Mr. President, two hundred and fifty millions.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator is speaking of taxes, and not expenses.

Mr. NELSON. I mean the expenses. We have just added an amendment here increasing the expenses of the Government $250,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. Very well. The Senator knows more than I do about it, and I will accept his figures. It only accentuates the position that I am going to take.

I voted against the amendment that was offered a few moments ago, although it was supposed to be offered in behalf of the agricultural interests, and a large part of my State is dedicated to that vocation; but I have not heard any considerable protest on the part of the agriculturists or farmers in regard to this matter. The only protests, the only letters I have had, have come from the manufacturers of automobiles and the manufacturers of these articles with which we are now dealing; and I suspect that they are the ones who are most concerned about this matter. In view of the fact that we are adding expenses here to the extent that we are, we ought not to undertake to reduce upon those matters which, whether they are necessaries or luxuries, can afford in this emergency to pay this tax.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just one word. A couple of hours ago the Senate voted to place a tax of 10 per cent upon clothing. Now we are going to vote whether we are going to impose a tax upon automobiles or not, after cutting it from 10 per cent to 5. I can not see the consistency in any such course of action.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I ask for a division of the question. I ask that the motion to strike out subdivision "(1)" on page 193 be voted on as one question, and that the motion to strike out subdivision "(3)" on page 194 be voted on as another question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to strike out subdivision "(1)" on page 193, as amended.

The motion was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the motion to strike out paragraph "(3)," on page 194.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I desire to call up an amendment I offered some days ago on page 8, line 4, to insert a paragraph as follows:

(c) When parcels are sold from a tract of land as part of a plan of development and disposition, no gain shall be deemed to accrue to the owner from the sale of any parcel until enough shall have been sold to return to him the cost of the tract or its value on March 1, 1913, if it was acquired by him on or before that date.

The other day in discussing the bill I called attention to this very important situation which affects the irrigation industry. Under the present ruling of the department if a man has an irrigation enterprise, and sells any of it, the difference between the cost of the few acres which he sells and the rest is considered as income, although the cost of construction of the work has not yet been paid for. In cases of that kind where the project is being developed, the amendment provides that the person shall not be charged until after the cost has been determined. I certainly hope that the amendment will be accepted. I trust it will not be opposed by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a word. I can not see why this amendment should be adopted after the provisions of relief have been given in the bill. It seems to me it is simply an amendment to relieve real estate agents in the sale of land.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Oh, not at all.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not construe it in any other way than that. Of course, I do not care to discuss it any further. I am perfectly willing to have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I agree with the view taken by the Senator from Utah representing the chairman of the committee. We are told it is necessary, but I do not think there is any more reason to apply it to real estate than to a stock of goods or anything else.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I discussed the matter the other day, and among all those who understand enterprises of this sort it was thought that, without some amendment of this kind, you will not have any more irrigation projects developed through private capital. I sincerely trust that the amendment may be adopted. It would tend to relieve the situation where the man has made no gain and when he has to pay out every dollar which he received in discharging the mortgage he put on the land in order to construct irrigation work. I sincerely hope that there will be no objection to this amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. May I ask the Senator whether, when the amount which has been placed in the enterprise is paid, it is subject to assessment?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Every dollar that comes in is to be considered as gain, and is income taxable at that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I heartily agree with the Senator that unless it is done we are not going to have the large irrigation enterprises where sales are made in the western country. It seems to me we ought to encourage that kind of development in the West.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish simply to say that the practice of the department to-day is not to impose a tax upon any proposition until there is real gain made.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I think I can give the Senator some information, at least, which I received directly from the department. In such a case as I have mentioned, when the first 80 acres is sold the difference between the actual cost of 80 acres and the sale price is figured as income, and if you sell enough so that the income will meet the running expenses for the year, it is considered gain, although there may be a mortgage on the property of $1,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Whatever interest is paid on the mortgage is allowed to be deducted.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. No; it is only the interest on the mortgage which is permitted to be deducted.

Mr. SMOOT. That is exactly what I said—the interest on the mortgage is allowed to be deducted before any gain can possibly be shown. Not only that, these payments are made in perhaps 10 different yearly payments, and history shows that many of the payments made in the first year are turned back into the company by the purchaser of the project and represented by the payment of the purchase price. I can not see but that the ruling of the department and the practice of the department covers everything that ought to be covered in a case such as is referred to in the Senator's amendment.

I am deeply interested in the development of the western country as the Senator, and deeply interested in seeing the reclamation projects established, maintained, and made a success of, but really I think this is going entirely too far even in that case, hard as it was.

Therefore, Mr. President, I can not understand why the Senator asks for this particular legislation. I do not believe it is going to assist anything in any irrigation projects.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I ask for it for the reason that in any irrigation enterprise there is not a dollar of actual profit until you have sold enough land to pay the cost of building the work and the cost of the land. There is not and can not be a dollar of net profit in it, but after that is paid then the receipt becomes profit. It is simply a question of doing justice and not taxing a gain or profit until a thing becomes a gain or profit.

Mr. SMOOT. That same thing applies to a merchant who has a stock of goods. There is no profit made until the goods are sold. It applies to every farmer in the country. It applies to every person who pays a tax. I can not see why this particular case should be differentiated.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is the tax which the Senator speaks of to relieve this irrigation project a tax imposed upon net profits?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. The provision which I offer is not to consider that as a gain until enough land has been sold to pay the cost of the project.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I wish to ask the Senator a question further. A moment ago he said that there is no gain until enough land is sold to repay for the land, and until that time has been reached it can not be considered as a taxable proposition. There is no profit until the cost has been fully repaid.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Unfortunately it is because of the ruling of the department that I have offered this amendment. I think the Senator's ideas should be carried out, but it is because of an adverse ruling of the department that I have offered the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment presented by the Senator from New Mexico.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I offer the following amendment:

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. Add a new section, to read as follows:

That the provisions of section 5 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1917, relating to intoxicating liquors in interstate commerce, as amended by section 1110 of an act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, be, and the same are hereby, made applicable to the District of Columbia.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I understand that this is the same amendment which was proposed recently as a rider on a bridge bill, and to which the presiding officer called the attention of the Senate. I think it is equally obnoxious to the present proceedings when we are considering a bill providing for revenue. If it were in order, I would object on the ground that it is not germane, but I understand that objection would only lie in case of a general appropriation bill, so the only recourse I have is to appeal to the Senate by informing this body exactly what the amendment calls for.

It is to deny to the citizens and temporary sojourners in the Capital of the Nation the privilege of importing wine into the District, against which there is now no prohibition. There is a prohibition against the manufacture, sale, or the giving away of wine. There are no barrooms nor hotels nor clubs now enjoying the privilege of sale or of giving away wine. So there is the practical complete prohibition of the liquor traffic in the District, with the exception of the privilege which has this many months been accorded to residents to import wine for their own table use, and which is now proposed to be denied.

If this amendment is adopted there will be no means by which the citizens of this District can regale themselves except by seeking sanctuaries in the legations and the embassies. We are giving to the foreigners a privilege which we deny to our fellow citizens. I would urge that we move slowly, in view of the fact that there will be national prohibition not later than February, 1920. The New York Sun yesterday enumerated 38 States which would ratify by January next the Federal amendment, which by its own provision goes into effect one year later; so in February, 1920, there will be no liquor of any kind sold or manufactured in the United States, including the District of Columbia.

If this amendment prevails it cuts the privilege off in the District of Columbia prematurely, now enjoyed by States that are not now dry.

We are made an exception, and as the law-making body reside in the District of Columbia it is asking much of them to deny themselves this privilege which is enjoyed in so many States where prohibition laws do not now obtain.

Why anticipate February, 1920? It is but a year. It enables the Government to gradually cut down libations. Citizens will not be exposed to the danger of suffering from the shock, and I believe it is a good medical practice to wean a man away from the bottle slowly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. PHELAN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If this amendment should pass the Senate there would be a few days of delay before the conference agrees upon it and its approval. Why could not the gentlemen so situated lay in what they needed in the meantime?

Mr. PHELAN. Owing to congestion of traffic between Baltimore and Washington or New York and Washington, it would be practically impossible within that period to supply the demand.

It seems to me it is dealing in a very small way with the District of Columbia by denying it a privilege enjoyed elsewhere and rather taking advantage of a position which gentlemen enjoy by holding a majority to punish, even to torture, those citizens who are less favored than ourselves in strength and ability to resist this gentle temptation.

I will not discuss now the practice of wine drinking at meals, something demonstrated as wholesome by the countries of the Old World and approved by the Bible itself. "Drink no longer water, but take a little wine for the stomach's sake," is an injunction, I believe, coming from a pious and serious authority many years ago and still advised by the medical profession.

So it is not the drinking of wine at table that produces disease or vice or crime. It is a healthful and salubrious practice in moderation, and I believe the citizens of Washington are given to moderation.

I would call the Senator's attention to this thought: Notwithstanding the position which the citizens of this District now enjoy, the police have, without warrant of law, been arresting all manner of men coming into the District of Columbia carrying containers with liquor. There is no law at present where such importation is forbidden, and yet the municipal authorities are humiliating men by bringing them into the police court to there determine whether the wines are for their own personal use. They are prosecuting that practice so diligently that there is much indignation and editorial expression in this community in enforcing a so-called law which has, in fact, no place upon the statute books. I do not know that it has been abused here; whether it is abused or not, it is a privilege which the citizens of this community should enjoy until forbidden, and they should not be discriminated against by an act of Congress. This community has no means of expressing itself except through Congress. It is denied the privilege enjoyed by other communities of vote and representation, and being thus made helpless, it is the refinement of cruelty for Congress to pass a law of this kind. I will propose an amendment in good season.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the Senator from California has restated in his eloquent way some of the old but long-ago exploded antiprohibition arguments. I merely want to remind him that the bridge that presents itself now is a safer and securer one than the Tennessee River bridge, the bill which I attempted to amend a week or two ago by offering this bone-dry measure as a rider thereon.

I have here letters from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia and from the chief of police which show the immediate necessity of action of this kind. After receiving these letters I have deemed it my duty to present this measure as an amendment to this bill. I ask that the letters be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
METROPOLITAN POLICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., December 12, 1918.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am exceedingly glad to learn from you that the bill to apply the Reed bone-dry law to the District of Columbia has been placed on the Senate calendar.

It has been most unfortunate, of course, that during the year the District has been dry under the Sheppard bill the National Capital is the only place in the whole United States where prohibition is enforced that has not enjoyed the benefits of the Reed bone-dry law. If it were not for the fact that the military-zone law has been extended to apply in the District of Columbia, conditions in Washington during the period of demobilization and thereafter would surely become very bad. As long as persons are permitted by law to bring large quantities of liquor into the National Capital and are free from prosecution if they make a fairly good statement that it is for personal use, just so long will a certain class of men and women stop honest labor and attempt to get quick profits in the bootlegging business. For more than a year the courts have become congested with cases growing out of arrest of persons who have entered the bootlegging business rather than work. The application of the Reed amendment to the District of Columbia, the same as it applies to all other dry territory in the United States, would make such a situation in the courts impossible.

Very truly, yours,

R. W. PULLMAN,
Major and Superintendent.

—

WASHINGTON, December 12, 1918.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are informed that it is your purpose to urge the immediate passage of the bill applying the Reed bone-dry act to the District of Columbia. The commissioners have already reported favorably on this bill, but they take this opportunity to urge you to use every possible effort to bring about its immediate enactment into law.

The District of Columbia is the only prohibition territory in the country to which the Reed amendment does not apply. This fact is largely responsible for the large importations of liquor that are now being made. The police department has been diligent, the dockets of the courts have been congested with liquor cases, but the conditions have become almost intolerable.

If the proposed bill becomes law, then the authorities here will have the same opportunity to enforce the prohibition laws as is enjoyed by the authorities in other prohibition territories. Without this opportunity, there will undoubtedly be a continuance of the highly profitable bootlegging business to the detriment of all conditions affecting law and order in this jurisdiction.

The commissioners trust that the Senate will pass the bill, and believe that its enactment into law will be followed immediately by a marked improvement in conditions in the District of Columbia.

Very respectfully,

THE BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS OF THE
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
By LOUIS BROWNLOW, President.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I simply want to say that the chief of police called on me yesterday and urged that Congress should take some action in this matter immediately. He said the Department of Justice and the War Department were cooperating with his force very diligently, but under the law as it now is they can do very little. He stated that four carloads of liquor came into this town yesterday by express and he expected a similar amount to-day. He called my attention to the particular class of people who seemed to be making it a business to bring liquor here from Baltimore. He also called my attention to particular instances that have happened in connection with attempting to enforce the law. One in particular illustrated, he said, the methods that are used. He stated that they use a particular term that is applicable to liquor and change that term from time to time; that he sent a part of his force down into the southwestern part of the city a few days ago; that a colored man got on the running board of the automobile and asked them if they wanted a certain thing, using a term which applies to liquor. The police force were in citizens' clothes and they said "yes," and he pulled out of his pocket a bottle, and they arrested him.

He began to cry, "Murder!" and the chief said that from 50 to 100 colored men came from different parts, that they were rushing up, and he had no doubt that they meant to attack the officer. The other men stepped out of the machine with Krag rifles in their hands, and the chief said that they had found that the colored men in the southwestern part of the city cared but very little for revolvers; that they seemed to estimate that only about one shot out of ten took effect; but that they did have very great respect for rifles. He therefore had his men armed with Krag rifles, and when the men carrying them got out of the machine the darkies faded away.

Mr. President, he states that it is taking nearly his entire force; that they must go in squads really to endeavor to enforce the law; that they have urged that Congress apply to this District the same law, at any rate, that we have applied to other territory where the legislative authority has prohibited the sale and manufacture of liquor; and he states that if we will do that, it will assist them wonderfully in the enforcement of the law.

Mr. President, as the letter states, the Government has established a war zone in the District of Columbia, and yet these people on whose account an appeal is made here to continue this traffic, are doing everything in their power to debauch the men who have saved our country. It seems to me that Congress ought not to hesitate one minute to put the force of its authority behind the men who are trying to protect not only the soldiers but this community from the evil effect of this traffic.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, a few days ago I made the statement here that the Post Office Department, and also the War Department, had largely broken down in the service of mail to the soldiers in France and in the service of mail from the soldiers in France to their families in America. I am now in receipt of a letter from the Postmaster General——

Mr. SHEPPARD. Will the Senator allow us to vote on this amendment?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Not until I get through. I see no possible reason why, if the Senator can bring in his favorite hobby of prohibition here, I can not bring in anything I please.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I was under the impression that the Senator from Nebraska was bringing up another subject, thinking that this one had been disposed of.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Not at all. I had not expected to interrupt the revenue bill, but if the Senator from Texas can interrupt the revenue bill with his particular hobby, I do not see any reason why the matter which I now present can not be discussed.

I am now in receipt of a letter from the Postmaster General, calling attention to the fact that since the 30th day of June, of this year, the Post Office Department has had nothing to do with the delivery or distribution of letters to the soldiers in France, but has simply delivered those letters to the War Department at a certain terminal in New York City; also, that it has had nothing to do with gathering the mail from the soldiers in France, but has simply received that mail at Bordeaux for transportation to the United States.

I shall ask to have the Postmaster General's letter published in the RECORD for the purpose of exonerating the Post Office Department for any failure since the 30th of June to see to the proper delivery of the mail. I will say, however, that prior to the 30th of June the Post Office Department was largely responsible for the failure to deliver mail promptly to the soldiers in France, and the breakdown was so complete that the War Department insisted on taking over the work. Since that time the War Department has made about as complete a failure as had the Post Office Department prior to that time. But in justice to the Postmaster General I send to the desk, and ask to have printed in the RECORD, a letter from Postmaster General Burleson.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission to do so will be granted.

The letter referred to is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., December 21, 1918.

Hon. G. M. HITCHCOCK,
United State Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR HITCHCOCK: I note on page 659 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 19 that you stated in the course of debate:

"The only explanation for the failure to deliver the mail to the soldiers in France and for the failure to receive the letters of soldiers in France written to their families in this country is, in my opinion, rank incompetency; and I take this occasion to say that it is one of the most disgraceful breakdowns of the Post Office Department in the first place and of the War Department management in the second place, that the soldiers in France have been deprived of their home letters and the folks at home have been deprived of the letters from their soldiers."

By reference to Senate Document No. 269, hereto attached, it will be seen that the Senate was advised by me in July last that, since June 30 preceding, the Army has been conducting the transportation and delivery of the mail to the soldiers addressed for delivery in the United States. Under this arrangement the mails for the troops in France are distributed by this service at the Chelsea Terminal railway post office at New York, in accordance with schemes furnished by the military authorities, and handed over in sealed sacks appropriately labeled to said authorities at the port of embarkation, whereupon the responsibility of this department ceases and the military authorities undertake the transportation and delivery of said mails to the individual soldiers addressed. In order to keep a proper check on the course of the mails and to locate responsibility for delays a daily report is rendered jointly by an official of the Army and an official of the Railway Mail Service in charge of the distribution of these mails, said statement showing the amount of mail distributed and sealed ready for dispatch and the amount of mail undistributed in the Chelsea Terminal at 12 o'clock noon each day. A perusal of these daily reports shows that on no occasion has there been as much as 24 hours' accumulation of undistributed mail, and that most of the reports show that the letter mails were distributed as fast as received. It is noted that you state that "there is comparatively little second-class mail that goes to France," and in connection therewith I desire to point out that for the three months ending November 30 there was distributed in the Chelsea Terminal railway post office a total of 226,408 sacks, or 13,233,935 pieces of printed matter and parcel post, a weekly average of 17,416 sacks, or 1,017,995 pieces.

Under the above-mentioned transfer of jurisdiction the mails from the soldiers in France are collected by the military authorities and handed over to this service at a distributing terminal in Bordeaux, from which time the postal service assumes responsibility for the handling of the same. In connection with the responsibility of the Post Office Department in the handling of these mails, I beg to quote from a letter of the United States postal agent on the subject, as follows:

"The boys in the Bordeaux Terminal take a great deal of pride in the manner in which they are preparing the mail for the States and the promptness with which they get it out of the terminal on the day of shipment. With the last truck load which left the terminal (dispatch of September 14) for the docks, not a letter, paper, or parcel was left in the terminal."

Since the dispatch of September 14, just mentioned, there have been 18 dispatches of mail from the troops in France, and from the reports received there were only two occasions on which the Bordeaux Terminal was not entirely cleared of all mail on hand, such a circumstance being due to conditions over which the post office has no control, such as insufficient space on board the steamer scheduled to receive the mails.

The mails from France are thoroughly distributed between sailings, in the Bordeaux Terminal railway post office, to States, railway post-office lines in this country, and even to cities, thereby expediting their handling and delivery upon receipt in the United States.

This is the situation since June 30, when the Army assumed responsibility for the mails going to France, at the port of New York, and delivered the mails from the soldiers in France to the post-office authorities at the port of Bordeaux. Every report that reaches me from my own officials, as well as from the Army, indicates that there is no delay in the handling of the mails under the jurisdiction of the Post Office Department. If you have any information indicating the breakdown of the Post Office Department's work in connection with the mails to or from the soldiers in France, I shall be pleased to be advised of the particulars in order that prompt remedy may be applied.

I must make this statement in justice to the Post Office Department, and feel certain that after reading this letter, also the accompanying document, you will see that this department is in no wise responsible for the delays to mail to and from the soldiers, complained of by you, and I feel certain that in fairness to this branch of the Government you will take action to correct your statements charging a breakdown on the part of the Post Office Department.

Sincerely, yours,

A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. By what authority does the Post Office Department avoid the responsibility, which rests upon it, of transmitting the mail and taking care of it?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from Idaho has asked a question which I am not able exactly to answer, except that we are in war times, and I suppose that the jurisdiction of the Post Office Department in France would only be such a jurisdiction as the military authorities yielded to it.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield to me a moment?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I think the answer to the question of the Senator from Idaho (Mr. BORAH) is that up to a certain time the Post Office Department had charge of the distribution of mail over in France, and that after that time—I do not recall the exact date—the War Department took charge of its distribution. I know that of my own knowledge, for one of my former clerks is engaged in the work over there. The War Department has had charge of the distribution of mail since last June, I think, and perhaps earlier.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The War Department has had charge of its distribution since the 30th of June. I had just stated that to the Senator from Idaho; but he now desires to know by what authority the Post Office Department abdicated its duty and turned it over to the War Department; and I say I do not know. I suppose the War Department had no right to distribute mail in France, and that the military authorities only got such authority by reason of the laws and customs of war.

Mr. BORAH. Well, Mr. President, it occurred to me that if I should write a letter to a friend in France I should not be exactly satisfied with my Government if the department which had charge of the matter should deliver the letter down here to the Treasury Department, for instance, or should deliver it at the suggestion of the Treasury Department somewhere. I was simply curious to know why and how it is done.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nebraska will allow me, I beg leave to say that during the Civil War our experience was this: The Post Office Department would send the mail to the different camps or to different organizations. After it reached there the mail would be distributed by the officers of the different corps or regiments. After the mail has reached France, manifestly, it seems to me, that the men connected with the Army were the proper ones to distribute it. Our Army was in motion; it was not like distributing mail here in the city of Washington, where every man's house is numbered. The Army was moving rapidly from place to place, from camp to camp. They were here one day and at another place another day. Hence, from the necessities of the case it was proper for the War Department to distribute the mail after it got to France. That is exactly the method which was pursued during the Civil War.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota is discussing one state of facts, but unfortunately there is another state of facts which exists.

Mr. NELSON. No; the mail was shipped over under the authority of the Post Office Department. It was only after the mail reached France that the Army took charge of its distribution.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, at the beginning there was an arrangement made under the toleration of the War Department, by which the Post Office Department undertook to distribute the mail to the various division headquarters, as I understand, in France, or possibly even to the headquarters of smaller units. That continued from the time we entered the war until the 30th of June. Thereupon, complaints having grown very great that the mail was irregular and very much delayed in delivery, the War Department insisted on taking over its distribution after it reached Bordeaux. It was finally given control of the mail at New York, and actually carried it over in Army transports and distributed it throughout France. Mail coming from France, from the soldiers there, was delivered to the Post Office Department at a terminal in Bordeaux, and is so delivered at the present time. So from the 30th of June on the Post Office Department is not actually responsible for the failure to deliver mail, but prior to that time it was responsible. There were, however, disagreements between the departments as to which department was chiefly responsible even before that time. There can be no question now that the failure is due to the failure of the War Department.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Nebraska who is responsible for the delivery of telegrams? I sent a telegram a few days ago from Harrisburg to my house in this city. I wrote it in the Harrisburg office at 2 o'clock in the afternoon—a straight message—and it was delivered to my house in this city on Sixteenth Street next morning after breakfast. That is a fair sample of the management of the telegraph service by the Post Office Department.

So far as I am concerned, there is not a branch of this Government that I would not willingly trust the mails to in preference to that branch which has had charge of it for the last four or five years.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think so far as this country is concerned, the Post Office Department during the war has done as well as has any other department. Depending largely on human effort, the Post Office Department, like other departments, has had to suffer from the fact that many of its old or active employees, able men, have been taken for war service.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question. He is a sensible, level-headed business man. How can he account for the delay of which I spoke? The telegram was sent at Harrisburg at 2 o'clock in the afternoon and delivered at my house here the next morning after breakfast. Is there any theory upon which that kind of service can be reconciled with efficiency? And that is only a fair sample. I have known it to occur over and over again, not only in my own case, but in the case of others.

I tell you the Post Office Department has voluntarily overburdened itself with responsibilities, political and otherwise, and is utterly lacking in efficiency which should go with the management of that great department of public service. From the top down it is incompetent; and yet we are talking about giving that officer new and added responsibility. I wish there were some way to have a vote in connection with this bill on the proposal of the Postmaster General to buy the telegraph and the telephone systems and attach them to his bureau. I think Congress would turn that unwise experiment down without a moment's hesitation. The present administration of the Post Office Department has not been successful and is already overburdened. The country has little confidence in Mr. Burleson's plans or purposes. His retirement from office is fondly anticipated, and will be hailed with real satisfaction by his countrymen.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understood the Senator desired to put something in the RECORD, but I hope the Senator will let us go on with this bill just as soon as he can possibly do so. Of course I do not wish to ask the Senator to desist from any argument he proposes to make, but the Senator sees that the result of the injection of this matter is to get away from the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is a very interesting subject.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understand it is an interesting subject, and I do not object to the Senator putting what he desires to put into the RECORD, but I hope we may conclude this discussion and get back to the bill as soon as possible; that is all I wish.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I wish to say that I agree fully with the contention made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] that it is a serious mistake which the Postmaster General has made in reaching out at this time to control business activities that Congress did not intend to put into his hands. I think the seizure of the cables was an utterly unjustified proceeding. I go so far as to say that it smacks of bad faith. Congress consented to give certain war powers to the President. Among those war powers were, if there was a war necessity, that he could take the telegraphs and the telephones, and when he took, in the name of the Postmaster General, the telegraphs and telephones there was no general complaint, because we were in the midst of war, and there may have been a justification for the seizure; but when after the war had closed in fact, if not in law, the Postmaster General took possession of the cables, not only those crossing the Atlantic Ocean to countries with which we were associated in the war, but also across the Pacific Ocean, which had no possible relation to the case, I think it was a high-handed outrage, and am frank to say so.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator is always frank.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think furthermore that it smacked of bad faith. Congress deliberately put the power into the hands of the administration for war purposes; but after the war is over it has been used to gratify the personal convictions, personal opinions, and personal wishes of the Postmaster General.

If he had desired to secure from Congress the right to take over the cables, he should have asked for it. I think there is no justification at all in any reason that has been stated or which can be stated for that seizure.

But I come back to the proposition that, so far as the administration of the post office in this country is concerned during the war, the Post Office Department has acquitted itself reasonably well. The delay in the delivery of the mail of the soldiers in France has, in my opinion, been a very serious breakdown. I have received a great many letters since I called attention to the failure the other day. My attention was called to one case which is only illustrative of many. A family here with a son in France received on the 20th day of December a letter which he had written on the 29th day of October. It was almost two months in getting to them. The times were critical, the war was raging at the time the letter was written; but from the 29th day of October to the 20th day of December the family did not even know whether the boy was alive or dead. That instance is only characteristic of hundreds of thousands of others. There is no excuse for such a business breakdown, because the letter mailed by that boy in France could have reached Bordeaux in two days, and when it reached Bordeaux it could have been transferred to this country in one of the regular dispatches, 18 of which have occurred since the 24th of September. The transportation of mail across the Atlantic has been regular and the boats have been leaving Bordeaux regularly for this country, but the gathering up of the mail in France among the Army there has been utterly neglected.

There may be some excuse for saying that it is difficult to deliver letters to the soldiers in the Army because they have been moved from place to place, but there can not be any excuse when an officer or a private soldier mails a letter in France for this country for that letter taking two months to reach the United States. The delay has been just about as bad and as aggravating in mail coming to this country as it has in that going to France.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, I should like to read a letter which has reference to what the Senator has said and is saying now, and describes a situation which I think we ought to condemn. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to read the letter.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The letter is directed to me, and is as follows:

DETROIT, MICH., December 20, 1918.

Senator CHARLES E. TOWNSEND,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TOWNSEND: In a recent issue of the Christian Science Monitor, on the editorial page, appears an excerpt from a letter of Secretary of War Baker to Mr. Fosdick. In this letter the Secretary dwells upon the need of keeping up the varied activities for entertaining and amusing our boys abroad in order to preserve their morale. Especially does he urge frequent and cheerful letters from home.

This sounds well, and we all agree with the idea, but as an illustration of the manner in which the Government does its part in the work, I am taking the liberty of writing you of my own experience.

On September 23 my boy, with the Ninety-first Division in France, on the eve before going into action wrote us that he had that day received letters from his mother and sisters. These letters were dated in July and on August 1.

In the battle that followed the boy was wounded, and on October 1 he reached an evacuation hospital, the location of which he was not permitted to give us. While there, in addition to his wound, he had a slight attack of scarlet fever and was isolated for a time. We have had letters from him at intervals of about four weeks, but up to November 20, the date of his last letter, he had not received a single letter from home or this country since September 23; that is, the latest news he had had from us was August 1.

Naturally we have written frequently, especially since we learned that he was in the hospital—an average probably of three letters a week. Further we have sent him drafts on Paris at times, which up to November 20 had not reached him, and, worst of all, he had received no pay from the Government for more than four months. We ourselves have never had official word that he had been wounded.

I am aware that this is not an unusual case. There are hundreds of similar ones, and while the war was actually on we all loyally kept silence and suffered in secret. But now it seems to me that this deplorable situation should be remedied. I am pleased to see in this morning's Washington news that Senator HITCHCOCK is denouncing this incompetence in the Post Office Department. The facts surrounding my son's case are therefore given you as a matter of duty to his mother and myself and to other mothers and fathers who have endured like anxieties.

The mail is the closest connection between the men across seas and their loved ones at home. Feeling confident that your best efforts will be directed toward making this connection much closer than it now is, I am, with kind regards,

Yours, very truly, F. A. PLATT.

I repeat that this is similar to hundreds of letters which are coming in daily to the Members of Congress. It does seem to me now that the people whose sons and loved ones are in beds in hospitals at least should be able to communicate with them through the mail, and that their mail should come back home.

I am very glad for myself that the Senator from Nebraska has taken up this matter, because it is a serious one. It was serious during the war; it is still serious; and something ought to be done to correct the situation.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I sympathize with the Senator from Washington, who described the conditions in the District of Columbia whereby negroes had resisted the execution of the law, as he contended, and brought spirits into the District. Of course, that is due to the fact that the negroes have been advised by their counsel, and indeed by the courts, that there is no law against importing liquor into the District, and therefore they were fighting, doubtless, for their immemorial right to live under "the reign of law." The police department is trying to enforce something which does not stand upon the statute books, and probably that is the cause of much of the trouble. If it were the law, I am quite sure these negroes would abide by it, or they could be very easily made to abide by it without the show of force.

It is distilled spirits which causes intoxication and leads to lawlessness and crime; and I am sure that there has been imported into this District a quantity of poor liquor that is highly detrimental to those who use it. I have always taken the position that there was no objection on the part of the wine-growing States to the prohibition of spirituous liquor. In view of the fact that wine itself if innocuous, and does not lead to intoxication, and is a table beverage, I move as an amendment to the amendment the insertion of these words:

Provided, That the prohibition contained in said act shall not apply to wine, beer, and ale.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am glad to have the assurance of the Senator from California that if we do provide by law for preventing these matters, these good people will abide by the law. That is what we are trying to do. That is what we hope to do by the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I do not desire to delay the proceedings, but I have another amendment to suggest.

It may not be known to the Senate that by the provisions of the law as it now stands, as interpreted by the Senator from Texas, there is no power in the citizen of the District of Columbia to export wine which he may have on hand to another community, though it be "wet." I can not understand why such an interpretation should be given to the law, because it should be in the interest of prohibition to permit free exportation. Therefore I move—this certainly is a harmless amendment—to amend the amendment of the Senator from Texas by inserting the following:

Provided, That nothing in said act shall prohibit the exportation of liquors from the District of Columbia.

The object is to give those who have a supply of wines and liquor on hand the opportunity at least of sending it away.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, the Senator from California takes a very peculiar position. At the opening of this matter he was very much afraid we would not have an ample supply in the District, and now he wants to get rid of all that may be in existence here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from California to the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Jones, Wash.	Moses	Smoot
Bankhead	Kellogg	Myers	Sutherland
Borah	Kendrick	Nelson	Swanson
Brandegee	Kenyon	New	Thomas
Fernald	Kirby	Norris	Townsend
Fletcher	Knox	Nugent	Trammell
Gerry	La Follette	Overman	Vardaman
Gronna	Lenroot	Penrose	Warren
Hale	Lewis	Phelan	Watson
Harding	Lodge	Pollock	Weeks
Henderson	McKellar	Pomerene	Williams
Hitchcock	McNary	Shafroth	Wolcott
Johnson, Cal.	Martin, Ky.	Sheppard
Jonson, S. Dak.	Martin, Va.	Simmons

During the roll call,

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). I announce the absence of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

After the conclusion of the roll call,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD]. [Putting the question.] By the sound the ayes seem to have it.

Mr. THOMAS. I call for a division.

Mr. JONES of Washington and Mr. KIRBY called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BRANDEGEE (when his name was called). Making the same transfer as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]. I am satisfied from his votes in the past that he would vote on this question as I shall vote. Therefore I am going to take the liberty of voting. I vote "yea."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], who is not present. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "yea."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. Being unable to secure a transfer, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], but I believe if he were present he would vote as I shall vote, and I therefore take the liberty of voting. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GERRY (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I understand that on this question he would vote as I would vote, and therefore I shall allow my vote to stand.

Mr. KENDRICK. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I inquire if the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He has not.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I withhold my vote, having a general pair with that Senator.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. LODGE. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON];

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS]; and

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

The result was announced—yeas 42, nays 18, as follows:

YEAS—42.

Ashurst	Jones, N. Mex.	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Smoot
Borah	Kendrick	Norris	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Kenyon	Nugent	Swanson
Fernald	Kirby	Overman	Townsend
Fletcher	Lenroot	Poindexter	Trammell
France	McKellar	Pollock	Vardaman
Gronna	McNary	Pomerene	Warren
Hale	Martin, Ky.	Shafroth	Wolcott
Henderson	Martin, Va.	Sheppard
Johnson, S. Dak.	Moses	Simmons

NAYS—18.

Brandegee	Kellogg	New	Watson
Gerry	Knox	Penrose	Weeks
Harding	La Follette	Phelan	Williams
Hitchcock	Lewis	Thomas
Johnson, Cal.	Lodge	Underwood

NOT VOTING—36.

Baird	Frelinghuysen	Owen	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Gay	Page	Smith, Md.
Calder	Goff	Pittman	Smith, Mich.
Colt	Gore	Ransdell	Smith, S. C.
Culberson	Hardwick	Reed	Spencer
Cummins	Hollis	Robinson	Sterling
Curtis	King	Saulsbury	Thompson
Dillingham	McCumber	Sherman	Wadsworth
Fall	McLean	Shields	Walsh

So Mr. SHEPPARD'S amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 26, line 12, it is proposed to strike out "on or after April 6, 1917."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, I have offered this amendment, and I have given notice that I propose to offer another amendment which strikes out the same language, on page 56, in line 7. What I shall have to say is applicable to both of these amendments. I shall address my remarks, however, to the pending amendment.

The amendment in question has to do with the provision of the bill which undertakes to provide for a case in which there may be an amortization of plant in those industries which were constructed for, or which have to do with, the production of articles contributing to the prosecution of the present war. The language in the section is as follows:

(8) In the case of buildings, machinery, equipment, or other facilities, constructed, erected, installed, or acquired, on or after April 6, 1917, for the production of articles contributing to the prosecution of the present war, and in the case of vessels constructed or acquired on or after such date for the transportation of articles or men contributing to the prosecution of the present war, there shall be allowed a reasonable deduction for the amortization of such part of the cost of such facilities or vessels as has been borne by the taxpayer.

Mr. President, it is my complaint against the language of the bill as drawn by the committee that a distinction is drawn between plants which may be amortized—that is, between plants on the one hand constructed after that date of April 6, 1917, and those on the other constructed before. Those which were erected after that date can amortize the cost under rules prescribed by the Treasury. Those constructed before that date may not amortize.

What is meant by amortization is pretty well understood. Just what sort of plants are intended to be covered by this section I am not prepared to say. The language is very general. You will note that the plants are plants for the protection of articles contributing to the prosecution of the war.

The thought occurs to me that that will include about every sort of plant that has been doing business in this country since the war started. To that I make no complaint, for I rather think that the committee must have intended by that language to embrace a strictly called war plant, plants manufacturing articles directly contributing to the prosecution of the war, and that the Treasury will construe it accordingly. With respect to those plants this provision provides that they may amortize the cost if they were erected since the date of our entrance into the war. The bill, however, ought in the interest of accuracy to narrow the description of plants covered by the provision.

The fact, Mr. President, that a plant which is constructed for war purposes ought to be allowed to amortize it seems to me is a well-settled principle, and it certainly is accepted by the business man who undertakes to transact his business with any view at all to safety. Business practice recognizes it as a sound principle. The Congress itself has recognized it. It recognized the principle in the passage of the munitions tax law of 1916. That law provided substantially that the plant might amortize the cost of construction. The principle is recognized by the Secretary of the Treasury in his letter to the Finance Committee in connection with this bill. The principle is recognized by this bill itself in the section which I undertake to amend. The thing to be said, however, is this, that the committee recognized the principle only in part. It confines its application to plants constructed since this date.

I shall not pause to discuss the merits of the principle. If the principle is good in part it is good in whole. My complaint is, as I said, that an insidious distinction is drawn between plants constructed since we entered the war and those constructed before. If those constructed since are to be allowed to amortize those constructed before should, and if those constructed before are not to be allowed to amortize then none should.

Mr. President, I wish to submit a few views as to why the distinction made by the bill should not be made. Why is there drawn this distinction? A plant constructed since we entered the war, why should it be allowed to repay its extraordinary plant expenditures and a plant constructed before should not?

It seems to me, Mr. President, that if any distinction at all is to be drawn it ought to be drawn in favor of those constructed before this date, for the very plain reason that if it be said that those that were constructed before this date were engaged in a war business, this same further is to be said, namely, that they proposed to make their money out of foreign governments, whereas these plants constructed since that date attempted to make their money out of the United States Government after it became involved in the war. So if there is any disinction between them, if either is to be favored, I submit that the people who got busy before we entered into the war and who were making their profit, whatever it was, out of foreigners ought to be favored as against those who got into their business after we entered the war in order to make their money out of our Government.

It is said, I know, Mr. President, that concerns which expanded before we entered the war got high profits for their products. I refer to the ammunition plants. That is true with respect to some. It is a mistake, however, to assume that all concerns that entered into the war business before this date made money.

There are certain conspicuous exceptions to that of American concerns that made contracts with foreign governments in the expectation of making great profit, but their expectations were grievously disappointed.

In some of these instances they failed to make the expected profits, for the reason that the designs of the articles which they were trying to make or intended to make were changed from time to time by what I might call experimentation, and they suffered great losses and in the end made no money. But when we got into the war, those plants that had thus suffered a loss were in position to supply to our Government effective and efficient articles which had been perfected and on which they had lost their money in perfecting. Therefore, those plants and those concerns are entitled to equitable consideration at the hands of Congress.

But let me take the case of a concern that did make money out of the European war. I call your attention to the fact that it cost them a great deal of money to do it. I am mindful of this fact that if a concern which indulged in vast expenditure by way of expansion in order to meet the demands of European nations prior to our entering this war, it was laying out honest money upon ventures that would not and could not yield profits when the war ceased. Such concerns spent vast sums of money for purely temporary purposes. Before those concerns can be said to have made any money they must, before the war business ended, repay what they had thus spent on temporary plants. Therefore, out of these big profits which they charged they ought, as a matter of justice, be allowed to repay the capital expenditures they made in building the plants. Otherwise their capital at the end of the war would be depleted.

In order to make my point clear in this connection, I am going to take a concrete illustration. I can express it in concrete terms better than in abstract ones. Let me suppose the case of a concern which laid out $10,000,000 for war-plant construction, I will say, in 1916. That outlay had to be made from the capital on hand or from funds borrowed. I shall suppose further that the contract with the allies was such as gave them ample gross profits to pay back this $10,000,000, or that part of it as could properly be considered as its postwar depreciation.

Let me suppose that after the war this $10,000,000 plant would be worthless. This supposition simplifies my point. Of course the plant would not be entirely worthless; it will always be good for scrap or junk. But to illustrate my point, I am supposing the plant would be worthless. Of course it is not worthless, but worth something. Suppose, however, that the plant would be worthless. What I say on that supposition is applicable to a less degree, of course, in case the plant is not entirely useless, but of some value, at least as scrap.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the bill provides for just such a case as that.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Where, I ask?

Mr. SMOOT. I will call the attention of the Senator and of the Senate to it at the same time. On page 101, in paragraph 4, this provision is found:

> 4. Proper recognition or allowance can not be made for amortization, obsolescence, or exceptional depletion due to the present war, or to the necessity in connection with the present war of providing plant which will not be wanted for the purpose of the trade or business after the termination of the war.

That provision will take care of the case which is cited by the Senator.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Of course the Senator recognizes the fact that a plant is never absolutely worthless. I am supposing the case of a worthless plant to emphasize my point of view.

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize that; but the same provision will take care of cases that occurred before the declaration of war by America on April 6, 1917. The amendment the Senator offers only applies under the deductions allowed in the first place.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The deductions from gross profits.

Mr. SMOOT. The deductions allowed from gross profits. Of course, the same thing applies to partnerships and individuals and corporations, as the Senator has already stated, but the relief provisions take care of such cases. I want to say to Senators now, in studying this bill they must go through it and find whether there are any relief provisions relating to the particular item or not. The bill is full of them, as I have already said.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The language of paragraph 4, to which the Senator refers, is as follows:

> 4. Proper recognition or allowance can not be made for amortization, obsolescence, or exceptional depletion due to the present war, or to the necessity in connection with the present war of providing plant which will not be wanted for the purpose of the trade or business after the termination of the war.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It goes back, however, to the previous paragraph, which authorizes a certain amount annually. The Senator has in mind cases where amortization can not be handled. We must go back to the first of the four paragraphs.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to ask the two Senators who are on the Finance Committee if this provision will allow a plant constructed prior to April 6, 1917, to amortize why is it necessary on page 26 and page 56 to forbid the right to amortize. What is the objection to striking that out?

Mr. SMOOT. I will tell the Senator right now, if he desires me to do so. During the years 1914, 1915, and 1916, the contracts that were made between the manufacturers in foreign countries provided a price at which goods were furnished to foreign countries that would cover the cost of the plant, providing it furnished the goods at the price named, at least in some cases, but not in other cases. In other words, if the manufacturer made the contract and had built his plant entirely for the purpose of manufacturing the goods at the end of two years, in many cases the price paid by foreign countries for the goods he manufactured would entirely wipe out the cost of his plant, and whatever profit he made over and above that was his. That happened during those years before America entered the war. In our examination we did find that there were some manufacturers in the United States, and I could mention them, and I may say they could be counted upon the fingers of one hand almost, who did not charge the foreign countries prices that would give them sufficient profit to cover the extra cost of putting up the new plant for the manufacture of goods for the foreign country. This provision that I have cited is the one the committee adopted to meet those few cases.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is the few who had not made enough to repay the plant constructed.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; and that is left entirely with the department. The evidence from those concerned must be presented to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and it must convince the department that the contracts and prices at which the goods were sold would not produce sufficient profit to cover the expenditures of the amortization of the buildings. I am quite sure the bill as it is drawn and presented will cover all just cases.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator from Utah from his explanation makes clear to me that I was right in my original understanding. The Senator states that a plant that lost money and never could reimburse itself from its contract with a foreign Government is taken care of by paragraph 4, page 101, whereas the concern that constructed the plant prior to this date, but did not lose money, on the other hand made money and made enough to repay the plant construction, can not be allowed now to amortize in full down to the point of very much of its construction, and that was my understanding of the provision.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I wish to ask the Senator if his amendment is adopted will not amortization of every steel plant in the United States be valid, every powder plant, and practically every plant engaged in a manufacturing industry in the United States?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not know whether it will or not. I do think that the amortization of a portion of those plants will take place, and it ought to take place as a matter of justice. But that is entirely aside from this issue. My contention is that if one should be amortized all should. If any are not to be, none should.

Mr. President, coming to the case of a plant that was constructed, as I assume, in 1916, and made such prices as enabled it to repay itself, which case is covered by the bill, I want to give it some further thought.

It is true that many plants made such a contract with foreign governments as would yield them a profit that would enable them to pay back the cost of the plant. I think it is further true that in administering the law heretofore, the Treasury Department has allowed those plants to amortize a certain percentage of that cost, upon the theory that the war would last perhaps a certain length of time, and the loss would be distributed throughout a period of years. They have provided in their contracts for amortizing the debt. They got the money from foreign governments for that purpose. The Government has heretofore allowed them by way of amortization to repay a portion of their capital laid out in temporary plants, and I think they ought to be allowed to continue that repayment out of their profits.

This bill, however, interrupts the process of repayment. It says from now on they shall not be allowed to repay themselves that capital expenditure to the amount that remains yet to be amortized. That, I say, is not fair; it is not just.

I was supposing that the plant would be worthless after the war.

Now, on that supposition, the $10,000,000 expenditure would be a total loss of capital, unless during the war business the concern made gross profits of an amount sufficient to cover the same. My suppositious concern did make enough money to repay that expenditure and made it out of foreign countries. In that sense the foreigners built the plant. But in a real sense it is accurate to say that the foreigner merely repaid the $10,000,000 which American capital had laid out, and thus saved the American concern from suffering, to that extent, a loss due to the postwar uselessness of the plant it had spent its money on.

This amounts to saying that the American spent $10,000,000 for a plant; that the plant, now that peace is here, is worth less because its earning power ceases with the war; but that the American is no worse off in his capital assets than before because, while he finds a plant worth nothing on his hands, yet he has in his assets $10,000,000 of foreign-paid money to take the place of his original $10,000,000 of expended capital.

Now, Mr. President, that American business man is in a sound situation; he has made sure of the return of his money. His capital is not depleted. He recognized from the start that the expenditure for a war plant was a temporary business and that after the war that business would end and his plant junked. He therefore charged that plant expenditure to operating cost and set the price for his commodity to the foreigner at a figure to cover such cost. Thus he has recovered his $10,000,000 of capital.

Thus far he displayed sound sense and well-approved business judgment and practice.

But, sir, if this bill remains as written his prudence in thus safeguarding his capital will be frustrated by the United States Congress. For his plant having been constructed prior to April 6, 1917, he is told that he may not consider that $10,000,000 as a repayment of operating expense and expenditure. He is not allowed to deduct it from gross income. It therefore is to be treated as net income, and as such it is taxable. If he is in the last bracket class of this bill, the rate on him is nearly 70 per cent. That rate levied on this $10,000,000 makes him pay $7,000,000 to the United States.

Wherefore, we see that now his situation is that he has the valueless plant on his hands—a zero asset—but instead of also having the $10,000,000 of capital that the foreigners paid him for the purpose of replacing his own capital expenditures of that amount he has only $3,000,000, his country taking from him the other $7,000,000. His loss is therefore $7,000,000.

Suppose it be said that this concern made profits on top of the $10,000,000 to cover plant and that that circumstance must be regarded. Very well, sir; let us regard it. What of it? What does it amount to? Why, it amounts to no more than this, that he has made a profit over and above all operating costs; that is to say, he has made some net profit. That being the case, we then find him to be a manufacturer who belongs to the class that would pay taxes. And whatever the Congress determines he should pay on such net income of course he ought cheerfully to pay.

Now, Mr. President, in view of the consideration that I have attempted to thus advance I am forced to the conclusion that the concern which embarked upon war business before April 6, 1917, is not to be distinguished, in applying the amortization principle, from one that embarked on such business since that date, simply for the reason that in the one case the allies were made to cover the plant cost, and in the other the allies were not made to cover such cost.

Indeed, as I suggested a while ago, if there is any distinction to be drawn, the equities are against the concern that started up after April 6, 1917, which planned to look, and must of necessity look, to our own country to repay the plant expense.

Yet this bill as drawn allows the fellow who built his plant since we entered the war to deduct its cost before paying any tax, but disallows the same thing to the one who built before that date and who reimbursed himself from foreigners.

Is there any other reason why this date of April 6, 1917, should be allowed to remain in the bill, drawing a line of demarcation as it does between concerns that expanded to a war footing before that date and those that so expanded after that date? I know of none that can appeal to me, though I am aware of another reason that has been suggested, which seems to find favor in some quarters.

This reason is that plants which started since our entry into the war—that is, since April 6, 1917—did so to help this country in its great extremity, that they were therefore impelled by praiseworthy motives of patriotism, whereas those which got under way before that date were looking for profit, and profit alone.

Now, Mr. President, with respect to this argument I wish to first say that a revenue bill which is designed to raise moneys by way of taxation, and which in so doing undertakes to regard and apply the principles of sound business accounting, must not be regarded as a fitting and appropriate place in which to distribute bouquets and souvenirs for pretended patriotism. Yet if this argument is sound that is what the bill would do.

I employed the term "pretended patriotism." I did so advisedly, for I decline to accept the view that business which sought to work for us upon our entrance into the war sought to perform simply and solely the labors of devoted patriotism. Sir, making money was the motive of those who are taken care of by this date.

I do not say that the thought that they were rendering a service to their country supplied to them no satisfaction. I doubt not it did. But the fact remains that profit was the aim in view, and accumulated fortunes the goal.

No. Mr. President, those coming in after April 6, 1917, were no more patriotic than those who got under way before that date. Why, then, should there be so tender a regard for the late concerns? Why should this insidious distinction be drawn?

Why, sir, the late comers were the business laggards of the country. What were they doing throughout the 32 months of crowded events that preceded this date of April 6, 1917. Keen business men of this country who grasped the situation and sensed the future, who had vision, courage, capital, and the capacity to do things, lost no opportunity to mobolize that part of the forces of American industrial power and resources within their control. They embarked upon programs of unprecedented expansion. They laid out millions upon millions on temporary enterprises. Sir, when the shock of war came, in 1914, its paralyzing stroke was felt the world over. American commerce ceased and American business for the moment was palsied. Prices fell. Labor was out of work and calamity was impending. But this condition did not long prevail. These leaders of American enterprise soon revitalized American industry. They created demands in the commodity markets and gave to labor compensations far beyond the dreams of the most optimistic.

They set the house in order and made it possible for America to assume her present commanding financial place among the nations of the world. In a very true sense they not only brought the world's wealth here, but they saved European civilization from defeat. I say, sir, that in the field of their activities they brought as much glory to American industry as our magnificent armies brought honor to our flag.

And when we came into the war these plants were ready to supply our country. They did not have to be built. They were not in futuro; they were in esse. There was no necessity to wait upon them for 3, 6, or 12 months for munitions and equipment. They were mobilized and ready. These plants that were constructed before this date of April 6, 1917, were prepared to commence production for our country on April 7, 1917. Those that were built since that date were not ready and some not ready yet after the lapse of over one and a half years.

Yet, sir, the slothful ones, under this section, may amortize, while the alert ones may not. Verily the Scripture is being fulfilled, for the last are first and the first are last.

Why should punishment be inflicted on those who were ready to render instant service to the country in its time of need? Why so favorable a regard for those who had to commence to get ready?

I make no complaint against allowing the amortization principle to operate for the new plants. I do make complaint that it is not allowed to operate likewise in favor of the more meritorious ones. Let it apply to all alike or let it apply to none.

Mr. President, on Saturday the chairman of the Finance Committee called attention to the fact that mines, oil wells, gas wells, and lumber mills were allowed amortization to the full extent requested by them, and that plants constructed since April 6, 1917, were allowed to amortize. Every industry, it seems, is allowed to reimburse its temporary capital expenditures except those plants that were constructed by that portion of American business which was the only live part of business in this country prior to our entrance into the war; and it was the only part of business in the whole country that, upon our declaration of war, was able to render immediate present service to the country. I submit the distinction should not be made against them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that these provisions of the bill and the suggested amendment of the Senator from Delaware received the most careful consideration from the Finance Committee, and, as I recall, every member of the committee approved what we finally determined to do and what the bill as finally presented to you contains.

We start from our entrance into the war and allow amortization to plants constructed to produce war supplies. There is a provision in the bill that allows in extraordinary cases therein described amortization in the case of plants created before we entered the war. As the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] says, you can count the extraordinary cases on the fingers of one hand.

Why the distinction? The plants built prior to our entrance into the war were built under contracts with England, France, Italy, and other countries to make certain supplies, and the prices under those contracts covered the cost of constructing the plant and a profit. That was shown as the result of our investigation as to a large number of these plants. Why extend to them an amortization when they had covered the cost of their plants in the profits on contracts?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes; but only for a moment, because I wish to finish what I have to say.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I merely wish to make a suggestion to the Senator. Let us suppose that they did get from the allies a sufficient sum of money to enable them to amortize on their books the cost of their plants. The point is now whether the United States Government will allow them to keep that sum which they have been allowed by way of amortization?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I answer that the time has passed and that money is no longer subject to taxation; they have already made it; they made it before this year.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Let me suggest further to the Senator——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to get through, so that we may go on with the bill, but I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WOLCOTT. So do I; I do not want to protract the discussion. But I wish to suggest this to the Senator: It is true that they have been allowed an amortization, but not to the full extent that they are entitled to. They have only had two years. They ought to be allowed to continue to the extent allowed under the rules of the Treasury; but this provision intercepts that process.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The contracts which they made enabled them to provide for their amortization and to make a profit besides. There was no reason at all to grant amortization privilege to companies existing prior to our entry into the war who had their plants working for foreign countries and who made their contracts at prices which paid them for the entire construction of their plants and a fair profit. We allowed the exemption in a few cases where this was not done, but we guarded carefully the provision.

Now, as to the plants erected since we entered the war, they do not occupy that position. As a rule, their contracts, even with the Government, have contemplated work reaching beyond this year; but the work has been stopped, the Government has canceled the contracts in the case of a great many of them, and they occupy an entirely different position from plants that have completed contracts with foreign countries. If the amendment of the Senator from Delaware were accepted there would be an enormous loss of revenue; if it were accepted there would be more difficulties in administration. All these facts, all these circumstances, studied out in individual cases to reach what was right, were considered by the committee, and I believe the committee unanimously concluded that what we have presented to you was right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not feel that I would be justified in allowing this bill to pass until I had made an attempt, at least, to cut down the tax upon those things which are necessary, such as clothing. I therefore wish to offer an amendment, on page 200, by striking out lines 12 to 21, inclusive, covering these subjects:

(11) Men's and boys' suits or overcoats, not including uniforms of officers in the military or naval forces of the United States, on the amount in excess of $50 each;

(12) Women's and misses' suits, cloaks, and coats, on the amount in excess of $50 each, or, when made up by a tailor or seamstress, on the amount in excess of $50 in value each;

(13) Women's and misses' dresses, on the amount in excess of $40 each, or, when made up by a tailor or seamstress, on the amount in excess of $40 in value each;

Mr. President, those were the particular items that were taken into consideration by the committee in striking out all of the provision for the taxation of clothing. Those were the particular items a tax on which was thought to be a tax upon necessaries, and not a tax upon luxuries. For instance, Mr. President, there was no objection particularly to a tax on trunks on the amount of cost in excess of $50. You can get a fairly respectable trunk for perhaps much less than that, and when one pays $50 for a trunk he possibly can afford to pay a little tax on the amount over $50.

So also in the case of the next article, traveling bags, on which a tax is laid upon the amount paid in excess of $25. You can get a traveling bag for very much less than $25, even with the excessive prices of to-day, but while you can get a traveling bag for less than $25 you can not get a suit of woolen clothes for less than $50, I do not care where you go to get it and whether it is custom-made or otherwise.

Again, purses, pocketbooks, shopping bags, and handbags costing in excess of $7.50 each. You can buy some of them perhaps for $5, and they will answer the purpose, but you can not buy a woman's coat for $50 if it is a woolen coat. There is quite a difference between an article that is necessary and one which you can get along without.

Again, it is proposed to put a tax on fans on the amount in excess of $1. Well, I have an idea you can buy a palm leaf fan for less than $1, but I do not think you can buy any other kind for less than $1. You can get along with a palm-leaf fan, so far as fanning one's self is concerned, but you can not get along without woolen clothing during the winter months. So, Mr. President, with women's and misses' hats and bonnets. A woman can buy a bonnet or a hat that will answer the purpose of a hat to cover her head for less than $15, even though it may not be a very good one, but it will answer the purpose.

So, too, Mr. President, women can get along without silk stockings; they can probably wear lisle-thread stockings that are just exactly as good, and will be just as comfortable, but boys can not get along without suits and overcoats in the wintertime. Young ladies can not get along without misses' suits, and women can not get along very well without dresses of some kind, and woolen dresses in the winter months of the year.

Mr. President, I simply want to suggest that if we were to levy a tax of 20 per cent on wool everyone would object to it, and yet you are levying this 20 per cent tax on practically every article of woolen goods, because the amounts which you have fixed as the basis of your taxation are such that you will purchase nothing for less than those particular amounts, and therefore you subject everything that you purchase in the line of woolen clothing to a tax.

Again, Mr. President, if I believed that you could buy a good woolen suit for a man for less than $50, I would say, "Tax that which is above $50 at the rate of 10 per cent." If you could buy a woman's coat for less than $50, I would say, "All right; tax that above $50." But when you can not buy either of them for less than $50, why should we levy that heavy tax here?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am going to step out for a moment; and I want to say to the Senator that he understands, of course, that the committee was opposed to all of section 905 and struck it all out?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. So that so far as those of us who were with the Senator are concerned, we have not anything to do with it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I suggest that the Senator direct his remarks to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]. He led the fight to restore this entire section, and it is his fight now with the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. I know, but, Mr. President, I felt at least that Senators were influenced in voting against the committee amendment on account of many other things besides the mere item of woolen clothing. What I am trying to do in this amendment is to prevent an extra charge of 20 per cent on woolen clothing for which you have to pay $40 or $50, and you can not get it any cheaper.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] moved to strike out "20 per cent" and make it "10 per cent." Why? If it is a luxury in any sense, of course we should tax it at the rate of 20 per cent, but I do not think the Senator thought it was a luxury, and therefore he moved, and very properly moved, to reduce the tax to 10 per cent instead of 20 per cent. I think we can go a step further upon the particular articles I have mentioned, which are absolute necessaries, and which now cost the American people twice as much as they ought to cost them, without putting a still heavier burden upon them.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Wisconsin offered that amendment primarily because even though these were luxuries in the preceding section, the Senate had already adopted an amendment taxing statuary, paintings, and so forth, which clearly are all luxuries, at only 5 per cent; and so long as that was true, the Senator from Wisconsin did not believe it was fair to tax these things 20 per cent.

Mr. McCUMBER. If you tax statuary and those things which are absolute luxuries only 5 per cent, then why, in Heaven's name, should you not let the American people buy the necessaries of life in their clothing without having to pay even 10 per cent in the way of a tax? If you can even purchase automobiles with a tax of only 5 per cent upon them, then give me some good reason why we should compel the American people to pay $10 or $15 extra for a suit of clothes when they can not get them any cheaper than the amount fixed here for the beginning of the tax.

The result of this, as I have stated before, will finally be to increase enormously the consumption of shoddy and shoddy goods, and just to that extent to decrease the use of wool in clothing. I want to encourage the farmer at this time, when he is getting a splendid price for his wool—I might almost say an exorbitant price—to increase the production of wool. I want to see wool used in goods and not shoddy used in them. I know that the result of this extra tax will be that more shoddy will be put in goods to bring them below the price named in the provision, and you will make the ultimate consumer pay enormously more in the course of the year for the goods that he will buy than you would without this tax, because the cheaper goods will not wear like the good woolen goods; and I, at least, felt it my duty to do what I could to protect the overburdened American people from paying too much for woolen goods. Therefore, I limit my amendment to those three subdivisions.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I only want to say a word, because I am disinclined to detain the Senate at this hour, and we have had this question argued pretty thoroughly here this afternoon.

The impression left by the Senator's speech would be that we are taxing the whole value of these articles. We must always keep in mind that it is only the excess above $50 that is taxed for women's suits or men's suits. Then comes the tax.

The Senator says that no proper clothing can be bought for those prices. I have here the Washington Star of to-night, and also of a few nights ago. Among the advertisements in the Star that I looked over a few minutes ago, here are $50 broadcloth and plush coats, now marked down to $25. Here are wool Shetland sweaters, $7.95, specially priced; sweaters in cardigan stitch, whatever that is, and fancy weaves, shown in all the new color combinations, such as "Wilson," with collar and cuffs of "Rome Green"; "Rome," with pastel stripe on collar and cuffs; "Wilson," combined with "Democracy"; "Rome," combined with "Glory." Also combinations of admiral blue, Pershing tan, Foch blue and freedom—only $7.95 for all that. Things surely are coming down.

It is just a question whether we are willing to tax these things that are sold at extravagant prices. I know, and everybody knows, that clothing is high, but it probably will not stay there.

Here are other advertisements—women's and misses' coats, $29.50; and in the Star to-night, women's pajamas, $7.50—I do not know what those are—and kimonas, and men's pajamas. All those things seem to be marked down now and appear to be getting down to somewhere near reasonable prices.

I am not going to argue this question. We have had the argument before.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator, if he will allow me, will he guarantee that these are woolen goods?

Mr. KENYON. No; I do not know anything about any guaranty. I will not make any guaranty. That is an utterly foolish question.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course you can buy almost any kind of shoddy thing for almost any kind of a price; but I am speaking of the woolen goods that the people of the United States are entitled to have.

Mr. KENYON. The ground of my opposition to the Senator's amendment is this: Take dresses that cost two and three hundred dollars, that can be bought only by the rich people of the country, and suits of clothes costing up in the eighties and around a hundred dollars. If people buy those things they are able to pay the tax without any special irritation, and I think they are perfectly willing to do it. The "poor working girl" argument has been paraded before us, but I do not think you will find many of them buying $10 silk hose and fancy dresses at large prices. There is a good deal of nonsense about that argument. All I am going to ask for is a yea-and-nay vote on this proposition. My desire is to see snobbery and ostentation taxed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa demands the yeas and nays. Is the request seconded?

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. KENYON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Kellogg	New	Smith, Mich.
Chamberlain	Kendrick	Norris	Smoot
Dillingham	Kenyon	Nugent	Spencer
Fletcher	Kirby	Overman	Sterling
France	Knox	Penrose	Sutherland
Gerry	La Follette	Phelan	Swanson
Gore	Lenroot	Poindexter	Thomas
Gronna	Lodge	Pollock	Townsend
Hale	McCumber	Saulsbury	Trammell
Harding	McKellar	Shafroth	Warren
Henderson	Martin, Ky.	Sheppard	Watson
Hitchcock	Martin, Va.	Simmons	Weeks
Johnson, S. Dak.	Moses	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Jones, N. Mex.	Myers	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. KENYON. I ask the Presiding Officer if he will not submit the request again to the Senate for a yea-and-nay vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A yea-and-nay vote is requested. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES of Washington (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], I withhold my vote.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], who is absent. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and vote "nay."

Mr. NEW (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], I vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Again announcing my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GERRY (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and let my vote stand.

I wish also to announce that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is necessarily absent on important public business and that he is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT].

Mr. KNOX (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted not noticing the absence of my pair, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and let my vote stand.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Making the same transfer previously announced, I vote "yea."

Mr. HARDING. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. KENDRICK (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and let my vote stand.

Mr. LODGE. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY];

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]; and

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS].

The result was announced—years 35, nays 17, as follows:

YEAS—35.

Bankhead	Knox	New	Sutherland
Brandegee	Lenroot	Overman	Swanson
Dillingham	Lodge	Penrose	Thomas
France	McCumber	Phelan	Warren
Gerry	Martin, Ky.	Simmons	Watson
Gore	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.	Weeks
Henderson	Moses	Smith, Ga.	Williams
Jones, N. Mex.	Myers	Smoot	Wolcott
Kendrick	Nelson	Spencer

NAYS—17.

Fletcher	Kenyon	Nugent	Sheppard
Hale	Kirby	Poindexter	Trammell
Harding	La Follette	Pollock
Johnson, S. Dak.	McKellar	Pomerene
Kellogg	Norris	Shafroth

NOT VOTING—44.

Ashurst	Fernald	Lewis	Shields
Baird	Frelinghuysen	McLean	Smith, Md.
Beckham	Gay	McNary	Smith, Mich.
Borah	Goff	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Gronna	Page	Sterling
Chamberlain	Hardwick	Pittman	Thompson
Colt	Hitchock	Ransdell	Townsend
Culberson	Hollis	Reed	Underwood
Cummins	Johnson, Cal.	Robinson	Vardaman
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Saulsbury	Wadsworth
Fall	King	Sherman	Walsh

So Mr. McCUMBER's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE obtained the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator allow me just a moment?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to perfect this amendment. I call attention to the fact that there must be another amendment in the House provision now that the amendment has been adopted. On page 202, beginning in line 4 with the last word "As," I move to strike out all down to and including the word "dresses," in line 7. It reads:

As used in this subdivision the term "vendor" includes a tailor or dressmaker making up women's or misses' suits, cloaks, coats, or dresses.

Now that those paragraphs have been eliminated, I move to strike out these words.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was going to say that necessarily those words should go out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. HALE. I yield.

ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS.

Mr. HENDERSON. There is a very important joint resolution which has just passed the House of Representatives this afternoon and is now on the Presiding Officer's desk. I ask unanimous consent to have it laid before the Senate at this time and put on its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 372) to amend Senate joint resolution No. 78, approved October 5, 1917, entitled "Joint resolution to suspend requirements of the annual assessment work on mining claims during the years 1917 and 1918, which was read the first time by its title and the second time at length as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of Senate joint resolution, approved October 5, 1917, be amended so as to provide that the time for filing notices to hold said mining claims in the Territory of Alaska, under the said resolution, be, and the same is hereby, extended to the 1st day of April, 1919

Mr. HENDERSON. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and I ask unanimous consent to consider this joint resolution. It will take only a moment. There will not be any debate on it and it is a very important matter.

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall not object, providing there is no debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. LENROOT. Before consent is given I would like to know what the measure is.

Mr. HENDERSON. It simply provides that under the joint resolution passed two years ago suspending assessment work on mining claims during the years 1917 and 1918 the time for filing a notice which expires January 1 shall be extended for the period of three months for Alaska on account of the influenza and the difficulty of getting the notices sent there.

Mr. SIMMONS. It has passed the House?

Mr. HENDERSON. It has passed the House, and came over this afternoon.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I hope the joint resolution will be passed, but I just want to express my regret that while we can get action promptly upon a matter of this kind concerning property rights we are unable to get action on a bill to extend aid to the people there who are dying.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE REVENUE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. I offer an amendment to the bill to come in on page 197, line 4: Before the word "canoes," I move to insert the word "pleasure." The bill now provides——

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator that we have considered that matter; I have conferred with other members of the committee, and we will accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KIRBY. I desire to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. After section 1407 insert:

SEC. 1408. That it shall hereafter be unlawful for the United States of America to make any loan of money, bonds, or credit to any other nation, government, power, or people, or the representative thereof or to purchase the securities, bonds, or credits of such nation, government, power, or people except as it may become necessary to do so in order to adjust, collect, and realize upon the loans already made to and bonds and securities acquired of such nation, power, or government unless and until the Secretary of the Treasury is first thereunto duly authorized by act of Congress.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, this is an amendment of some moment, and it seems to me might well be put upon this bill raising revenue. The people of our country are heavily taxed. They have responded liberally to the loan of money to our Government, both in war stamps and in bonds. They are now taxed heavily and are going to continue to be taxed heavily, and it seems to me the time has come when we should quit lending the money of the United States of America to other Governments, powers, or peoples. We have loaned all the moneys that are necessary to carry all the Governments with whom we were associated in the war to a successful completion of it. The war is ended, and this is a time, in my opinion, when we should end lending the money of the people raised by taxation to other Governments of the earth.

This does not prevent lending money as may be necessary to realize upon the loans that have heretofore been made to these Governments, but it would prevent the lending of any money to any other Government for any purpose whatever until the purpose was first disclosed to Congress and the consent of Congress obtained to the particular loan desired. It seems to me the time has come when we ought to do something of this kind, and on that account I propose this amendment here to-day.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

Mr. KIRBY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WEEKS. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that the Government owns several million dollars worth of property in France. It is the purpose, I understand, to try to sell that property to European Governments. Would the Senator's amendment prohibit taking bonds for that property if it were sold?

Mr. KIRBY. Not at all, as I understand it. It is to lend the money in the Treasury here and take bonds or purchase securities out of the Treasury. I do not think that ought to be done, and I believe the time has come to stop it. If there exists any great necessity for any further lending of credit or of money by the Government, it ought to be brought to Congress and the consent of Congress first obtained to do it.

Mr. WEEKS. I think I am in agreement with the Senator about that, but I believe it would be unfortunate if we were prevented from receiving any payment for our property over there in the bonds of other countries.

Mr. KIRBY. This will not do that. It has no purpose of that kind, and its effect can not be such.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I earnestly hope this amendment will not prevail. I think it would be a most embarrassing thing to do at this time. I am advised by the Secretary of the Treasury to-day that it would be most embarrassing and would prevent the Government from doing things absolutely necessary under present circumstances. The war has not closed yet, but when it has closed all authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to advance money to the allies will have passed. Congress is at this time considering legislation with reference to loans to certain of our allies after the war has closed.

The Secretary of the Treasury who has just relinquished his office—Secretary McAdoo—recommended to the House of Representatives legislation of that character. That body is considering that legislation in committee, I understand, right now. When the Secretary of the Treasury appeared before the Finance Committee he said that when the war closes it would be necessary, in his opinion, if we were unable ourselves to sell to some of our allies, especially to Belgium and France, materials which they would absolutely need and which they could not get elsewhere, in order to carry on the work of reconstruction, authority ought to be given to do that, because if it were not given it would be impossible for us to sell them the material and the supplies which they would need for these purposes. He presented to the committee a very strong statement. He showed the committee, and he showed them nothing more than what we would have known if we had thought about it, that the countries now needing or presently to need great quantities of supplies are not in a financial position to buy and pay for these things in cash, and when we loan them money for the purpose of buying those goods in this country we would simply enable the business people of this country to furnish them the supplies, and for the money that we advance them to pay our business people we would be advancing Government securities that were as good as could be found probably in the markets of the world.

Mr. President, if we do not permit the Government to loan at all after the war closes, our business people will not be able to supply these goods, and our allies will not be able to get them anywhere else.

No money is lost; no money is jeopardized. We simply enable our people, the producers of this country, to sell these goods, and we get abundant security for the money that we advance.

I do not think that anything could be more unwise than to suddenly cut off the splendid trade which the business people of this country have a right to expect and which they can get without losing or even jeopardizing a dollar of American money; and, as the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] suggests to me, it does not increase the tax, because the bonds which we get from them for the money which we advance go immediately into the hands of our own people. It will not be a burden to us so far as interest charges are concerned, because those will be met in due time by the governments from whom we get the bonds, and in the end our principal will be returned.

Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong the discussion, but I do sincerely trust that this amendment will not prevail.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not mean to prolong the debate a moment. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has covered the case. It seems to me it would be most unfortunate in every way at this time to pass a general law that we would not extend any further credit to the nations with whom we have been associated in the war against Germany. It is extending a credit, it is not giving them money. I think now, with peace negotiations just coming on, to adopt such an amendment as this would be most unfortunate.

Mr. GORE obtained the floor.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President——

Mr. GORE. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, we agreed to extend credit and to loan money to our allies during the emergency and because of the necessity for so doing. The necessity was great; it was urgent. We have loaned them money until the war has been brought to a successful conclusion. Now it is proposed to establish nations on the other side of the world. It is proposed to rehabilitate great Russia, that once mighty empire yonder, which is destroyed, dismembered, impotent, and is now being harassed and overrun by bandit hordes of Czecho-Slovaks swinging down through that country.

Is it our business and our policy here to lend the nations that are going to be cut out of other territory money with which to stand upon their feet, in the hope that they may pay it back hereafter? To tax our people to the last limit to get the money to lend to them?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. KIRBY. Yes.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I merely want to call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas to a little business arrangement which was reported to have been made recently. It is now well known that our disbursements in Europe are very large, and so there has been an exchange of credits. We have made an advance of a quarter of a billion dollars just in the last few days to our European allies, and, in turn, they have made advances to us over there for a similar amount. But the right to make advances must exist in order to carry out a transaction of that kind. I assume that there will be a number of just such transactions as that while our expenditures in Europe are so very large.

Mr. KIRBY. The purpose of my amendment is not to prevent that nor our collection of any loans or realizing upon any credits which we have found it necessary to make to our allies heretofore; it will have no effect to do that; but it is to prevent the loaning to these other Governments after the war has ended of money that must be collected by taxation from our people unless the necessity is so great that the Secretary of the Treasury can come here and say, "I desire to extend this much credit and I desire the permission of the Government to do it," and convince the Congress of the necessity therefor, it should stop. The time has come, in my judgment, when we should quit levying high taxes upon our people to lend the money to the other nations.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to say that I am unable to agree with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY]. I rather agree with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and with the chairman of the Committee on Finance [Mr. SIMMONS]. In my judgment it is neither to our own advantage nor is it to the advantage of the peoples of Europe that they should live in a world of wreck and ruin and devastation. It is to their advantage, as it is to our advantage, that Europe should be rebuilded as rapidly as possible. We can facilitate the reconstruction of Europe by advances of credit. This will inure to their advantage, as it will to ours. If those countries and those peoples are obliged to rely upon the slow processes of accumulating capital in order to rebuild and to reconstruct their countries, it will postpone their prosperity, and it will inevitably lead to a long period of industrial depression both in Europe and in the United States.

The purchasing power of Europe has been seriously reduced; it has been almost destroyed during the course of this war. It is estimated, I believe, by Mr. Schwab, that Europe will require $6,000,000,000 worth of iron and steel for purposes of reconstruction. There is a vast market. To supply that market will be to our own interest; it will be even more to the interest of those countries which have been so seriously crippled. Half the world is to-day naked and hungry; half of Europe is but half clad and half fed. These elemental needs ought to be supplied. They ought to be largely supplied by the farmers of the United States. If they have purchasing power, and if we can sustain their purchasing power, it will constitute an effective demand for the farm products of the United States. That will insure prosperity to our farmers, which is a large guaranty of prosperity to every productive class and to every industry in the United States.

I should regard it as a serious mistake to withhold credit or purchasing power from those depressed people. It is not only to our advantage—waiving the question of duty, or rather of humanity—but it is a matter of the highest industrial and commercial concern to the people of the United States and to all of the peoples in Europe.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, before the question is taken on the amendment I desire to see if I understand the situation correctly. I understand that about $8,000,000,000 has been authorized by Congress to be loaned. Is that correct?

Mr. SIMMONS. The loan of about $10,000,000,000 has been authorized, about $8,000,000,000 of which have already been loaned.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then, there is something like a billion and three-quarters in money which could be loaned in the future without further legislative authority.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; but there will have to be further legislation to make any loans after the war.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But the end of the war will be indicated, I assume, by the proclamation of the President that the war has ceased. The effect of the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY], then, would be to withdraw the authority already granted as to the loaning of the remainder of that money.

Mr. SIMMONS. Undoubtedly, that would be the effect of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico and Mr. THOMAS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I call up an amendment which has heretofore been offered by me, and ask that it be stated by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 30, line 23, at the end of the line, it is proposed to strike out the semicolon and insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, however, That any taxpayer who is the head of a family shall be entitled to deduct from his gross income such sum or sums of money as he may have actually expended during the taxable year as rent for residence purposes for himself or family, but not in excess of a sum of $1,000.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, the proposition presented by this amendment is very simple. If an individual, partnership, or corporation owns its place of business it is not charged up with the rental value of that property as income. If a partnership, individual, or corporation does not own its place of business it is entitled to deduct from its income the rent of the premises in which it does business, so as to put it on a parity with the business where the buildings and plant are owned by the operating interest. What this amendment does is this: Under the bill as it is now framed, if a man owns his home he occupies it without being charged anything for its rental value. If he does not own his home he is not permitted to deduct from the income the rent which he has got to pay to house his family. The amendment is for the purpose of putting individuals on an equality as to residence precisely in the same way as we put business on an equality as to place of business.

I shall not discuss the matter at length. In a good many jurisdictions where they have income taxes they do just the other thing; they charge the owner with the reasonable rental value of the property, the farmer with the reasonable rental value of the house on the farm, and so on. I do not think that ought to be done. I think the system which the committee has adopted with reference to business is the proper one, and I am simply seeking to extend that to the individuals who labor, who live upon salaries, and who do not own their homes. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the present law and also the pending bill do not allow deductions for personal living or family expenses. If this deduction is allowed, then I do not see any reason why personal living and family expenses generally should not be also allowed.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I should merely like to state that I am simply proposing to allow as a deduction the item of rent alone, because as to other family expenses the man who owns a house has to pay them just the same as the man who does not own a house.

Mr. SIMMONS. The man who owns a house is not allowed to deduct interest upon the investment in the house.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this amendment, if adopted, means simply this, that it would be far better for a man never to own a home than to own one; or, in other words, the man who must rent a house has no investment whatever in it, pays no taxes on it, has no upkeep to provide for it, and pays no insurance upon it; but the man who owns a home is compelled to pay the expenses of all those items; and, besides that, he has got his money tied up and receives no income whatever from it. It seems to me the amendment is so foreign to what would be just and right that the Senate can not possibly agree to it.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I do not think that this question can be settled by a mere wave of the hand.

Mr. SMOOT. It can be by a vote.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. According to the Senator from Utah, a man who owns a building in which he conducts his business has no advantage over the man who does not own the building in which he conducts his business, because he has to pay the upkeep of it, and he is also out of the use of the money invested in it; but in the case of business the man who does not own his building deducts the rent from his income. If there is no advantage in the one case, why have the provision exempting rent in the other? I submit, Mr. President, that this is but a matter of simple justice. If a man did not have his money in his residence he would have it invested in something else, and would get an income from that something else, and he would be paying a tax upon that income.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has asked a question and I shall simply undertake to answer it. The man who owns his own building and does business in that building has paid for it; it is a part of his capital, and he is allowed an exemption upon it, and, of course, if a man does not own the building whatever he pays as rent he is allowed upon it; but the man who owns the building is allowed an exemption upon it before any tax ever applies. That is the difference between the two cases.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. POLLOCK. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add a new section as follows:

SEC. 1408. That the members of the various district and local boards who acted under the selective-service-draft act throughout the United States be, and are hereby, extended the thanks of Congress for their patriotic services to the country; and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause to be prepared and filed with the records of the War Department a complete and permanent record of the names of all those who so served, and that the Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause suitable bronze medals to be prepared and presented to all who so served.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. POLLOCK. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I have two other amendments here. I can explain the purpose of them very readily. I have previously pointed out some advantages in making returns as corporations. I also pointed out wherein individuals, under certain circumstances, have advantages over corporations in making their tax returns. I am sure that we ought to make all business of the same kind as nearly equal and competitive as we can, and if there is any advantage in an individual or a partnership making a return as a corporation he ought to have the privilege of doing it, because by so doing he only puts himself on an equality with his competitor. Likewise, if a corporation finds that it is more advantageous for the stockholders to make a return as a partnership, I do not see why that should not be done. I pointed out the other day very gross inequalities simply because one concern happened to be a partnership and the other happened to be a corporation. There is no administrative difficulty in the way, because this bill only affects the mere matter of returns, and in the bill now we provide that certain corporations may make returns as partnerships. I will ask merely to have one of the amendments read, and will abide by the result upon that amendment so far as the other is concerned.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss this amendment, but simply to say that the purpose of the amendment is to allow any individual or corporation to select the most favorable way of being taxed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. 229. That any individual or partnership carrying on a trade, business, or profession may in respect to the income derived from such trade, business, or profession, elect to be taxed as a corporation, and file return accordingly. In such case such individual or the members of the partnership shall not be subject, in respect to such income, to the taxes imposed by this title and Title III upon individuals and partnerships, but shall be subject to the taxes imposed by such titles upon corporations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I have another amendment to offer, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 95, at the end of line 12, it is proposed to strike out the period and to insert "and not including for the taxable years 1918 and 1919 any surplus or undivided profits earned since December 31, 1916."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I can explain this amendment in a very few words. Although it is a very important amendment, and will raise something over $100,000,000 of revenue, to my mind it is nothing but in a small way bringing about justice for a grave discrimination which exists under the present law.

For the taxable year 1917, individuals, partnerships, and corporations all paid the same excess-profits tax. Individuals and partners paid surtaxes on all of their profits, whether they were taken out of the business or not. Corporations paid no surtax; and only the profits of the corporation which were distributed in dividends have as yet become subject to any surtax. As a matter of dollars, the corporations in 1917 earned about $10,000,000,000. After paying their taxes and after distributing their dividends they retained as undistributed profits, taxed only by the tax of 6 per cent which was provided, $4,000,000,000, and that money has been left in their treasuries. That $4,000,000,000 has not only escaped any surtax but under this bill they add the $4,000,000,000 to their capital, and under this bill exempt the 8 or 10 per cent—whichever form of tax it comes under—on the $4,000,000,000. They have kept it from paying any surtax to begin with; they now add it to capital, and get it exempted under this bill, before they pay any excess or war profits taxes on it now; and this is only in a very small way making those dollars pay what the dollars of the individual or partnership have already paid. It will bring in about $100,000,000 of revenue for this year, and it will bring in about $100,000,000 of revenue for next year.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not wish to discuss this amendment. I will simply say that under the definition of "invested capital" in the bill paid-in or earned surplus and undivided profits constitute a part of invested capital; and what this amendment provides is that while the invested, paid-in, and earned surplus of every other year shall constitute part of invested capital the surplus and undivided profits of 1917 shall not constitute a part of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to say that I was absent when certain sections were considered and adopted by the Senate to which I desire to offer an amendment. I have conferred with the chairman of the committee and have decided to ask unanimous consent that I may offer the amendments now. It will obviate the necessity of offering them in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment which will be stated by the Secretary. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Oklahoma offers the following amendment to section 311, on page 89:

Strike out:

"(2) An amount equal to the average net income of the corporation for the prewar period, plus or minus, as the case may be, 10 per cent of the difference between the average invested capital for the prewar period and the invested capital for the taxable year."

And insert in lieu thereof:

"An amount equal to the average net income of the corporation for the prewar period, plus or minus, as the case may be, the same percentage of the difference between the average invested capital of the prewar period and the invested capital for the taxable year as the average net income of corporations engaged in a trade or business of the same general class as that conducted by the taxpayer for the prewar period was of average invested capital for the prewar period: Provided, That in no case shall such percentage exceed the percentage of the net income of the taxpayer for the prewar period of the average invested capital for the prewar period."

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I appreciate and I fully sympathize with the desire of the Senate to pass this bill to-night. I also appreciate the difficulty, the impossibility, of the Senate understanding an intricate amendment of this character when read from the desk. I shall, however, abbreviate my explanation of it, because I wish to facilitate the passing of the bill.

Of course no taxation bill can realize ideal or poetic justice. All that we can do is approximate a crude sort of justice, avoiding intended or avoidable injustice or inequalities. It sometimes happens, however, that even low taxes, if they are unequal, are more oppressive than high taxes if equal. Low taxes that discriminate in favor of one competitor and against another may ruin the one and enrich the other, whereas high taxes that are equal will not inflict any such imposition or burden upon either. One of the paramount considerations in passing a measure of this sort is to avoid inequality of burdens as between competitors in the same industry.

If the Senate will indulge me for one moment, in imposing the tax upon war profits we have adopted as the prewar period the years 1911, 1912, and 1913. Corporations have been given as an exemption the average net profits during the prewar period. That is, of course, a matter of obvious justice; but for corporations organized since the prewar period an artificial basis must be adopted. The committee has recommended as exemption for corporations organized since the prewar period the average net profits of corporations engaged in a like or similar business. I think that is the fairest standard which could have been agreed upon.

The inequality arises, Mr. President, with respect to corporations that did business during the prewar period and which have added to their investment since the close of that period. The exemption allowed upon this capital newly invested is only 10 per cent.

Now, take a case. Take a corporation that was doing business during the prewar period, making an average profit of 20 per cent, and let us assume that the average profit for like industries is also 20 per cent. Now, a new corporation organized since the prewar period would be entitled to an exemption of 20 per cent, based on the average profits of like industries; but a concern, we will say, that was capitalized at $50,000, operating during the prewar period, and realizing a profit of 20 per cent, has added $450,000 of new capital to its business. Upon this $450,000 of capital newly invested it is entitled to an exemption of only 10 per cent, or $45,000. Take an entirely new concern which has been organized since the prewar period, capitalized at $500,000. It will be allowed an exemption of $100,000, because the average net earnings of like industries are 20 per cent. Now, there is a serious discrepancy between like industries.

They may be competitors; their plants may be just across the street from each other; and yet the one, simply because it existed during the prewar period, is penalized to the extent of $55,000, and the new concern is rewarded to the extent of $55,000.

Now, that is a disparity, a disproportion of burden, that ought not to be imposed upon competing concerns. It would have been much better for the old concern, instead of adding to its invested capital, to have organized a new corporation and capitalized it, using the new capital in that way, because upon this new concern it would have been entitled to a much more generous exemption.

I can see how this would work serious injury to an old concern simply for being old. The amendment which I have offered proposes to give the old concern which has added to its capital the same exemption upon its new capital that we give to a corporation which has been organized since the prewar period. In other words, it is to give to the old corporation an exemption upon its new capital equivalent to the average net profits of like businesses. That will place them on an equal footing.

I had introduced an amendment which gave old corporations, upon the newly invested capital, an exemption equivalent to their average earnings during the prewar period. There is an element of justice in that proposal; but there is also weight to the objection that a corporation having a small capital and high earnings which expands its capital can not or should not be expected to realize as high a percentage of return upon its expanded capital as upon its old limited capital. But it seems to me, Mr. President, that there can be no argument against this proposal to give an old corporation upon its newly invested capital an exemption exactly the same as is accorded to new corporations; in other words, that will allow the new corporation the average net profits of like concerns engaged in like business, and allow an old corporation upon its newly invested capital an exemption equivalent to the average profits of like concerns.

That places competitors on an equal footing, and does not discriminate between them. It does not subject the one to an unnecessary and to an unjust burden. It does not make a difference in the treatment of concerns where there is no real difference in fact to justify the different treatment. The amendment which I have offered accords like treatment to those who are substantially in like situations. This is the nearest approach to justice we can arrive at in the adoption of a complicated revenue measure of this sort.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, while the Senator from Oklahoma always illuminates every subject upon which he speaks, I do not think he expects this amendment to be adopted. I think the Senator knows perfectly well that if this amendment were adopted it would be necessary to re-form this bill in many of its essential features. I do not know how that could be done now without sending it back to the committee. The Senator also knows that this proposal was pretty thoroughly thrashed out in the committee, and after great deliberation there it was decided that it was impracticable.

I hope, therefore, the amendment will not be adopted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a moment. There may be such a case as that cited by the Senator from Oklahoma; but if so, I call his attention to the relief provision found in this bill. On page 99, under paragraph (d), line 20, there is this provision:

(d) Where, as compared with representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business, the taxpayer would (under section 326)—

That is, the invested-capital section—

be placed in a position of substantial inequality, because of the time or manner of organization, or because the actual value of the assets—

And so forth.

So the Senator can see that if there were such a case as cited by him it would fall under this relief provision.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I think there is a great deal of virtue in this relief provision; but, of course, it is intended to meet exceptional cases—cases where the circumstances can not be standardized.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what that would be.

Mr. GORE. The amendments which I have offered apply uniformly and generally to all concerns which come within the same category, and I think it is better, as a rule, where you can classify, to have a uniform rule applicable to a class, rather than to rely upon making special exceptions to meet particular cases. I fully approve of the relief section, but to meet the case of those enterprises which can not be reduced to rule or to standard, I think this amendment ought to have been adopted. I hardly expect it to be adopted at this late hour, though, because, of course, the Senate has not had an opportunity to analyze it. I would not be surprised, however, to see this amendment come back in the conference report, if this section stays in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, there is one other amendment which I wish to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma offers a further amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 83, it is proposed to strike out sections 300 and 301, as amended, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 300. That when used in this title the terms "taxable year," "fiscal year," "personal service corporation," "paid or accrued," and "dividends" shall have the same meaning as provided for the purposes of income tax in sections 200 and 201, and when used in section 301 of this title the term "taxable income" shall mean the net income in excess of the excess-profits credit determined under section 312, or the war-profits credit determined under section 311, as the case may be. The first taxable year for the purposes of this title shall be the same as the first taxable year for the purposes of the income tax under Title II.

PART II—IMPOSITION OF TAX.

SEC. 301. (a) That in lieu of the tax imposed by Title II of the revenue act of 1917, but in addition to the other taxes imposed by this act, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for the taxable year 1918 upon the taxable income of every corporation a tax equal to the sum of the following:

FIRST BRACKET.

Thirty per cent of the amount of the taxable income not in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital.

SECOND BRACKET.

Sixty per cent of the amount of the taxable income in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital.

THIRD BRACKET.

The sum, if any, by which 80 per cent of the amount of the taxable income exceeds the amount of the tax computed under the first and second brackets.

(b) For the taxable year 1919 and each taxable year thereafter there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the taxable income of every corporation a tax equal to the sum of the following:

FIRST BRACKET.

Twenty per cent of the amount of the taxable income not in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital.

SECOND BRACKET.

Forty per cent of the amount of the taxable income in excess of 20 per cent of the invested capital.

(c) For the purposes of the act approved March 21, 1918, entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," the tax imposed by this title shall be treated as levied by an act in amendment of Title II of the revenue act of 1917.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, just a moment. There are two points in this amendment. One is to define what shall constitute taxable income. Under the existing law and under the pending bill the brackets are applied to the entire net profits of corporations. The ordinary taxpayer expects his net profits to be ascertained and expects his exemption recited in the bill, of $3,000 plus 8 per cent on the capital invested, to be subtracted from his net profits and then expects the bracket of 30 and 60 per cent to be applied to what is left.

That is not the case. The exemption of $3,000 plus 8 per cent on the capital invested is taken from the lowest bracket, and if the exemption is more than the net profit under the low bracket then the remainder of the exemption is taken out of the next bracket above that.

So it might happen but for another provision. The small concerns would pay their entire tax under the 60 per cent bracket. Take a concern—but for the provision—which I shall submit in a moment, capitalized at $25,000, with a net profit of $12,500. That concern would be entitled to an exemption of $5,000, $3,000 plus the 8 per cent on the capital stock, making an aggregate of $5,000.

The average taxpayer expects that $5,000 exemption to be taken from $12,500, the profit being $7,500, to which the bracket should be applied. Five thousands dollars of the $7,500 coming within the first, or 30 per cent, bracket, amounting to $1,500; under the second bracket, $2,500, bearing 60 per cent, amounting to $1,500, or aggregating under both brackets $3,000.

That is not the way it is computed. Twenty per cent of the capital stock, or $5,000, which is the first bracket, is offset against the exemption of $5,000, leaving $7,500 to bear the 60 per cent tax. I use this merely by way of illustration.

This is the way the computation would run, but for the provision that a corporation whose net profits do not exceed $20,000 shall pay at the rate of 30 per cent on its entire profits. The method, however, of deducting the exemption from the low bracket operates against small corporations. It is less burdensome to large corporations, but my proposal to deduct the exemption from the net profits and then apply the brackets to the remainder would be just alike to the small and to the large corporation and would avoid a burdensome discrimination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have an amendment that I want to propose to paragraph C, on page 138 of the bill. I think when I state just briefly the situation and what it is designed to meet, its merits will be perfectly clear.

Mr. SIMMONS. Clearly, the amendment should be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On line 10, page 138, add the following proviso:

Provided, That where such transportation lines are in competition with foreign lines the tax imposed under this paragraph shall not exceed the amount of transportation tax to which such foreign transportation company is subjected by its government corresponding to this tax.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I think I can state just in a moment, so that it will appear in the RECORD, what this amendment is designed to meet.

We have a transportation line from Seattle, for instance, to points in southeastern Alaska. The Canadian ships also go from Seattle to Vancouver and Victoria on the way to points in southeastern Alaska. They are in competition with our ships. I am reliably informed that their Government taxes them 1 per cent. If we put this tax of 8 per cent on our ships, it will give the Canadian line an advantage of 7 per cent. This amendment is designed to meet a situation just like that.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me call the attention of the Senator to the provision of the bill on page 138. I did not really understand it when the Senator presented the case to me a little while ago. It seems to me that if the Canadian ship started from a point in the United States it would be taxed under the provision of the bill as it stands.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But this is what they do: They sell a local ticket between Seattle and Vancouver, then a ticket from Vancouver on to a point in Alaska.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator if the Canadian Government does not tax more than 1 per cent?

Mr. JONES of Washington. All I know is what information I have, which is as reliable as I can get, and they claim that a tax corresponding to this is just 1 per cent. I thought if it went into conference the conferees could look into the situation a little more carefully than I have had an opportunity to do and take care of it.

Mr. FLETCHER. It may be possible that there is only one tax on that particular subject, but I do know that they place a pretty severe tax on the income.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is probably true; but I referred to the corresponding tax.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute. I send to the Secretary's desk the amendment and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin submits an amendment by way of a substitute and requests that it be read.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. To save the time of the Senate, as the amendment has been upon the desks of Senators and they have had an opportunity to examine it, I will not ask to have it read if it is printed in the RECORD. It would save some two hours or more of the time of the Senate and advance the consideration and conclusion of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE'S amendment was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

TITLE I.—GENERAL DEFINITIONS.

SECTION 1. That when used in this act—

The term "person" includes partnerships, corporations, and associations, as well as individuals;

The term "corporation" includes associations, joint-stock companies, and insurance companies, as well as private corporations;

The term "domestic" when applied to a corporation or partnership means created or organized in the United States;

The term "foreign" when applied to a corporation or partnership means created or organized outside the United States;

The term "United States" when used in a geographical sense includes only the States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and the District of Columbia;

The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Treasury;

The term "commissioner" means the Commissioner of Internal Revenue;

The term "collector" means collector of internal revenue;

The term "revenue act of 1916" means the act entitled "An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes," approved September 8, 1916;

The term "revenue act of 1917" means the act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917;

The term "taxpayer" includes any person, trust, or estate subject to a tax imposed by this act;

The term "Government contract" means (a) a contract made with the United States or with any department, bureau, officer, commission, board, or agency under the United States and acting in its behalf, or with any agency controlled by any of the above if the contract is for the benefit of the United States, or (b) a subcontract made with a contractor performing such a contract if the products or services to be furnished under the subcontract are for the benefit of the United States.

TITLE II.—INCOME TAX.

Part I.—General provisions.

DEFINITIONS.

SEC. 200. That when used in this title—

The term "taxable year" means the calendar year, or the fiscal year ending during such calendar year, upon the basis of which the net income is computed under section 212 or section 232. The term "fiscal year" means an accounting period of 12 months ending on the last day of any month other than December. The first taxable year, to be called the taxable year 1918, shall be the calendar year 1918 or any fiscal year ending during the calendar year 1918;

The term "fiduciary" means a guardian, trustee, executor, administrator, receiver, conservator, or any person acting in any fiduciary capacity for any person, trust, or estate;

The term "withholding agent" means any person required to deduct and withhold any tax under the provisions of section 221 or section 237;

The term "dividend" means any distribution made by a corporation out of its earnings or profits, accrued since February 28, 1913, and payable to its shareholders or members, whether in cash or in other property or in stock of the corporation. Any distribution shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits unless all earnings and profits have first been distributed. Any distribution made in the year 1918 or subsequent years shall be deemed to have been made from earnings or profits accrued since February 28, 1913; but any earnings or profits accrued prior to March 1, 1913, may be distributed in stock dividends or otherwise, exempt from the tax, after the earnings and profits accrued since February 28, 1913, have been distributed. If paid in stock of the corporation, a dividend shall be considered income to the amount of the earnings or profits distributed. Amounts distributed in the liquidation of a corporation shall be treated as payments in exchange for stock, and any gain or profit realized thereby shall be taxed to the distributee as other gains or profits.

BASIS FOR DETERMINING GAIN OR LOSS.

SEC. 201. That for the purpose of ascertaining the gain derived or loss sustained from the sale or other disposition of property, real, personal, or mixed, the basis shall be—

(a) In the case of property acquired before March 1, 1913, the fair market price or value of such property as of that date; and

(b) In the case of property acquired on or after that date, (1) the cost thereof; or (2) the inventory value, if the inventory is made in accordance with section 202.

INVENTORIES.

SEC. 202. That whenever in the opinion of the commissioner the use of inventories is necessary in order clearly to determine the income of any taxpayer, inventories shall be taken by such taxpayer upon such basis as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may approve or prescribe as most clearly reflecting the income of the taxpayer.

Part II.—Individuals.

NORMAL TAX.

SEC. 210. That in lieu of the taxes imposed by subdivision (a) of section 1 of the revenue act of 1916 and by section 1 of the revenue act of 1917 there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every individual a normal tax of 2 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 216.

SURTAX.

SEC. 211. That in lieu of the taxes imposed by subdivision (b) of section 1 of the revenue act of 1916 and by section 2 of the revenue act of 1917, but in addition to the normal tax imposed by section 210 of this act, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every individual a surtax equal to the sum of the following:

5 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $5,000 and does not exceed $7,500.

8 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $7,500 and does not exceed $10,000.

13 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $10,000 and does not exceed $15,000.

20 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $15,000 and does not exceed $20,000.

30 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $20,000 and does not exceed $25,000.

45 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $25,000 and does not exceed $50,000.

57 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $50,000 and does not exceed $75,000.

70 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $75,000 and does not exceed $100,000.

75 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $100,000 and does not exceed $200,000.

76 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $200,000 and does not exceed $300,000.

77 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $300,000 and does not exceed $500,000.

78 per cent of the amount by which the net income exceeds $500,000.

NET INCOME DEFINED.

SEC. 212. (a) That in the case of an individual the term "net income" means the gross income as defined in section 213, less the deductions allowed by section 214.

(b) The net income shall be computed upon the basis of the taxpayer's annual accounting period (fiscal year or calendar year, as the case may be) in accordance with the method of accounting regularly employed in keeping the books of such taxpayer; but if no such method of accounting has been so employed, or if it does not clearly reflect the income, the computation shall be made upon such basis and in such manner as in the opinion of the commissioner does clearly reflect the income. If the taxpayer's annual accounting period is other than a fiscal year as defined in section 200, or if the taxpayer has no annual accounting period or does not keep books, the net income shall be computed on the basis of the calendar year.

If a taxpayer changes his accounting period from fiscal year to calendar year, from calendar year to fiscal year, or from one fiscal year to another, the net income shall, with the approval of the commissioner, be computed on the basis of such new accounting period, subject to the provisions of section 226.

GROSS INCOME DEFINED.

SEC. 213. That for the purposes of this title (except as otherwise provided in section 233) the term "gross income"—

(a) Includes gains, profits, and income derived from salaries, wages, or compensation for personal service (including in the case of the President of the United States, the judges of the Supreme and inferior courts of the United States, and all other officers and employees, whether elected or appointed, of the United States, or of any State, Alaska, Hawaii, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, the compensation received as such), of whatever kind and in whatever form paid, or from professions, vocations, trades, businesses, commerce, or sales, or dealings in property, whether real or personal, growing out of the ownership or use of or interest in such property; also from interest, rent, dividends, securities, or the transaction of any business carried on for gain or profit, or gains or profits derived from any source whatever. The amount of all such items shall be included in the gross income for the taxable year in which received by the taxpayer, unless, under methods of accounting permitted under subdivision (b) of section 212, any such amounts are to be properly accounted for as of a different period; but

(b) Does not include the following items, which shall be exempt from taxation under this title:

(1) The proceeds of life insurance policies paid upon the death of the insured;

(2) The amount received by the insured as a return of premium or premiums paid by him under life insurance, endowment, or annuity contracts, either during the term or at the maturity of the term mentioned in the contract or upon surrender of the contract;

(3) The value of property acquired by gift, bequest, devise, or descent (but the income from such property shall be included in gross income);

(4) Interest upon (a) the obligations of a State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, issued on or prior to the date of the passage of this act, or (if authorized by law on or prior to the date of the passage of this act) issued within six months after the passage of this act and containing a statement of such authorization and its date, or (if issued after the passage of this act) containing a statement that they are issued for the purpose of funding or refunding any interest-bearing indebtedness outstanding on the date of the passage of this act or for the purpose of carrying out a contract entered into on or prior to the date of the passage of this act: Provided, That there shall be excluded from gross income in the case of any person owning obligations of States, Territories, political subdivisions thereof, or the District of Columbia (the interest upon which is included in gross income), the interest upon an amount of such obligations the principal of which does not exceed in the aggregate $5,000; or (b) securities issued under the provisions of the Federal farm-loan act of July 17, 1916; or (c) the obligations of the United States or its possessions. In the case of obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1917, the interest shall be exempt only if and to the extent provided in the act authorizing the issue thereof as amended and supplemented, and shall be excluded from gross income only if and to the extent it is wholly exempt from taxation both under this title and under Title III;

(5) The income of foreign governments received from investments in the United States in stocks, bonds, or other domestic securities, owned by such foreign government, or from interest on deposits in banks in the United States of moneys belonging to such foreign governments, or from any other source within the United States;

(6) Amounts received, through accident or health insurance or under workmen's compensation acts, as compensation for personal injuries or sickness, plus the amount of any damages received whether by suit or agreement on account of such injuries or sickness;

(7) Income derived from any public utility or the exercise of any essential governmental function and accruing to any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of a State or Territory, or income accruing to the government of any possession of the United States, or any political subdivision thereof.

Whenever any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any political subdivision of a State or Territory, prior to September 8, 1916, entered in good faith into a contract with any person, the object and purpose of which is to acquire, construct, operate, or maintain a public utility, no tax shall be levied under the provisions of this title upon the income derived from the operation of such public utility, so far as the payment thereof will impose a loss or burden upon such State, Territory, District of Columbia, or political subdivision; but this provision is not intended to confer upon such person any financial gain or exemption or to relieve such person from the payment of a tax as provided for in this title upon the part or portion of such income to which such person is entitled under such contract;

(8) The amount received by a person in the military or naval forces of the United States as salary or compensation in any form from the United States for active services in such forces.

(c) In the case of nonresident alien individuals, gross income includes only the gross income from sources within the United States, including interest on bonds, notes, or other interest-bearing obligations of residents, corporate or otherwise, and including dividends from resident corporations.

DEDUCTIONS ALLOWED.

SEC. 214. (a) That in computing net income there shall be allowed as deductions—

(1) All the ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in carrying on any trade or business, including a reasonable allowance for salaries or other compensation for personal services actually rendered, and including rentals or other payments required to be made as a condition to the continued use or possession of property, for purposes of the trade or business, of property to which the taxpayer has not taken or is not taking title or in which he has no equity;

(2) All interest paid or accrued within the taxable year on indebtedness, except on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry obligations or securities (other than obligations of the United States issued after September 24, 1917), the interest upon which is wholly exempt from taxation under this title as income to the taxpayer, or, in the case of a nonresident alien individual, the proportion of such interest which the amount of his gross income from sources within the United States bears to the amount of his gross income from all sources within and without the United States;

(3) Taxes paid or accrued within the taxable year imposed (a) by the authority of the United States, except income, war profits, and excess-profits taxes; or (b) by the authority of any of its possessions, except the amount of income, war profits, and excess-profits taxes allowed as a credit under section 222; or (c) by the authority of any State or Territory, or any county, school district, municipality, or other taxing subdivision of any State or Territory, not including those assessed against local benefits of a kind tending to increase the value of the property assessed; or (d) in the case of a citizen or resident of the United States, by the authority of any foreign country, except the amount of income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes allowed as a credit under section 222; or (e) in the case of a nonresident alien individual, by the authority of any foreign country (except income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes, and taxes assessed against local benefits of a kind tending to increase the value of the property assessed), upon property or business, to the extent that the income from such property or business is subject to taxation under this title;

(4) Losses sustained and charged off during the taxable year and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, if incurred in trade or business;

(5) Losses sustained during the taxable year and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, if incurred in any transaction entered into for profit, though not connected with the trade or business; but in the case of a nonresident alien individual only as to such transactions within the United States;

(6) Losses sustained during the taxable year of property not connected with the trade or business (but in the case of a nonresident alien individual only property within the United States) if arising from fires, storms, shipwreck, or other casualty, or from theft, and if not compensated for by insurance or otherwise;

(7) Debts ascertained to be worthless and charged off within the taxable year;

(8) A reasonable allowance for the exhaustion, wear and tear of property used in the trade or business, but in the case of a nonresident alien individual only as to property within the United States;

(9) In the case of buildings, machinery, equipment, or other facilities, constructed, erected, installed, or acquired, on or after April 6, 1917, for the production of articles contributing to the prosecution of the present war, there may be allowed a reasonable deduction for the amortization of such part of the cost of such facilities as has been borne by the taxpayer, but not again including amounts otherwise allowed under this title for depreciation, exhaustion, or wear and tear. At any time within three years after the termination of the present war with the Imperial German Government as declared by proclamation of the President, the commissioner may, and at the request of the taxpayer shall, reexamine the return, and if he then finds as a result of an appraisal or from other evidence that the deduction originally allowed was incorrect, the necessary adjustment of the taxes for the year or years affected shall be made and the amount of tax due upon such readjustment, if any, shall be paid upon notice and demand by the collector, or the amount of tax overpaid, if any, shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer in accordance with the provisions of section 252. In the case of a nonresident alien individual this deduction shall be allowed only as to facilities within the United States. In no case shall the deduction allowed under this paragraph exceed 25 per cent of the taxpayer's net income as computed without the benefit of this paragraph or paragraph (11);

(10) (a) In the case of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production to be ascertained not by the flush flow, but by the settled production or regular flow; (b) in the case of mines a reasonable allowance for depletion; (c) in the case of mines, oil and gas wells, other natural deposits and timber, a reasonable allowance for depreciation of improvements; such reasonable allowance in all the above cases to be made according to the peculiar conditions in each case and under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. In the case of leases the deductions allowed by this paragraph shall be equitably apportioned between the lessor and lessee. In the case of a nonresident alien individual deductions under this paragraph shall be allowed only as to property within the United States;

(11) Contributions or gifts made within the taxable year to corporations organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual, or to the special fund for vocational rehabilitation authorized by section 7 of the vocational rehabilitation act, to an amount not in excess of 15 per cent of the taxpayer's net income as computed without the benefit of this paragraph. Such contributions or gifts shall be allowable as deductions only if verified under rules and regulations prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary. In the case of a nonresident alien individual this deduction shall be allowed only as to contributions or gifts made to domestic corporations, or to such vocational rehabilitation fund.

(b) In the case of a nonresident alien individual the deductions allowed in paragraphs (1), (4), (7), (8), (9), and (10) of subdivision (a) shall be allowed only if and to the extent that they are connected with a trade or business carried on within the United States; and the proper apportionment and allocation of the deductions with respect to trade or business within and without the United States shall be determined under rules and regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

ITEMS NOT DEDUCTIBLE.

SEC. 215. That in computing net income no deduction shall in any case be allowed in respect of—

(a) Personal, living, or family expenses;

(b) Any amount paid out for new buildings or for permanent improvements or betterments made to increase the value of any property or estate;

(c) Any amount expended in restoring property or in making good the exhaustion thereof for which an allowance is or has been made; or

(d) Premiums paid on any life insurance policy covering the life of any officer or employee, or of any person financially interested in any trade or business carried on by the taxpayer, when the taxpayer or anyone financially interested in such trade or business is a beneficialy under such policy.

CREDITS ALLOWED.

SEC. 216. That for the purpose of the normal tax only there shall be allowed the following credits:

(a) The amount received as dividends from a corporation which is taxable under this title upon its net income;

(b) The amount received as interest upon obligations of the United States, any State, Territory, any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, which is included in gross income under section 213;

(c) In the case of a single person, a personal exemption of $1,000, or in the case of the head of a family or a married person living with husband or wife, a personal exemption of $2,000. A husband and wife living together shall receive but one personal exemption of $2,000 against their aggregate net income; and in case they make separate returns, the personal exemption of $2,000 may be taken by either or divided between them;

(d) Two hundred dollars for each person (other than husband or wife) dependent upon and receiving his chief support from the taxpayer, if such dependent person is under 18 years of age or is incapable of self-support because mentally or physically defective.

(e) In the case of a nonresident alien individual who is a citizen or subject of a country which imposes an income tax, the credits allowed in subdivisions (c) and (d) shall be allowed only if such country allows a similar credit to citizens of the United States not residing in such country.

NONRESIDENT ALIENS—ALLOWANCE OF DEDUCTIONS AND CREDITS.

SEC. 217. That a nonresident alien individual shall receive the benefit of the deductions and credits allowed in this title only by filing or causing to be filed with the collector a true and accurate return of his total income received from all sources corporate or otherwise in the United States, in the manner prescribed by this title, including therein all the information which the commissioner may deem necessary for the calculation of such deductions and credits: Provided, That the benefit of the credits allowed in subdivisions (c) and (d) of section 216 may, in the discretion of the commissioner, and except as otherwise provided in subdivision (e) of that section, be received by filing a claim therefor with the withholding agent. In case of failure to file a return, the collector shall collect the tax on such income, and all property belonging to such nonresident alien individual shall be liable to distraint for the tax.

PARTNERS.

SEC. 218. (a) That individuals carrying on business in partnership shall be liable for income tax only in their individual capacity. There shall be included in computing the net income of each partner his distributive share, whether distributed or not, of the net income of the partnership for the taxable year, or, if his net income for such taxable year is computed upon the basis of a period different from that upon the basis of which the net income of the partnership is computed, then his distributive share of the net income of the partnership for the last annual accounting period of the partnership prior to the close of the fiscal or calendar year upon the basis of which the partner's net income is computed.

The partner shall, for the purpose of the normal tax, be allowed as credits, in addition to the credits allowed to him under section 216, his proportionate share of such amounts specified in subdivisions (a) and (b) of section 216 as are received by the partnership.

(b) If a fiscal year of a partnership ends during a calendar year for which the rates of tax differ from those for the preceding calendar year, then (1) the rates for such preceding calendar year shall apply to an amount of each partner's share of such partnership net income equal to the proportion which the part of such fiscal year falling within such calendar year bears to the full fiscal year, and (2) the rates for the calendar year during which such fiscal year ends shall apply to the remainder.

(c) In the case of an individual member of a partnership which makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918, his proportionate share of any excess-profits tax imposed upon the partnership under the revenue act of 1917 with respect to that part of such fiscal year falling in 1917 shall, for the purpose of determining the tax imposed by this title, be credited against that portion of the net income embraced in his personal return for the taxable year 1918 to which the rates for 1917 apply.

(d) The net income of the partnership shall be computed in the same manner and on the same basis as provided in section 212, except that the deduction provided in paragraph (11) of subdivision (a) of section 214 shall not be allowed.

ESTATES AND TRUSTS.

SEC. 219. (a) That the tax imposed by sections 210 and 211 shall apply to the income of estates or of any kind of property held in trust, including—

(1) Income received by estates of deceased persons during the period of administration or settlement of the estate;

(2) Income accumulated in trust for the benefit of unborn or unascertained persons or persons with contingent interests;

(3) Income held for future distribution under the terms of the will or trust; and

(4) Income which is to be distributed to the beneficiaries periodically, whether or not at regular intervals.

(b) The fiduciary shall be responsible for making the return of income for the estate or trust for which he acts. The net income of the estate or trust shall be computed in the same manner and on the same basis as provided in section 212; and in cases under paragraph (4) of subdivision (a) of this section the fiduciary shall include in the return a statement of each beneficiary's distributive share of such net income, whether or not distributed before the close of the taxable year for which the return is made.

(c) In cases under paragraph (1), (2), or (3) of subdivision (a) the tax shall be imposed upon the net income of the estate or trust and shall be paid by the fiduciary. In such cases the estate or trust shall, for the purpose of the normal tax, be allowed the same credits as are allowed to single persons under section 216.

(d) In cases under paragraph (4) of subdivision (a) the tax shall not be paid by the fiduciary, but there shall be included in computing the net income of each beneficiary his distributive share, whether distributed or not, of the net income of the estate or trust for the taxable year, or, if his net income for such taxable year is computed upon the basis of a period different from that upon the basis of which the net income of the estate or trust is computed, then his distributive share of the net income of the estate or trust for the last annual accounting period of such estate or trust prior to the close of the fiscal or calendar year upon the basis of which such beneficiary's net income is computed. In such cases the beneficiary shall, for the purpose of the normal tax, be allowed as credits in addition to the credits allowed to him under section 216, his proportionate share of such amounts specified in subdivisions (a) and (b) of section 216 as are received by the estate or trust.

UNDISTRIBUTED PROFITS SUBJECT TO SURTAX.

SEC. 220. That for the purpose of the surtax, the net income of any individual includes the share to which he would be entitled of the gains and profits, if divided or distributed, whether divided or distributed or not, of all corporations, however created or organized, formed or fraudulently availed of for the purpose of preventing the imposition of such tax through the medium of permitting such gains and profits to accumulate instead of being divided or distributed; and the fact that any such corporation is a mere holding company, or that the gains and profits are permitted to accumulate beyond the reasonable needs of the business, shall be prima facie evidence of a fraudulent purpose to escape such tax; but the fact that the gains and profits are in any case permitted to accumulate and become surplus shall not be construed as evidence of a purpose to escape the tax in such case unless the Secretary certifies that in his opinion such accumulation is unreasonable for the purposes of the business. When requested by the commissioner, or any collector, every corporation shall forward to him a correct statement of such gains and profits and the names and addresses of the individuals or shareholders who would be entitled to the same if divided or distributed, and of the amounts that would be payable to each.

PAYMENT OF TAX AT SOURCE.

SEC. 221. (a) That all individuals, corporations, and partnerships, in whatever capacity acting, including lessees or mortgagors of real or personal property, fiduciaries, employers, and all officers and employees of the United States, having the control, receipt, custody, disposal, or payment, of interest, rent, salaries, wages, premiums, annuities, compensations, remunerations, emoluments, or other fixed or determinable annual or periodical gains, profits, and income, of any nonresident alien individual (other than income received as dividends from a corporation which is taxable under this title upon its net income) shall (except in the cases provided for in subdivision (b) and except as otherwise provided in regulations prescribed by the commissioner under section 217) deduct and withhold from such annual or periodical gains, profits, and income a tax equal to 12 per cent thereof.

(b) In any case where bonds, mortgages, or deeds of trust, or other similar obligations of a corporation contain a contract or provision by which the obligor agrees to pay any portion of the tax imposed by this title upon the obligee, or to reimburse the obligee for any portion of the tax, or to pay the interest without deduction for any tax which the obligor may be required or permitted to pay thereon or to retain therefrom under any law of the United States, the obligor shall deduct and withhold a tax equal to 2 per cent of the interest upon such bonds, mortgages, deeds of trust, or other obligations, whether such interest is payable annually or at shorter or longer periods and whether payable to a nonresident alien individual or to an individual citizen or resident of the United States. Such deduction and withholding shall not be required in the case of a citizen or resident entitled to receive such interest, if he files with the withholding agent on or before February 1 a signed notice in writing claiming the benefit of the credits provided in subdivisions (c) and (d) of section 216; nor in the case of a nonresident alien individual if so provided for in regulations prescribed by the commissioner under section 217.

(c) Every individual, corporation, or partnership required to deduct and withhold any tax under this section shall make return thereof on or before March 1 of each year and shall on or before June 15 pay the tax to the official of the United States Government authorized to receive it. Every such individual, corporation, or partnership is hereby made liable for such tax and is hereby indemnified against the claims and demands of any individual, corporation, or partnership for the amount of any payments made in accordance with the provisions of this section.

(d) Income upon which any tax is required to be withheld at the source under this section shall be included in the return of the recipient of such income, but any amount of tax so withheld shall be credited against the amount of income tax as computed in such return.

(e) If any tax required under this section to be deducted and withheld is paid by the recipient of the income, it shall not be re-collected from the withholding agent; nor in cases in which the tax is so paid shall any penalty be imposed or collected from the recipient of the income or the withholding agent for failure to return or pay the same, unless such failure was fraudulent and for the purpose of evading payment.

CREDIT FOR FOREIGN TAXES.

SEC. 222. (a) That in the case of a citizen of the United States, the tax computed under this title shall be credited with the amount of any income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes paid during the taxable year to any foreign country, Porto Rico, or the Philippine Islands, upon income derived from sources therein, including in the case of a member of a partnership or a beneficiary of an estate or trust his proportionate share of such taxes so paid during the taxable year by the partnership or by the estate or trust.

(b) In the case of an alien resident of the United States who is a citizen or subject of a country which imposes income, war-profits or excess-profits taxes, a like credit shall be allowed if such country allows a similar credit to citizens of the United States residing in such country.

(c) The credits allowed in subdivisions (a) and (b) shall be allowed only if the taxpayer furnishes evidence satisfactory to the commissioner showing the amount of income received from sources within such foreign country, Porto Rico, or the Philippine Islands, as the case may be, and all other information necessary for the computation of such credits.

INDIVIDUAL RETURNS.

SEC. 223. That every person having a net income for the taxable year of $1,000 or over if single or if married and not living with husband or wife, or of $2,000 or over if married and living with husband or wife, shall make under oath a return stating specifically the items of his gross income and the deductions and credits allowed by this title. If a husband and wife living together have an aggregate net income of $2,000 or over, each shall make such a return unless the income of each is included in a single joint return.

If the taxpayer is unable to make his own return, the return shall be made by a duly authorized agent or by the guardian or other person charged with the care of the person or property of such taxpayer.

PARTNERSHIP RETURNS.

SEC. 224. That every partnership shall make a return for each taxable year, stating specifically the items of its gross income and the deductions allowed by this title, and shall include in the return the names and addresses of the individuals who would be entitled to share in the net income if distributed and the amount of the distributive share of each individual. The return shall be sworn to by any one of the partners.

FIDUCIARY RETURNS.

SEC. 225. That every fiduciary (except receivers appointed by authority of law in possession of part only of the property of an individual) shall make under oath a return for the individual, estate, or trust for which he acts (1) if the net income of such individual is $1,000 or over if single or if married and not living with husband or wife, or $2,000 or over if married and living with husband or wife, or (2) if the net income of such estate or trust is $1,000 or over or if any beneficiary of such estate or trust is a nonresident alien, stating specifically the items of the gross income and the deductions and credits allowed by this title. Under such regulations as the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary may prescribe, a return made by one of two or more joint fiduciaries and filed in the district where such fiduciary resides shall be a sufficient compliance with the above requirement. The fiduciary shall make oath that he has sufficient knowledge of the affairs of such individual, estate, or trust to enable him to make the return, and that the same is, to the best of his knowledge and belief, true and correct.

Fiduciaries required to make returns under this act shall be subject to all the provisions of this act which apply to individuals.

RETURNS WHEN ACCOUNTING PERIOD CHANGED.

SEC. 226. That if a taxpayer, with the approval of the commissioner, changes the basis of computing net income from fiscal year to calendar year a separate return shall be made for the period between the close of the last fiscal year for which return was made and the following December 31. If the change is from calendar year to fiscal year, a separate return shall be made for the period between the close of the last calendar year for which return was made and the date designated as the close of the fiscal year. If the change is from one fiscal year to another fiscal year, a separate return shall be made for the period between the close of the former fiscal year and the date designated as the close of the new fiscal year. If a taxpayer making his first return for income tax keeps his accounts on the basis of a fiscal year, he shall make a separate return for the period between the beginning of the calendar year in which such fiscal year ends and the end of such fiscal year.

In all of the above cases the net income shall be computed on the basis of such period for which separate return is made, and the tax shall be paid thereon at the rate for the calendar year in which such period is included; and the credits provided in subdivisions (c) and (d) of section 216 shall be reduced, respectively, to amounts which bear the same ratio to the full credits provided in such subdivisions as the number of months in such period bears to 12 months.

TIME AND PLACE FOR FILING RETURNS.

SEC. 227. (a) That returns shall be made on or before the 15th day of the third month following the close of the fiscal year; or, if the return is made on the basis of the calendar year, then the return shall be made on or before the 15th day of March. The commissioner may grant a reasonable extension of time for filing returns whenever, in his judgment, good cause exists, and shall keep a record of every such extension and the reason therefor. Except in the case of taxpayers who are abroad, no such extension shall be for more than two months.

(b) Returns shall be made to the collector for the district in which is located the legal residence or principal place of business of the person making the return; or, if he has no legal residence or principal place of business in the United States, then to the collector at Baltimore, Md.

UNDERSTATEMENT IN RETURNS.

SEC. 228. That if the collector or deputy collector has reason to believe that the amount of any income returned is understated, he shall give due notice to the taxpayer making the return to show cause why the amount of the return should not be increased, and upon proof of the amount understated, may increase the same accordingly. Such taxpayer may furnish sworn testimony to prove any relevant facts and if dissatisfied with the decision of the collector may appeal to the commissioner for his decision, under such rules of procedure as may be prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary.

Part III.—Corporations.

TAX ON CORPORATIONS.

SEC. 230. That, in lieu of the taxes imposed by section 10 of the revenue act of 1916, as amended by the revenue act of 1917, and by section 4 of the revenue act of 1917, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every corporation a tax, as follows:

(a) In the case of a domestic corporation 18 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 236: Provided, That the rate shall be 12 per cent upon so much of this amount as does not exceed the sum of (1) the amount of dividends paid during the taxable year, plus (2) the amount paid during the taxable year out of earnings or profits in discharge of bonds and other interest-bearing obligations outstanding prior to the beginning of the taxable year, plus (3) the amount paid during the taxable year in the purchase of obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1918; and

(b) In the case of a foreign corporation 18 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 236: Provided, That the rate shall be 12 per cent upon so much of this amount as does not exceed the sum of (1) the amount of dividends paid during the taxable year to citizens or residents of the United States or to domestic corporations or partnerships, plus (2) the same proportion of the amount paid during the taxable year out of earnings or profits in discharge of bonds or other interest-bearing obligations outstanding at the beginning of the taxable year which the amount of gross income of the corporation from sources within the United States bears to the amount of its gross income from all sources within and without the United States, plus (3) the amount paid during the taxable year in the purchase of obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1918.

CONDITIONAL AND OTHER EXEMPTIONS.

SEC. 231. That the following organizations shall be exempt from taxation under this title—

(1) Labor, agricultural, or horticultural organizations;

(2) Mutual savings banks not having a capital stock represented by shares;

(3) Fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations, (a) operating under the lodge system or for the exclusive benefit of the members of a fraternity itself operating under the lodge system, and (b) providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, or other benefits to the members of such society, order, or association or their dependents;

(4) Domestic building and loan associations and cooperative banks without capital stock organized and operated for mutual purposes and without profit;

(5) Cemetery companies owned and operated exclusively for the benefit of their members;

(6) Corporations organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, or educational purposes, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual;

(7) Business leagues, chambers of commerce, or boards of trade, not organized for profit and no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual;

(8) Civic leagues or organizations not organized for profit but operated exclusively for the promotion of social welfare;

(9) Clubs organized and operated exclusively for pleasure, recreation, and other nonprofitable purposes, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or member;

(10) Farmers' or other mutual hail, cyclone, or fire insurance companies, mutual ditch or irrigation companies, mutual or cooperative telephone companies, or like organizations of a purely local character, the income of which consists solely of assessments, dues, and fees collected from members for the sole purpose of meeting expenses;

(11) Farmers', fruit growers', or like associations, organized and operated as sales agents for the purpose of marketing the products of members and turning back to them the proceeds of sales, less the necessary selling expenses, on the basis of the quantity of produce furnished by them;

(12) Corporations organized for the exclusive purpose of holding title to property, collecting income therefrom, and turning over the entire amount thereof, less expenses, to an organization which itself is exempt from the tax imposed by this title;

(13) Federal land banks and national farm-loan associations as provided in section 26 of the act approved July 17, 1916, entitled "An act to provide capital for agricultural development, to create standard forms of investment based upon farm mortgage, to equalize rates of interest upon farm loans, to furnish a market for United States bonds, to create Government depositaries and financial agents for the United States, and for other purposes";

(14) Joint-stock land banks as to income derived from bonds or debentures of other joint-stock land banks or any Federal land bank belonging to such joint-stock land bank.

NET INCOME DEFINED.

SEC. 232. That in the case of a corporation the term "net income" means the gross income as defined in section 233 less the deductions allowed by section 234, and the net income shall be computed on the same basis as is provided in subdivision (b) of section 212 or in section 226.

GROSS INCOME DEFINED.

SEC. 233. (a) That in the case of a corporation the term "gross income" means the gross income as defined in section 213, except that—

(1) In the case of life insurance companies there shall not be included in gross income such portion of any actual premium received from any individual policyholder within the taxable year as is paid back or credited to or treated as an abatement of premium of such policyholder within the taxable year.

(2) Mutual marine insurance companies shall include in gross income the gross premiums collected and received by them less amounts paid for reinsurance.

(b) In the case of a foreign corporation gross income includes only the gross income from sources within the United States, including the interest on bonds, notes, or other interest-bearing obligations of residents, corporate or otherwise, and including dividends from resident corporations.

DEDUCTIONS ALLOWED.

SEC. 234. (a) That in computing the net income of a corporation subject to the tax imposed by section 230, there shall be allowed as deductions:

(1) All the ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in carrying on any trade or business, including a reasonable allowance for salaries or other compensation for personal services actually rendered, and including rentals or other payments required to be made as a condition to the continued use or possession of property to which the corporation has not taken or is not taking title, or in which it has no equity;

(2) All interest paid or accrued within the taxable year on its indebtedness, or, in the case of a foreign corporation, the proportion of such interest paid which the amount of its gross income from sources within the United States bears to the amount of its gross income from all sources within and without the United States;

(3) Taxes paid or accrued within the taxable year imposed (a) by the authority of the United States, except income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes; or (b) by the authority of any of its possessions, except the amount of income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes allowed as a credit under section 238; or (c) by the authority of any State or Territory, or any county, school district, municipality, or other taxing subdivision of any State or Territory, not including those assessed against local benefits; or (d) in the case of a domestic corporation, by the authority of any foreign country, except the amount of income, war-profits and excess-profits taxes allowed as a credit under section 238: Provided, That in the case of obligors specified in subdivision (b) of section 221 no deduction for the payment of the tax imposed by this title or any other tax paid pursuant to the contract or provision referred to in that subdivision shall be allowed;

(4) Losses sustained and charged off during the taxable year and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise;

(5) Debts ascertained to be worthless and charged off within the taxable year;

(6) Amounts received as dividends from a corporation which is taxable under this title upon its net income;

(7) A reasonable allowance for the exhaustion or wear and tear of property used in the trade or business, but in the case of a foreign corporation only as to property within the United States;

(8) In the case of buildings, machinery, equipment, or other facilities, constructed, erected, installed, or acquired, on or after April 6, 1917, for the production of articles contributing to the prosecution of the present war, there may be allowed a reasonable deduction for the amortization of such part of the cost of such facilities as has been borne by the taxpayer, but not again including amounts otherwise allowed under this title for depreciation, exhaustion, or wear and tear. At any time within three years after the termination of the present war with the Imperial German Government as declared by proclamation of the President, the commissioner may, and at the request of the taxpayer shall, reexamine the return, and if he then finds as a result of an appraisal or from other evidence that the deduction originally allowed was incorrect, the necessary adjustment of the taxes for the year or years affected shall be made and the amount of tax due upon such readjustment, if any, shall be paid upon notice and demand by the collector, or the amount of tax overpaid, if any, shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer in accordance with the provisions of section 252. In the case of a nonresident alien individual this deduction shall be allowed only as to facilities within the United States. In no case shall the deduction allowed under this paragraph exceed 25 per cent of the taxpayer's net income as computed without the benefit of this paragraph;

(9) (a) In the case of oil and gas wells a reasonable allowance for actual reduction in flow and production to be ascertained not by the flush flow but by the settled production or regular flow; (b) in the case of mines a reasonable allowance for depletion; (c) in the case of mines, oil and gas wells, other natural deposits and timber, a reasonable allowance for depreciation of improvements; such reasonable allowance in all the above cases to be made according to the peculiar conditions in each case and under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. In the case of leases the deductions allowed by this paragraph shall be equitably apportioned between the lessor and lessee. In the case of a foreign corporation the deductions under this paragraph shall be allowed only as to property within the United States;

(10) In the case of insurance companies, in addition to the above: (a) The net addition required by law to be made within the taxable year to reserve funds (including in the case of assessment insurance companies the actual deposit of sums with State or Territorial officers pursuant to law as additions to guarantee or reserve funds); and (b) the sums other than dividends paid within the taxable year on policy and annuity contracts;

(11) In the case of corporations issuing policies covering life, health, and accident insurance combined in one policy issued on the weekly premium payment plan continuing for life and not subject to cancellation, in addition to the above, such portion of the net addition (not required by law) made within the taxable year to reserve funds as the commissioner finds to be required for the protection of the holders of such policies only;

(12) In the case of mutual marine insurance companies, there shall be allowed, in addition to the deductions allowed in paragraphs (1) to (10), inclusive, amounts repaid to policyholders on account of premiums previously paid by them, and interest paid upon such amounts between the ascertainment and the payment thereof;

(13) In the case of mutual insurance companies (other than mutual life or mutual marine insurance companies) requiring their members to make premium deposits to provide for losses and expenses, there shall be allowed, in addition to the deductions allowed in paragraphs (1) to (10), inclusive, the amount of premium deposits returned to their policyholders and the amount of premium deposits retained for the payment of losses, expenses, and reinsurance reserves.

(b) In the case of a foreign corporation the deductions allowed in subdivision (d), except those allowed in paragraphs (2) and (3), shall be allowed only if and to the extent that they are connected with a trade or business carried on within the United States; and the proper apportionment and allocation of the deductions with respect to trade or business within and without the United States shall be determined under rules and regulations prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

ITEMS NOT DEDUCTIBLE.

SEC. 235. That in computing net income no deduction shall in any case be allowed in respect of any of the items specified in section 215.

CREDITS ALLOWED.

SEC. 236. That there shall be allowed the following credits:

(a) The amount received as interest upon obligations of the United States, any State, Territory, any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, which is included in gross income under section 233;

(b) The amount of any war-profits or excess-profits taxes imposed by act of Congress for the same taxable year: Provided, That in the case of a corporation which makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918, the portion of the excess-profits tax specified in clause (1) of section 335 shall be credited against that portion of the net income specified in clause (1) of section 239, and the portion of the war-profits or excess-profits tax specified in clause (2) of section 335 shall be credited against that portion of the net income specified in clause (2) of section 239.

PAYMENT OF TAX AT SOURCE.

SEC. 237. That in the case of foreign corporations not engaged in trade or business within the United States and not having any office or place of business therein, there shall be deducted and withheld at the source in the same manner and upon the same items of income as is provided in section 221 a tax equal to 18 per cent thereof, and such tax shall be returned and paid in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as provided in that section: Provided, That in the case of interest described in subdivision (b) of that section the deduction and withholding shall be at the rate of 2 per cent.

CREDIT FOR FOREIGN TAXES.

SEC. 238. That in the case of a domestic corporation the total income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes imposed for the taxable year by act of Congress shall be credited with the amount of any income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes paid during the taxable year to any foreign country, Porto Rico, or the Philippine Islands, upon income derived from sources therein.

This credit shall be allowed only if the taxpayer furnishes evidence satisfactory to the commissioner showing the amount of income received from sources within such foreign country, Porto Rico, or the Philippine Islands, as the case may be, and all other information necessary for the computation of such credit.

RATES FOR FISCAL YEAR 1917–18.

SEC. 239. That if a corporation makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918 the net income shall be divided into two parts, namely: (1) The portion which bears the same ratio to the total net income as the period between the beginning of such fiscal year and December 31, 1917, bears to the full fiscal year; and (2) the remaining portion of the net income.

The portion specified in clause (1) shall be subject to the rates prescribed by Title I of the revenue act of 1917 and by Title I of the revenue act of 1916 as amended by the revenue act of 1917; and the portion specified in clause (2) shall be subject to the rates prescribed by this title.

CORPORATION RETURNS.

SEC. 240. That every corporation not exempt under section 231 shall make a return, stating specifically the items of its gross income and the deductions and credits allowed by this title. The return shall be sworn to by the president, vice president, or other principal officer and by the treasurer or assistant treasurer. If any foreign corporation has no office or place of business in the United States, but has an agent in the United States, the return shall be made by the agent. In cases where receivers, trustees in bankruptcy, or assignees are operating the property or business of corporations, such receivers, trustees, or assignees shall make returns for such corporations in the same manner and form as corporations are required to make returns. Any tax due on the basis of such returns made by receivers, trustees, or assignees shall be collected in the same manner as if collected from the corporations of whose business or property they have custody and control.

Returns made under this section shall be subject to the provisions of sections 226 and 228.

TIME AND PLACE FOR FILING RETURNS.

SEC. 241. (a) That returns of corporations shall be made at the same time as is provided in subdivision (a) of section 227.

(b) Returns shall be made to the collector of the district in which is located the principal place of business or principal office or agency of the corporation, or, if it has no principal place of business or principal office or agency in the United States, then to the collector at Baltimore, Md.

Part IV.—Administrative provisions.

PAYMENT OF TAXES.

SEC. 250. That except as provided in sections 221 and 237 the tax shall be paid in installments, one-third of the amount of the tax shown in the return to be paid at the time fixed by law for filing the return, one-third on the 15th day of the second month thereafter, and the remaining one-third on the 15th day of the fourth month after the time fixed by law for filing the return; but where an extension of time for filing the return is granted, the first installment shall be due upon the expiration of the period of such extension, and the second and third installments shall be due as above stated, except that in the case of any taxpayer who is abroad the commissioner may extend the time for payment of the second and third installments not more than four months after the expiration of the period of any extension of time for filing his return. If any installment is not paid when due, the whole amount of the tax unpaid shall become due and payable upon notice and demand by the collector.

The tax may at the option of the taxpayer be paid in a single payment instead of in installments, in which case the total amount shall be paid on or before the time fixed by law for filing the return, or, where an extension of time for filing the return has been granted, on or before the expiration of the period of such extension.

As soon as practicable after the return is filed, the commissioner shall examine it. If it then appears that the correct amount of the tax is greater or less than that shown in the return, the installments shall be recomputed. If the amount already paid exceeds that which should have been paid on the basis of the installments as recomputed, the excess so paid shall be credited against the next installments falling due; and if the amount already paid exceeds the correct amount of the tax, the excess shall be credited or refunded to the taxpayer in accordance with the provisions of section 252.

If the amount already paid is less than that which should have been paid, the difference shall, to the extent not covered by any credits then due to the taxpayer under section 252, be paid upon notice and demand by the collector. In such case if the return is made in good faith and the understatement of the amount in the return is not due to any fault of the taxpayer, there shall be no penalty because of such understatement. If the understatement is due to negligence on the part of the taxpayer, but without intent to defraud, there shall be added as part of the tax 5 per cent of the total amount of the deficiency, plus interest at the rate of 1 per cent per month on the amount of the deficiency of each installment from the time the installment was due.

If the understatement is false or fraudulent with intent to evade the tax, then, in addition to other penalties provided by law for false or fraudulent returns, there shall be added as part of the tax 100 per cent of the amount of the deficiency.

If the return is made pursuant to section 3176 of the Revised Statutes as amended, the amount of tax determined to be due under such return shall be paid upon notice and demand by the collector.

Except in the case of false or fraudulent returns, the amount of tax due under any return shall be determined and assessed by the commissioner within five years after the return was due or was made, and no suit or proceeding for the collection of any tax shall be begun after the expiration of five years after the date when the return was due or was made. In the case of false or fraudulent returns, the amount of tax due may be determined at any time after the return is filed, and the tax may be collected at any time after it becomes due.

If any tax remains unpaid after the date when it is due, and for 10 days after notice and demand by the collector, then, except in the case of estates of insane, deceased, or insolvent persons, there shall be added as part of the tax the sum of 5 per cent of the amount due but unpaid, plus interest at the rate of 1 per cent per month upon such amount from the time it became due.

RECEIPTS FOR TAXES.

SEC. 251. That every collector to whom any payment of any tax is made under the provisions of this title shall give to the person making such payment a full written or printed receipt, stating the amount paid and the particular account for which such payment was made; and whenever any debtor pays taxes on account of payments made or to be made by him to separate creditors the collector shall, if requested by such debtor, give a separate receipt for the tax paid on account of each creditor in such form that the debtor can conveniently produce such receipts separately to his several creditors in satisfaction of their respective demands up to the amounts stated in the receipts; and such receipt shall be sufficient evidence in favor of such debtor to justify him in withholding from his next payment to his creditor the amount therein stated; but the creditor may, upon giving to his debtor a full written receipt acknowledging the payment to him of any sum actually paid and accepting the amount of tax paid as aforesaid (specifying the same) as a further satisfaction of the debt to that amount, require the surrender to him of such collector's receipt.

REFUNDS.

SEC. 252. That if, upon examination of any return of income made pursuant to this act, the act of August 5, 1909, entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," the act of October 3, 1913, entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," the revenue act of 1916, as amended, or the revenue act of 1917, it appears that an amount of income, war-profits or excess-profits tax has been paid in excess of that properly due, then, subject to the provisions of section 3228 of the Revised Statutes, the amount of the excess shall be credited against any income, war-profits or excess-profits taxes, or installment thereof, then due from the taxpayer under any other return, and any balance of such excess shall be immediately refunded to the taxpayer.

PENALTIES.

SEC. 253. That any individual, corporation, or partnership required under this title to pay or collect any tax, to make a return, or to supply information, who fails to pay or collect such tax, to make such return, or to supply such information at the time or times required under this title, shall be liable to a penalty of not more than $1,000. Any individual, corporation, or partnership, or any officer or employee of any corporation or member or employee of a partnership, who willfully refuses to pay or collect such tax, to make such return, or to supply such information at the time or times required under this title, or who willfully attempts in any manner to defeat or evade the tax imposed by this title, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both, together with the costs of prosecution.

RETURNS OF PAYMENTS OF DIVIDENDS.

SEC. 254. That every corporation subject to the tax imposed by this title shall, when required by the commissioner, render a correct return duly verified under oath, of its payments of dividends, stating the name and address of each stockholder, the number of shares owned by him, and the amount of dividends paid to him.

RETURNS OF BROKERS.

SEC. 255. That every individual, corporation, or partnership doing business as a broker on any exchange or board of trade or other similar place of business shall, when required by the commissioner, render a correct return duly verified under oath, under such rules and regulations as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe, showing the names of customers for whom such individual, corporation, or partnership has transacted any business, with such details as to the profits, losses, or other information which the commissioner may require, as to each of such customers, as will enable the commissioner to determine whether all income tax due on profits or gains of such customers has been paid.

INFORMATION AT SOURCE.

SEC. 256. That all individuals, corporations, and partnerships, in whatever capacity acting, including lessees or mortgagors of real or personal property, fiduciaries, and employers, making payment to another individual, corporation, or partnership, of interest, rent, salaries, wages, premiums, annuities, compensations, remunerations, emoluments, or other fixed or determinable gains, profits, and income (other than payments described in sections 254 and 255), of $1,000 or more in any taxable year, or, in the case of such payments made by the United States, the officers or employees of the United States having information as to such payments and required to make returns in regard thereto by the regulations hereinafter provided for, shall render a true and accurate return to the commissioner, under such regulations and in such form and manner as may be prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary, setting forth the amount of such gains, profits, and income, and the name and address of the recipient of such payment.

Such returns may be required, regardless of amounts, (1) in the case of payments of interest upon bonds, mortgages, deeds of trust, or other similar obligations of corporations, and (2) in the case of collections of items (not payable in the United States) of interest upon the bonds of foreign countries and interest upon the bonds of and dividends from foreign corporations by individuals, corporations, or partnerships, undertaking as a matter of business or for profit the collection of foreign payments of such interest or dividends by means of coupons, checks, or bills of exchange.

When necessary to make effective the provisions of this section the name and address of the recipient of income shall be furnished upon demand of the individual, corporation, or partnership paying the income.

The provisions of this section shall apply to the calendar year 1918 and each calendar year thereafter, but shall not apply to the payment of interest on obligations of the United States.

RETURNS TO BE PUBLIC RECORDS.

SEC. 257. That returns upon which the tax has been determined by the commissioner shall be filed in the office of the commissioner and shall constitute public records; but they shall be open to inspection only upon order of the President and under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary and approved by the President: Provided, That the proper officers of any State imposing an income tax to which corporations are subject may, upon the request of the governor thereof, have access to the returns of any corporation, or to an abstract thereof showing the name and income of the corporation, at such times and in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe.

The commissioner shall as soon as practicable in each year cause to be prepared and made available to public inspection in the office of each collector a list containing the names in alphabetical order and the post-office addresses of all individuals making income-tax returns in such district.

PUBLICATION OF STATISTICS.

SEC. 258. That the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prepare and publish annually statistics reasonably available with respect to the operation of the income, war-profits, and excess-profits tax laws, including classifications of taxpayers and of income, the amounts allowed as deductions, exemptions, and credits, and any other facts deemed pertinent and valuable.

COLLECTION OF FOREIGN ITEMS.

SEC. 259. That all individuals, corporations, or partnerships undertaking as a matter of business or for profit the collection of foreign payments of interest or dividends by means of coupons, checks, or bills of exchange shall obtain a license from the commissioner and shall be subject to such regulations enabling the Government to obtain the information required under this title as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe; and whoever knowingly undertakes to collect such payments without having obtained a license therefor, or without complying with such regulations, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

PORTO RICO AND PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

SEC. 260. That in Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands the income tax shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in accordance with the provisions of the revenue act of 1916, as amended by the revenue act of 1917: Provided, That the Porto Rican or Philippine Legislature shall have power by due enactment to amend, alter, modify, or repeal the income-tax laws in force in Porto Rico or the Philippine Islands, respectively.

TITLE III.—WAR EXCESS-PROFITS TAX.

Part I.—General definitions.

SEC. 300. That when used in this title the terms "taxable year," "fiscal year," and "dividends" shall have the same meaning as provided for the purposes of income tax in sections 200 and 201. The first taxable year for the purposes of this title shall be the same as the first taxable year for the purposes of the income tax under Title II.

Part II.—Imposition of tax.

SEC. 301. That in lieu of the tax imposed by Title II of the revenue act of 1917, but in addition to the other taxes imposed by this act, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every corporation, a tax equal to 80 per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the war-profits credit (determined under section 311).

SEC. 302. That the corporations enumerated in section 231 shall, to the extent that they are exempt from income tax under Title II, be exempt from taxation under this title.

Part III.—War excess-profits method.

SEC. 310. That as used in this title the term "prewar period" means the calendar years 1911, 1912, and 1913, or, if a corporation was not in existence during the whole of such period, then as many of such years during the whole of which the corporation was in existence.

SEC. 311. (a) That the war-profits credit shall be an amount equal to the average net income of the corporation for the prewar period, plus or minus as the case may be 10 per cent of the invested capital added or withdrawn since January 1, 1913; but if the tax is computed for a period of less than 12 months, such amount shall be reduced to the same proportion thereof as the number of months in the period is of 12 months.

(b) If the corporation was not in existence during the whole of any one calendar year in the prewar period or had no net income, the war-profits credit shall be an amount that shall be the same proportion of the net income of the corporation during the taxable year as the proportion which the war excess profits for the same calendar year of representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business bears to the total net income of the trade or business received by such corporation. In the case of a foreign corporation, the net income received from sources within the United States during the taxable year shall be used as the basis of computation.

(c) In the case of a foreign corporation by deducting from the net income of the trade or business received from sources within the United States during the taxable year the average amount of the annual net income of the trade or business from sources within the United States during the prewar period.

Part V.—Net income.

SEC. 320. (a) That for the purpose of this title the net income of a corporation shall be ascertained and returned—

(1) For the calendar years 1911 and 1912 upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided in section 38 of the act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, except that taxes imposed by such section and paid by the corporation within the year shall be included;

(2) For the calendar year 1913 upon the same basis and in the same menner as provided in Section II of the act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913, except that taxes imposed by section 38 of such act of August 5, 1909, and paid by the corporation within the year shall be included, and except that the amounts received by it as dividends upon the stock or from the net earnings of other corporations subject to the tax imposed by Section II of such act of October 3, 1913, shall be deducted; and

(3) For the taxable year upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided for income-tax purposes in Title II of this act, except that in the case of oil and gas wells there shall be deducted (in lieu of the deduction provided in clause (a) of paragraph (9) of subdivision (a) of section 234) a reasonable allowance for depletion (including in the case of producers or prospectors a reasonable allowance for hazard not to exceed 10 per cent of the value in the ground of the oil withdrawn during the taxable year), such deduction to be made under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

(b) The average net income for the prewar period shall be determined by dividing the number of years within that period during the whole of which the corporation was in existence into the sum of the net income for such years, even though there may have been no net income for one or more of such years.

Part VI.—Invested capital.

SEC. 325. (a) That as used in this title—

The term "intangible property" means patents, copyrights, secret processes and formulæ, good will, trade-marks, trade-brands, franchises, and other like property;

The term "tangible property" means stocks, bonds, notes, and other evidences of indebtedness, bills and accounts receivable, leaseholds, and other property other than intangible property;

The term "borrowed capital" means money or other property borrowed, whether represented by bonds, notes, open accounts, or otherwise;

The term "inadmissible assets" means stocks, bonds, and other obligations (other than obligations of the United States), the dividends or interest from which is not included in computing net income, but where the income derived from such assets consists in part of gain or profit derived from the sale or other disposition thereof, a corresponding part of the capital invested in such assets shall not be deemed to be inadmissible assets.

(b) For the purposes of this title the par value of stock or shares shall, in the case of stock or shares having no par value, be deemed to be the fair market value as of the date or dates of issue of such stock or shares.

SEC. 326. (a) That as used in this title the term "invested capital" means (except as provided in subdivisions (b) and (c) of this section):

(1) Actual cash bona fide paid in for stock or shares;

(2) Actual cash value of tangible property, other than cash, bona fide paid in for stock or shares, at the time of such payment, but in no case to exceed the par value of the original stock or shares specifically issued therefor;

(3) Paid-in or earned surplus and undivided profits; not including surplus and undivided profits earned during the taxable year, and not including the increase in the value of any asset above the original cost until such increase is actually realized by sale;

(4) Intangible property bona fide paid in for stock or shares prior to March 3, 1917, in an amount not exceeding (a) the actual cash value of such property at the time paid in, (b) the par value of the stock or shares issued therefor, or (c) in the aggregate 20 per cent of the par value of the total stock or shares of the corporation outstanding on March 3, 1917, whichever is lowest;

(5) Patents and copyrights bona fide paid in for stock or shares on or after March 3, 1917, in an amount not exceeding (a) the actual cash value of such property at the time paid in, (b) the par value of the stock or shares issued therefor, or (c) in the aggregate 20 per cent of the par value of the total stock or shares of the corporation outstanding at the beginning of the taxable year, whichever is lowest; but

(b) As used in this title the term "invested capital" does not include:

(1) Borrowed capital; or

(2) Intangible property (other than patents and copyrights) paid in for stock or shares on or after March 3, 1917.

(c) There shall be deducted from invested capital as above defined an amount equal to the average amount of capital invested in inadmissible assets held by the corporation during the year: Provided, That at the option of the corporation the amount to be so deducted shall be reduced to the amount by which such average amount invested in inadmissible assets exceeds the average amount of borrowed capital of the corporation (other than indebtedness maturing within one year of its creation), all accounts payable and current liabilities, for such year, but in such case in computing the tax under this title there shall be included in the net income for such year the same proportion of the total amount of interest and dividends received during such year from such inadmissible assets as the amount of such capital invested in inadmissible assets not deducted from invested capital bears to the total amount of such inadmissible assets.

(d) In the case of a foreign corporation the term "invested capital" includes only its invested capital used or employed within the United States.

(e) The invested capital for any year shall be the average invested capital for such year, as above defined, but in the case of a corporation making a return for a fractional part of the year a corresponding reduction shall be made in the invested capital.

SEC. 327. (a) That in the following cases the invested capital shall be determined as provided in subdivision (b) of this section: (1) Where the commissioner is unable satisfactorily to determine the invested capital as provided in section 326; or (2) where a mixed aggregate of tangible property and intangible property has been paid in for stock or for stock and bonds and the commissioner is unable satisfactorily to determine the respective values of the several classes of property at the time of payment, or to distinguish the classes of property paid in for stock and for bonds, respectively; or (3) where capital is a material income-producing factor, but where, because of the fact that the capital employed is in large part borrowed, there is no invested capital. This section shall not apply in the case of a corporation 50 per cent or more of whose gross income (as defined in section 213 for income tax purposes) consists of gain, profits, or commissions derived from Government contracts, unless the commissioner is satisfied that such corporation is overcapitalized.

(b) In the cases specified in subdivision (a) the invested capital shall be the amount which bears the same ratio to the net income of the corporation for the taxable year as the average invested capital for the taxable year of representative corporations engaged in a like or similar trade or business bears to their average net income for such year.

SEC. 328. (a) That in cases where invested capital is to be determined in the manner provided in section 327, the commissioner shall compare the taxpayer only with representative corporations whose invested capital can be satisfactorily determined under section 326 and which are, as nearly as may be, similarly circumstanced with respect to gross income, net income, profits per unit of business transacted and capital employed, the amount and rate of war or excess profits, and all other relevant facts and circumstances.

(b) For the purposes of section 327 the ratios between the average invested capital and the average net income of representative corporations shall be determined for each calendar year by the commissioner in accordance with regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary.

In the case of a corporation making a return on the basis of a fiscal year the ratios determined for the calendar year ending during such fiscal year shall be used, except that in the case of a fiscal year ending during the calendar year 1918 the ratios based upon returns made under Title II of the revenue act of 1917 shall be used.

(c) The commissioner shall keep a record of all cases in which invested capital is determined in the manner prescribed in section 327, containing the name and address of each taxpayer, the business in which engaged, the amount of invested capital and net income shown by the return, and the amount of invested capital as determined under such section. The commissioner shall furnish a copy of such record and other detailed information with respect to such cases when required by resolution of either House of Congress, without regard to the restrictions contained in section 257.

Part VII.—Reorganizations.

SEC. 330. That in the case of the reorganization, consolidation, or change of ownership after January 1, 1911, of a trade or business now carried on by a corporation, the corporation shall for the purposes of this title be deemed to have been in existence prior to that date, and the net income and invested capital of such predecessor trade or business for all or any part of the prewar period prior to the organization of the corporation now carrying on such trade or business shall be deemed to have been the net income and invested capital of such corporation.

If such predecessor trade or business was carried on by a partnership or individual the net income for the prewar period shall be ascertained and returned upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided for income tax purposes in Title II, except that the credits provided in subdivisions (a) and (b) of section 216 shall be deducted.

SEC. 331. In the case of the reorganization, consolidation, or change of ownership of a trade or business after March 3, 1917, if an interest or control in such trade or business of 50 per cent or more remains in the same persons, or any of them, then no asset transferred or received from the predecessor trade or business shall, for the purpose of determining invested capital, be allowed a greater value than would have been allowed under this title in computing the invested capital of such prior trade or business if such asset had not been so transferred or received.

Part VIII.—Miscellaneous.

SEC. 335. That if a corporation makes return for a fiscal year beginning in 1917 and ending in 1918, the tax for the first taxable year under this title shall be the sum of: (1) a tax computed under Title II of the revenue act of 1917 for the portion of such fiscal year falling in 1917; and (2) a tax computed under this title for the portion of such fiscal year falling in 1918.

The tax under clause (1) shall be computed upon the same proportion of the net income (as determined under Title II of this act for income tax purposes) for such fiscal year as the portion of such fiscal year falling in 1917 is of the full fiscal year; and the tax under clause (2) shall be computed upon the remainder of such net income.

SEC. 336. That every corporation, not exempt under section 304, having a net income of $3,000 or over for the taxable year shall make a return for the purposes of this title. Such returns shall be made, and the taxes imposed by this title shall be paid, at the same times and places, in the same manner, and subject to the same conditions as is provided in the case of returns and payment of income tax by corporations for the purposes of Title II, and all the provisions of that title not inapplicable, including penalties, are hereby made applicable to the taxes imposed by this title.

In no case shall the tax under this title or Title II be determined on the basis of a so-called consolidated return but shall in each case be determined upon the basis of the net income and invested capital of the corporation liable to the tax.

TITLE IV.—ESTATE TAX.

SEC. 400. That when used in this title—

The term "executor" means the executor or administrator of the decedent, or, if there is no executor or administrator, any person who takes possession of any property of the decedent; and

The term "collector" means the collector of internal revenue of the district in which was the domicile of the decedent at the time of his death, or, if there was no such domicile in the United States, then the collector of the district in which is situated the part of the gross estate of the decedent in the United States, or, if such part of the gross estate is situated in more than one district, then the collector of internal revenue of such district as may be designated by the commissioner.

SEC. 401. That (in lieu of the tax imposed by Title II of the revenue act of 1916, as amended, and in lieu of the tax imposed by Title IX of the revenue act of 1917) a tax equal to the sum of the following percentages of the value of the net estate (determined as provided in section 403) is hereby imposed upon the transfer of the net estate of every decedent dying after the passage of this act, whether a resident or nonresident of the United States:

Three per cent of the amount of the net estate not in excess of $50,000;

6 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $50,000 and does not exceed $150,000;

9 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $150,000 and does not exceed $250,000;

12 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $250,000 and does not exceed $450,000;

15 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $450,000 and does not exceed $1,000,000;

18 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $1,000,000 and does not exceed $2,000,000;

21 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $2,000,000 and does not exceed $3,000,000;

24 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $3,000,000 and does not exceed $4,000,000;

27 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $4,000,000 and does not exceed $5,000,000;

30 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $5,000,000 and does not exceed $8,000,000;

35 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $8,000,000 and does not exceed $10,000,000; and 40 per cent of the amount by which the net estate exceeds $10,000,000.

SEC. 402. That the value of the gross estate of the decedent shall be determined by including the value at the time of his death of all property, real or personal, tangible or intangible, wherever situated—

(a) To the extent of the interest therein of the decedent at the time of his death which after his death is subject to the payment of the charges against his estate and the expenses of its administration and is subject to distribution as part of his estate;

(b) To the extent of any interest therein of the surviving spouse, existing at the time of the decedent's death as dower, courtesy, or by virtue of a statute creating an estate in lieu of dower or courtesy;

(c) To the extent of any interest therein of which the decedent has at any time made a transfer, or with respect to which he has at any time created a trust, in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death (whether such transfer or trust is made or created before or after the passage of this act), except in case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth. Any transfer of a material part of his property in the nature of a final disposition or distribution thereof, made by the decedent within three years prior to his death without such a consideration, shall, unless shown to the contrary, be deemed to have been made in contemplation of death within the meaning of this title;

(d) To the extent of the interest therein held jointly or as tenants in the entirety by the decedent and any other person, or deposited in banks or other institutions in their joint names and payable to either or the survivor, except such part thereof as may be shown to have originally belonged to such other person and never to have belonged to the decedent;

(e) To the extent of any property passing under a general power of appointment exercised by the decedent (1) by will, or (2) by deed executed in contemplation of, or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after, his death, except in case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth; and

(f) To the extent of the amount receivable by the executor as insurance under policies taken out by the decedent upon his own life; and to the extent of the excess over $40,000 of the amount receivable by all other beneficiaries as insurance under policies taken out by the decedent upon his own life.

SEC. 403. That for the purpose of the tax the value of the net estate shall be determined—

(a) In the case of a resident, by deducting from the value of the gross estate—

(1) Such amounts for funeral expenses, administration expenses, claims against the estate, unpaid mortgages, losses incurred during the settlement of the estate arising from fires, storms, shipwreck, or other casualty, or from theft, when such losses are not compensated for by insurance or otherwise, and such amounts reasonably required and actually expended for the support during the settlement of the estate of those dependent upon the decedent, as are allowed by the laws of the jurisdiction, whether within or without the United States, under which the estate is being administered, but not including any income taxes upon income received after the death of the decedent, or any estate, succession, legacy, or inheritance taxes;

(2) An amount equal to the value at the time of the decedent's death of any property, real, personal, or mixed, which can be identified as having been received by the decedent as a share in the estate of any person who died within five years prior to the death of the decedent, or which can be identified as having been acquired by the decedent in exchange for property so received, if an estate tax under the revenue act of 1917 or under this act was collected from such estate, and if such property is included in the decedent's gross estate; and

(3) An exemption of $50,000;

(b) In the case of a nonresident, by deducting from the value of that part of his gross estate which at the time of his death is situated in the United States—

(1) That proportion of the deductions specified in paragraph (1) of subdivision (a) of this section which the value of such part bears to the value of his entire gross estate, wherever situated, but in no case shall the amount so deducted exceed 10 per cent of the value of that part of his gross estate which at the time of his death is situated in the United States; and

(2) An amount equal to the value at the time of the decedent's death of any property, real, personal, or mixed, which can be identified as having been received by the decedent as a share in the estate of any person who died within five years prior to the death of the decedent, or which can be identified as having been acquired by the decedent in exchange for property so received, if an estate tax under the revenue act of 1917 or under this act was collected from such estate, and if such property is included in that part of the decedent's gross estate which at the time of his death is situated in the United States.

No deductions shall be allowed in the case of a nonresident unless the executor includes in the return required to be filed under section 404 of the value at the time of his death of that part of the gross estate of the nonresident not situated in the United States.

For the purpose of this title stock in a domestic corporation owned and held by a nonresident decedent, and the amount receivable as insurance upon the life of a nonresident decedent where the insurer is a domestic corporation, shall be deemed property within the United States, and any property of which the decedent has made a transfer or with respect to which he has created a trust, within the meaning of subdivision (c) of section 402, shall be deemed to be situated in the United States, if so situated either at the time of the transfer or the creation of the trust, or at the time of the decedent's death.

SEC. 404. That the executor, within 60 days after qualifying as such, or after coming into possession of any property of the decedent, whichever event first occurs, shall give written notice thereof to the collector. The executor shall also, at such times and in such manner as may be required by regulations made pursuant to law, file with the collector a return under oath in duplicate, setting forth (a) the value of the gross estate of the decedent at the time of his death, or, in case of a nonresident, of that part of his gross estate situated in the United States; (b) the deductions allowed under section 403; (c) the value of the net estate of the decedent as defined in section 403; and (d) the tax paid or payable thereon; or such part of such information as may at the time be ascertainable and such supplemental data as may be necessary to establish the correct tax.

Return shall be made in all cases where the gross estate at the death of the decedent exceeds $50,000, and in the case of the estate of every nonresident any part of whose gross estate is situated in the United States. If the executor is unable to make a complete return as to any part of the gross estate of the decedent, he shall include in his return a description of such part and the name of every person holding a legal or beneficial interest therein, and upon notice from the collector such person shall in like manner make a return as to such part of the gross estate. The commissioner shall make all assessments of the tax under the authority of existing administrative special and general provisions of law relating to the assessment and collection of taxes.

SEC. 405. That if no administration is granted upon the estate of a decedent, or if no return is filed as provided in section 404, or if a return contains a false or incorrect statement of a material fact, the collector or deputy collector shall make a return and the commissioner shall assess the tax thereon.

SEC. 406. That the tax shall be due one year after the decedent's death; but in any case where the commissioner finds that payment of the tax within one year after the decedent's death would impose undue hardship upon the estate, he may grant an extension of time for the payment of the tax for a period not to exceed two years from the due date. If the tax is not paid within 1 year and 180 days after the decedent's death, interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the expiration of one year after the decedent's death shall be added as part of the tax.

SEC. 407. That the executor shall pay the tax to the collector or deputy collector. If the amount of the tax can not be determined, the payment of a sum of money sufficient, in the opinion of the collector, to discharge the tax shall be deemed payment in full of the tax, except as in this section otherwise provided. If the amount so paid exceeds the amount of the tax as finally determined, the commissioner shall refund such excess to the executor. If the amount of the tax as finally determined exceeds the amount so paid, the collector shall notify the executor of the amount of such excess and demand payment thereof. If such excess part of the tax is not paid within 10 days after such notification, interest shall be added thereto at the rate of 10 per cent per annum from the expiration of such 10 days' period until paid, and the amount of such excess shall be a lien upon the entire gross estate, except such part thereof as may have been sold to a bona fide purchaser for a fair consideration in money or money's worth.

The collector shall grant to the person paying the tax duplicate receipts, either of which shall be sufficient evidence of such payment, and shall entitle the executor to be credited and allowed the amount thereof by any court having jurisdiction to audit or settle his accounts.

SEC. 408. That if the tax herein imposed is not paid within 180 days after it is due, the collector shall, unless there is reasonable cause for further delay, proceed to collect the tax under the provisions of general law, or commence appropriate proceedings in any court of the United States, in the name of the United States, to subject the property of the decedent to be sold under the judgment or decree of the court. From the proceeds of such sale the amount of the tax, together with the costs and expenses of every description to be allowed by the court, shall be first paid and the balance shall be deposited according to the order of the court, to be paid under its direction to the person entitled thereto.

If the tax or any part thereof is paid by, or collected out of that part of the estate passing to or in the possession of, any person other than the executor in his capacity as such, such person shall be entitled to reimbursement out of any part of the estate still undistributed or by a just and equitable contribution by the persons whose interest in the estate of the decedent would have been reduced if the tax had been paid before the distribution of the estate or whose interest is subject to equal or prior liability for the payment of taxes, debts, or other charges against the estate, it being the purpose and intent of this title that so far as is practicable and unless otherwise directed by the will of the decedent, the tax shall be paid out of the estate before its distribution. If any part of the gross estate consists of proceeds of policies of insurance upon the life of the decedent receivable by a beneficiary other than the executor, the executor shall be entitled to recover from each beneficiary such portion of the total tax paid as the proceeds, in excess of $40,000, of such policies bear to the net estate. If there is more than one such beneficiary, the executor shall be entitled to recover from such beneficiaries in the same ratio.

SEC. 409. That unless the tax is sooner paid in full, it shall be a lien for 10 years upon the gross estate of the decedent, except that such part of the gross estate as is used for the payment of charges against the estate and expenses of its administration, allowed by any court having jurisdiction thereof, shall be divested of such lien. If the commissioner is satisfied that the tax liability of an estate has been fully discharged, he may, under regulations prescribed by him, with the approval of the Secretary, issue his certificate releasing any or all property of such estate from the lien herein imposed.

If (a) the decedent makes a transfer of, or creates a trust with respect to, any property in contemplation of or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment at or after his death (except in the case of a bona fide sale for a fair consideration in money or money's worth) or (b) if insurance passes under a contract executed by the decedent in favor of a specific beneficiary, and if in either case the tax in respect thereto is not paid when due, then the transferee, trustee, or beneficiary shall be personally liable for such tax; and such property, to the extent of the decedent's interest therein at the time of such transfer, or to the extent of such beneficiary's interest under such contract of insurance, shall be subject to a like lien equal to the amount of such tax. Any part of such property sold by such transferee or trustee to a bona fide purchaser for a fair consideration in money or money's worth shall be divested of the lien, and a like lien shall then attach to all the property of such transferee or trustee, except any part sold to a bona fide purchaser for a fair consideration in money or money's worth.

SEC. 410. That whoever knowingly makes any false statement in any notice or return required to be filed under this title shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.

Whoever fails to comply with any duty imposed upon him by section 404, or, having in his possession or control any record, file, or paper containing or supposed to contain any information concerning the estate of the decedent, or having in his possession or control any property comprised in the gross estate of the decedent, fails to exhibit the same upon request to the commissioner or any collector or law officer of the United States, or his duly authorized deputy or agent, who desires to examine the same in the performance of his duties under this title, shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding $500, to be recovered, with costs of suit, in a civil action in the name of the United States.

INSURANCE.

SEC. 503. That from and after November 1, 1918, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid, in lieu of the taxes imposed by section 504 of the revenue act of 1917, the following taxes on the issuance of insurance policies, including, in the case of policies issued outside the United States, their delivery within the United States by any agent or broker, whether acting for the insurer or the insured; such taxes to be paid by the insurer or by such agent or broker:

(a) Life insurance: A tax equivalent to 8 cents on each $100 or fractional part thereof of the amount for which any life is insured under any policy of insurance or other instrument, by whatever name the same is called: Provided, That on all policies for life insurance only by which a life is insured not in excess of $500, issued on the industrial or weekly or monthly payment plan of insurance, the tax shall be 40 per cent of the amount of the first weekly premium or 20 per cent of the amount of the first monthly premium, as the case may be: Provided further, That on policies of group life insurance, covering groups of not less than 25 lives in the employ of the same person, for the benefit of persons other than the employer, the tax shall be equivalent to 4 cents on each $100 of the aggregate amount for which the group policy is issued and of any net increase in the amount of the insurance under such policy;

(b) Marine, inland, and fire insurance: A tax equivalent to 1 cent on each dollar or fractional part thereof of the premium charged under each policy of insurance or other instrument, by whatever name the same is called, whereby insurance is made or renewed upon property of any description (including rents or profits), whether against peril by sea or inland waters, or by fire or lightning, or other peril;

(c) Casualty insurance: A tax equivalent to 1 cent on each dollar or fractional part thereof of the premium charged under each policy of insurance or obligation of the nature of indemnity for loss, damage, or liability (except bonds and policies taxable under subdivision 2 of schedule A of title XI) issued or executed or renewed by any person transacting the business of employer's liability, workmen's compensation, accident, health, tornado, plate glass, steam boiler, elevator, burglary, automatic sprinkler, automobile, or other branch of insurance (except life insurance and insurance described and taxed in the preceding subdivision): Provided, That in case of policies of insurance issued on the industrial or weekly or monthly payment plan the tax shall be 40 per cent of the amount of the first weekly premium or 20 per cent of the amount of the first monthly premium, as the case may be;

(d) Policies issued by any corporation enumerated in section 231 and policies of reinsurance shall be exempt from the taxes imposed by this section.

SEC. 504. That every person issuing policies of insurance upon the issuance of which a tax is imposed by section 503 shall make monthly returns under oath, in duplicate, and pay such tax to the collector of the district in which the principal office or place of business of such person is located. Such returns shall contain such information and be made at such times and in such manner as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulation prescribe.

TITLE VI.—TAX ON BEVERAGES.

SEC. 600. (a) That there shall be levied and collected on all distilled spirits now in bond or that have been or that may be hereafter produced in or imported into the United States, except such distilled spirits as are subject to the tax provided in section 604, in lieu of the internal-revenue taxes now imposed thereon by law, a tax of $2.20 (or, if withdrawn for beverage purposes or for use in the manufacture or production of any article used or intended for use as a beverage, a tax of $6.40) on each proof gallon, or wine gallon when below proof, and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such proof or wine gallon, to be paid by the distiller or importer when withdrawn, and collected under the provisions of existing law.

(b) That the tax imposed by subdivision (a) on distilled spirits intended for beverage purposes shall not be due or payable on such spirits while stored in any distillery, bonded warehouse, or special or general bonded warehouse, and which, pursuant to any act of Congress or proclamation of the President of the United States, can not be lawfully sold or removed from any such warehouse during the period of prohibition fixed by such act or proclamation; and all warehousing bonds or transportation and warehousing bonds conditioned for the payment of tax on any such spirits so stored on the date such prohibition takes effect shall as to all such spirits actually so stored be canceled and discharged, provided the distiller of such spirits shall in lieu of such bonds and prior to their cancellation execute a bond in a penal sum of not less than $10,000, with sureties satisfactory to the collector of the district, conditioned that the principal shall, during the period of such prohibition, safely keep or cause to be kept in good condition all such spirits and the warehouse in which the same are stored, and shall not remove or suffer to be removed from warehouse, contrary to law, any such spirits during the period of such prohibition; and the bond herein prescribed shall be in such further sum and shall contain such further conditions as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations require. The distiller may, subject to the provisions of this section, be permitted to retain in any such bonded warehouse distilled spirits on which, under the terms of any existing bond, the tax imposed thereon becomes due and payable thereto prior to the date such prohibition takes effect: Provided, That on the removal of such prohibition the distiller shall, as to all spirits as to which the bonded period fixed by law has not expired and which remain stored in warehouse, execute new and satisfactory bond in the form required by existing law, conditioned for the payment of the tax on all such spirits; and all provisions of existing law relating to such bonded warehouses, or the storage of spirits therein, or to the execution of new or additional bonds, so far as applicable, shall continue in force as to all distilled spirits rebonded under the provisions of this section.

Upon the withdrawal of distilled spirits from bonded warehouse, after the period of prohibition has ended, and under the conditions imposed by section 50 of an act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the support of the Government, and for other purposes," approved August 28, 1894, an allowance for loss by leakage or other unavoidable cause, not exceeding 1 proof gallon as to packages of a capacity of not less than 40 wine gallons, may be made in addition to that provided in said section 50, as amended; and a like additional allowance of 1 proof gallon as to each package withdrawn may be made for each period of four months, or fraction thereof, for such spirits as shall have remained in warehouse during the period of prohibition and after the expiration of the maximum leakage period fixed by that section.

Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, any imported distilled spirits, wines, or other liquors which may be in any customs bonded warehouse under the customs laws on the date such prohibition takes effect shall be permitted to remain therein without payment of any taxes or duties thereon, beyond the three-year period provided in section 2971 of the Revised Statutes, during such period of prohibition; and may be exported at any time during such extended period. Any imported spirits, wines, or other liquors as to which the three-year bonded period may expire after the passage of this act and prior to the date such prohibition takes effect may at the option of the owner remain in bond during such period of prohibition.

(c) In lieu of the internal-revenue tax now imposed thereon by law there shall be levied and collected upon all perfumes hereafter imported into the United States containing distilled spirits a tax of $1.10 per wine gallon, and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such wine gallon. Such tax shall be collected by the collector of customs and deposited as internal-revenue collections, under such rules and regulations as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe.

SEC. 601. That no distilled spirits produced after October 3, 1917, shall be imported into the United States from any foreign country, or from the Virgin Islands (unless produced from products the growth of such islands, and not then into any State or Territory or District of the United States in which the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquor is prohibited), or from Porto Rico, or the Philippine Islands. Under such rules, regulations, and bonds as the Secretary may prescribe, the provisions of this section shall not apply to distilled spirits imported for other than (1) beverage purposes or (2) use in the manufacture or production of any article used or intended for use as a beverage.

SEC. 602. That at registered distilleries producing alcohol, or other high-proof spirits, packages may be filled with such spirits reduced to not less than one hundred proof from the receiving cisterns and tax paid without being entered into bonded warehouse. Such spirits may be also transferred from the receiving cisterns at such distilleries, by means of pipe lines, direct to storage tanks in the bonded warehouse and may be warehoused in such storage tanks. Such spirits may be also transferred in tanks or tank cars to general bonded warehouses for storage therein, either in storage tanks in such warehouses or in the tanks in which they were transferred. Such spirits may also be transferred from receiving cisterns or warehouse storage tanks to barrels, drums, tanks, tank cars, or other approved containers, and may be transported in such containers for exportation or other lawful purposes. The Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, is hereby empowered to prescribe all necessary regulations relating to the drawing off, transferring, gauging, storing, and transporting of such spirits; the records to be kept and returns to be made; the size and kind of packages and tanks to be used; the marking, branding, numbering, and stamping of such packages and tanks; the kinds of stamps, if any, to be used; and the time and manner of paying the tax; the kind of bond and the penal sum of same. The tax prescribed by law must be paid before such spirits are removed from the distillery premises or from general bonded warehouse in the case of spirits transferred thereto, except as otherwise provided by law.

Under such regulations as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe, distilled spirits may hereafter be drawn from receiving cisterns and deposited in distillery warehouses without having affixed to the packages containing the same, distillery warehouse stamps, and such packages, when so deposited in warehouse, may be withdrawn therefrom on the original gauge where the same have remained in such warehouse for a period of not exceeding 30 days from the date of deposit.

Under such regulations as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe, the manufacture, warehousing, withdrawal, and shipment, under the provisions of existing law, of ethyl alcohol for other than (1) beverage purposes or (2) use in the manufacture or production of any article used or intended for use as a beverage, and denatured alcohol may be exempted from the provisions of section 3283 of the Revised Statutes.

The Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations exempt distillers of ethyl alcohol for use in the production of munitions of war or for other nonbeverage purposes from so much of the provisions of sections 3264, 3285, or 3309 of the Revised Statutes, and acts amendatory thereof, respecting the survey of distilleries, the period of the filling and emptying of fermenting tubs, and assessments, as, in his judgment, may be expedient: Provided, That the bond prescribed in section 3260 of the Revised Statutes shall, in the cases herein provided, be in such sum and contain such further conditions as the Commissioner may require.

SEC. 603. That under such regulations as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe, ethyl alcohol of not less than 180 degrees proof, produced at any central distilling and denaturing plant established under the provisions of subsection 2, paragraph N, of Section IV of the act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913, may be removed from such plant to any central denaturing bonded warehouse for denaturation, or may, before or after denaturation, be removed from such plant or from such denaturing bonded warehouse, free of tax, for use of the United States or for shipment to any nation while engaged against the German Government in the present war, and the removal herein authorized may be made in such tank vessels, tank cars, drums, casks, or other containers as may be approved by the Commissioner. It shall be lawful under the regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, for an allowance to be made for leakage or loss by unavoidable accident and without fault or negligence of the distiller, owner, carrier, or his agents or employees, which may occur during the transportation of such spirits or while the same are lawfully stored on either of the premises herein prescribed.

SEC. 604. That upon all distilled spirits produced in or imported into the United States upon which the internal-revenue tax now imposed by law has been paid, and which, on the day after the passage of this act, are held by any person and intended for sale or for use in the manufacture or production of any article intended for sale, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a floor tax equal to the difference between the tax imposed by this act and the tax so paid.

SEC. 605. That in addition to the tax imposed by this act on distilled spirits and wines there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid, in lieu of the tax imposed by section 304 of the revenue act of 1917, a tax of 30 cents on each proof gallon and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of such proof gallon on all distilled spirits or wines hereafter rectified, purified, or refined in such manner, and on all mixtures hereafter produced in such manner, that the person so rectifying, purifying, refining, or mixing the same is a rectifier within the meaning of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes, as amended: Provided, That this tax shall not apply to gin produced by the redistillation of a pure spirit over juniper berries and other aromatics.

Upon all such articles heretofore produced, and which on the day after the passage of this act are held by any person and intended for sale, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a floor tax of 15 cents on each proof gallon, and a proportionate tax at a like rate on all fractional parts of each proof gallon; and all such distilled spirits so held and not contained in the distillers' original stamped packages, or in bottles or other containers bearing the distillers' original labels, shall for the purpose of this section be regarded as rectified spirits.

When the process of rectification is completed and the taxes prescribed by this section have been paid, it shall be unlawful for the rectifier or other dealer to reduce in proof or increase in volume such spirits or wine by the addition of water or other substance; nothing herein contained shall, however, prevent a rectifier from using again in the process of rectification spirits already rectified and upon which the taxes have theretofore been paid.

The taxes imposed by this section shall not attach to cordials or liqueurs on which a tax is imposed and paid under section 611 or 613, nor to the mixing and blending of wines, where such blending is for the sole purpose of perfecting such wines according to commercial standards, nor to blends made exclusively of two or more pure straight whiskies aged in wood for a period not less than four years and without the addition of coloring or flavoring matter or any other substance than pure water and if not reduced below 90 proof: Provided, That such blended whiskies shall be exempt from tax under this section only when compounded under the immediate supervision of a revenue officer, in such tanks and under such conditions and supervision as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe.

All distilled spirits or wines taxable under this section shall be subject to uniform regulations concerning the use thereof in the manufacture, blending, compounding, mixing, marking, branding, and sale of whisky and rectified spirits, and no discrimination whatsoever shall be made by reason of a difference in the character of the material from which same may have been produced.

The business of a rectifier of spirits shall be carried on and the tax on rectified spirits shall be paid, under such rules, regulations, and bonds as may be prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary.

Whoever violates any of the provisions of this section shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than two years, and shall, in addition, be liable to double the tax evaded, together with the tax, to be collected by assessment or on any bond given.

SEC. 606. That hereafter collectors shall not furnish wholesale liquor dealer's stamps in lieu of and in exchange for stamps for rectified spirits unless the package covered by stamp for rectified spirits is to be broken into smaller packages.

The commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, is authorized to discontinue the use of the following stamps whenever in his judgment the interests of the Government will be subserved thereby:

Distillery warehouse, special bonded warehouse, special bonded rewarehouse, general bonded warehouse, general bonded retransfer, transfer brandy, export tobacco, export cigars, export oleomargarine, and export fermented-liquor stamps.

SEC. 607. That the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, is hereby authorized to require at distilleries, breweries, rectifying houses, and wherever else in his judgment such action may be deemed advisable, the installation of meters, tanks, pipes, or any other apparatus for the purpose of protecting the revenue, and such meters, tanks, and pipes and all necessary labor incident thereto shall be at the expense of the person on whose premises the installation is required. Any such person refusing or neglecting to install such apparatus when so required by the commissioner shall not be permitted to conduct business on such premises.

SEC. 608. That there shall be levied and collected on all beer, lager beer, ale, porter, and other similar fermented liquor, containing one-half of 1 per cent, or more, of alcohol, brewed or manufactured and hereafter sold, or removed for consumption or sale, within the United States, by whatever name such liquors may be called, in lieu of the internal-revenue taxes now imposed thereon by law, a tax of $6 for every barrel containing not more than 31 gallons, and at a like rate for any other quantity or for the fractional parts of a barrel authorized and defined by law, to be collected under the provisions of existing law.

SEC. 609. That from and after the passage of this act taxable fermented liquors may be conveyed without payment of tax from the brewery premises where produced to a contiguous industrial distillery of either class established under the act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913, to be used as distilling material, and the residue from such distillation, containing less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume, which is to be used in making beverages, may be manipulated by cooling, flavoring, carbonating, settling, and filtering on the distillery premises or elsewhere.

The removal of the taxable fermented liquor from the brewery to the distillery and the operation of the distillery and removal of the residue therefrom shall be under the supervision of such officer or officers as the Commissioner shall deem proper, and the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, is hereby authorized to make such regulations from time to time as may be necessary to give force and effect to this section and to safeguard the revenue.

SEC. 610. That natural wine within the meaning of this act shall be deemed to be the product made from the normal alcoholic fermentation of the juice of sound, ripe grapes, without addition or abstraction, except such as may occur in the usual cellar treatment of clarifying and aging: Provided, however, That the product made from the juice of sound, ripe grapes by complete fermentation of the must under proper cellar treatment and corrected by the addition (under the supervision of a gauger or storekeeper-gauger in the capacity of gauger) of a solution of water and pure cane, beet, or dextrose sugar (containing, respectively, not less than 95 per cent of actual sugar, calculated on a dry basis) to the must or to the wine, to correct natural deficiencies, when such addition shall not increase the volume of the resultant product more than 35 per cent, and the resultant product does not contain less than five parts per thousand of acid before fermentation and not more than 13 per cent of alcohol after complete fermentation, shall be deemed to be wine within the meaning of this act, and may be labeled, transported, and sold as "wine," qualified by the name of the locality where produced, and may be further qualified by the name of its own particular type or variety: And provided further, That wine as defined in this section may be sweetened with cane sugar or beet sugar or pure condensed grape must and fortified under the provisions of this act, and wines so sweetened or fortified shall be considered sweet wine within the meaning of this act.

SEC. 611. That upon all still wines, including vermuth and all artificial or imitation wines or compounds sold as still wine, which are hereafter produced in or imported into the United States, or which on the day after the passage of this act are on any winery premises or other bonded premises or in transit thereto or at any customhouse, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in lieu of the internal-revenue taxes now imposed thereon by law, taxes at rates as follows, when sold, or removed for consumption or sale:

On wines containing not more than 14 per cent of absolute alcohol, 16 cents per wine gallon, the per cent of alcohol taxable under this section to be reckoned by volume and not by weight.

On wines containing more than 14 per cent and not exceeding 21 per cent of absolute alcohol, 40 cents per wine gallon.

On wines containing more than 21 per cent and not exceeding 24 per cent of absolute alcohol, $1 per wine gallon.

All such wines containing more than 24 per cent of absolute alcohol by volume shall be classed as distilled spirits and shall pay tax accordingly.

SEC. 612. That under such regulations and official supervision and upon the giving of such notices, entries, bonds, and other security as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe, any producer of wines defined under the provisions of this title may withdraw from any fruit distillery or special bonded warehouse grape brandy or wine spirits for the fortification of such wines on the premises where actually made: Provided, That there shall be levied and assessed against the producer of such wines a tax (in lieu of the internal-revenue tax now imposed thereon by law) of 60 cents per proof gallon of grape brandy or wine spirits whenever withdrawn and hereafter so used by him in the fortification of such wines during the preceding month, which assessment shall be paid by him within 10 months from the date of notice thereof: Provided further, That nothing contained in this section shall be construed as exempting any wines, cordials, liqueurs, or similar compounds from the payment of any tax provided for in this title.

SEC. 613. That upon the following articles which are hereafter produced in or imported into the United States, or which on the day after the passage of this act are on any winery premises or other bonded premises or in transit thereto or at any customhouse, there shall be levied, collected, and paid taxes at rates as follows, when sold, or removed for consumption or sale:

On each bottle or other container of champagne or sparkling wine, 12 cents on each one-half pint or fraction thereof.

On each bottle or other container of artificially carbonated wine, 6 cents on each one-half pint or fraction thereof.

On each bottle or other container of liqueurs, cordials, or similar compounds, by whatever name sold or offered for sale, containing sweet wine fortified with grape brandy, 6 cents on each one-half pint or fraction thereof.

The tax imposed by this section shall, in the case of any article upon which a corresponding internal-revenue tax is now imposed by law, be in lieu of such tax.

SEC. 614. That upon all articles specified in section 611 or 613 upon which the internal-revenue tax now imposed by law has been paid and which are on the day after the passage of this act held by any person and intended for sale, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a floor tax equal to the difference between the tax imposed by this act and the tax so paid.

SEC. 615. That upon all sweet wines held for sale by the producer thereof upon the day after the passage of this act there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a floor tax equivalent to 30 cents per proof gallon upon the grape brandy or wine spirits used in the fortification of such wine.

SEC. 616. That the taxes imposed by section 611 or 613 shall be paid by stamp on removal of the wines from the customhouse, winery, or other bonded place of storage for consumption or sale, and every person hereafter producing, or having in his possession or under his control when this title takes effect, any wines subject to the tax imposed in section 611 or 613 shall file such notice, describing the premises on which such wines are produced or stored; shall execute a bond in such form; shall make such inventories under oath; and shall, prior to sale or removal for consumption, affix to each cask or vessel containing such wine such marks, labels, or stamps as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may from time to time prescribe; and the premises described in such notice shall, for the purpose of this act, be regarded as bonded premises. But the provisions of this section, except as to payment of tax and the affixing of the required stamps or labels, shall not apply to wines held by retail dealers, as defined in section 3244 of the Revised Statutes, nor, subject to regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall the tax imposed by section 611 apply to wines produced for the family use of the duly registered producer thereof and not sold or otherwise removed from the place of manufacture and not exceeding in any case 200 gallons per year.

SEC. 617. That sections 42, 43, and 45 of the act entitled "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, as amended by section 68 of the act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved August 27, 1894, are further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 42. That any producer of pure sweet wines may use in the preparation of such sweet wines, under such regulations and after the filing of such notices and bonds, together with the keeping of such records and the rendition of such reports as to materials and products as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe, wine spirits produced by any duly authorized distiller, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in determining the liability of any distiller of wine spirits to assessment under section 3309 of the Revised Statutes, is authorized to allow such distiller credit in his computations for the wine spirits withdrawn to be used in fortifying sweet wines under this act.

"SEC. 43. That the wine spirits mentioned in section 42 is the product resulting from the distillation of fermented grape juice, to which water may have been added prior to, during, or after fermentation, for the sole purpose of facilitating the fermentation and economical distillation thereof, and shall be held to include the product from grapes or their residues commonly known as grape brandy, and shall include commercial grape brandy which may have been colored with burnt sugar or caramel; and the pure sweet wine which may be fortified with wine spirits under the provisions of this act is fermented or partially fermented grape juice only, with the usual cellar treatment, and shall contain no other substance whatever introduced before, at the time of, or after fermentation, except as herein expressly provided: Provided, That the addition of pure boiled or condensed grape must or pure crystallized cane or beet sugar, or pure dextrose sugar containing, respectively, not less than 95 per cent of actual sugar, calculated on a dry basis, or water, or any or all of them, to the pure grape juice before fermentation, or to the fermented product of such grape juice, or to both, prior to the fortification herein provided for, either for the purpose of perfecting sweet wines according to commercial standards or for mechanical purposes, shall not be excluded by the definition of pure sweet wine aforesaid: Provided, however, That the cane or beet sugar, or pure dextrose sugar, added for sweetening purposes shall not be in excess of 11 per cent of the weight of the wine to be fortified: And provided further, That the addition of water herein authorized shall be under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may from time to time prescribe: Provided, however, That records kept in accordance with such regulations as to the percentage of saccharine, acid, alcoholic, and added water content of the wine offered for fortification shall be open to inspection by any official of the Department of Agriculture thereto duly authorized by the Secretary of Agriculture; but in no case shall such wines to which water has been added be eligible for fortification under the provisions of this act, where the same, after fermentation and before fortification, have an alcoholic strength of less than 5 per cent of their volume.

"SEC. 45. That under such regulations and official supervision, and upon the execution of such entries and the giving of such bonds, bills of lading, and other security as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, any producer of pure sweet wines as defined by this act may withdraw wine spirits from any special bonded warehouse in original packages or from any registered distillery in any quantity not less than 80 wine gallons, and may use so much of the same as may be required by him under such regulations, and after the filing of such notices and bonds and the keeping of such records and the rendition of such reports as to materials and products and the disposition of the same as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, in fortifying the pure sweet wines made by him, and for no other purpose, in accordance with the foregoing limitations and provisions; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized whenever he shall deem it to be necessary for the prevention of violations of this law to prescribe that wine spirits withdrawn under this section shall not be used to fortify wines except at a certain distance prescribed by him from any distillery, rectifying house, winery, or other establishment used for producing or storing distilled spirits, or for making or storing wines other than wines which are so fortified, and that in the building in which such fortification of wines is practiced no wines or spirits other than those permitted by this regulation shall be stored in any room or part of the building in which fortification of wines is practiced. The use of wine spirits for the fortification of sweet wines under this act shall be under the immediate supervision of an officer of internal revenue, who shall make returns describing the kinds and quantities of wine so fortified, and shall affix such stamps and seals to the packages containing such wines as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall provide by regulations the time within which wines so fortified with the wine spirits so withdrawn may be subject to inspection, and for final accounting for the use of such wine spirits and for rewarehousing or for payment of the tax on any portion of such wine spirits which remain not used in fortifying pure sweet wines."

SEC. 618. (a) That under such regulations and upon the execution of such notices, entries, bonds, and other security as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe, domestic wines subject to the tax imposed by section 611 may be removed from the winery where produced, free of tax, for storage on other bonded premises or from such premises to other bonded premises (but not more than one such additional removal shall be allowed), or for exportation from the United States or for use as distilling material at any regularly registered distillery: Provided, however, That the distiller using any such wine as material shall, subject to the provisions of section 3309 of the Revised Statutes as amended, be held to pay the tax on the product of such wines as will include both the alcoholic strength therein produced by fermentation and that obtained from the brandy or wine spirits added to such wines at the time of fortification.

(b) Under regulations prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, it shall be lawful to produce grape wines on bonded winery premises by the usual method of fermentation, and to transport and use the same, and like wines heretofore produced and now stored on bonded winery premises, as distilling material for the production of nonbeverage spirits in the production of nonalcoholic wines containing less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume in any fruit brandy or industrial distillery: Provided, That all alcoholic spirits so obtained at any industrial distillery shall be denatured, and all spirits so obtained at any fruit distillery shall be removed and used only for nonbeverage purposes or for denaturation.

SEC. 619. That the collection of the tax on imported still wines, including vermuth, and sparkling wines, including champagne, and on imported liqueurs, cordials, and similar compounds, may be made within the discretion of the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, by assessment instead of by stamps.

SEC. 620. That whoever evades or attempts to evade any tax imposed by sections 611 to 615, both inclusive, or any requirement of sections 610 to 621, both inclusive, or regulation issued pursuant thereto, or whoever, otherwise than as provided in such sections, recovers or attempts to recover any spirits from domestic or imported wine, or whoever rectifies, mixes, or compounds with distilled spirits any domestic wines other than in the manufacture of liqueurs, cordials, or similar compounds, shall, on conviction, be punished for each such offense by a fine of not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both, and in addition thereto by a penalty of double the tax evaded, or attempted to be evaded, to be assessed and collected in the same manner as taxes are assessed and collected, and all wines, spirits, liqueurs, cordials, or similar compounds as to which such violation occurs shall be forfeited to the United States. But the provisions of this section and the provisions of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes as amended relating to rectification, or other internal-revenue laws of the United States, shall not be held to apply to or prohibit the mixing or blending of wines subject to tax under the provisions of sections 611 to 615, both inclusive, with each other or with other wines for the sole purpose of perfecting such wines according to commercial standards: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as prohibiting the use of tax-paid grain or other ethyl alcohol in the fortification of sweet wines as defined in section 610 of this act and section 43 of the act entitled "An act to reduce the revenue and equalize duties on imports, and for other purposes," approved October 1, 1890, as amended by this act.

SEC. 621. That the commissioner, by regulations to be approved by the Secretary, may require the use of each fruit distillery of such spirit meters, and such locks and seals to be affixed to fermenters, tanks, or other vessels and to such pipe connections as may in his judgment be necessary or expedient, and is hereby authorized to assign to any such distillery and to each winery where wines are to be fortified such number of gaugers or storekeeper-gaugers in the capacity of gaugers as may be necessary for the proper supervision of the manufacture of brandy or the making or fortifying of wines subject to tax imposed by this section; and the compensation of such officers shall not exceed $5 per diem while so assigned, together with their actual and necessary traveling expenses, and also a reasonable allowance for their board bills, to be fixed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, but not to exceed $2.50 per diem for such board bills.

SEC. 622. That the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, is hereby authorized to make such allowances for unavoidable loss of wines while on storage or during cellar treatment as in his judgment may be just and proper.

SEC. 623. That the second paragraph of section 3264 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by section 5 of the act of March 1, 1879, and as further amended by the act of June 22, 1910, be amended so as to read as follows:

"In all surveys 45 gallons of mash or beer brewed or fermented from grain shall represent not less than 1 bushel of grain, and 7 gallons of mash or beer brewed or fermented from molasses shall represent not less than 1 gallon of molasses, except in distilleries operated on the sour-mash principle, in which distilleries 60 gallons of beer brewed or fermented from grain shall represent not less than 1 bushel of grain, and except that in distilleries where the filtration-aeration process is used, with the approval of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; that is, where the mash after it leaves the mash tub is passed through a filtering machine before it is run into the fermenting tub, and only the filtered liquor passes into the fermenting tub, there shall hereafter be no limitattion upon the number of gallons of water which may be used in the process of mashing or filtration for fermentation; but the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, in order to protect the revenue, shall be authorized to prescribe by regulation, to be made by him, such character of survey as he may find suitable for distilleries using such filtration-aeration process. The provisions hereof relating to filtration-aeration process shall apply only to sweet-mash distilleries."

SEC. 624. That under such regulations as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe, alcohol or other distilled spirits of a proof strength of not less than 180 degrees intended for export free of tax may be drawn from receiving cisterns at any distillery, or from storage tanks in any distillery warehouse, for transfer to tanks or tank cars for export from the United States, and all provisions of existing law relating to the exportation of distilled spirits not inconsistent herewith shall apply to spirits removed for export under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 625. That section 3255 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the act of June 3, 1896, and as further amended by the act of March 2, 1911, be further amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3255. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may exempt distillers of brandy made exclusively from apples, peaches, grapes, pears, pineapples, oranges, apricots, berries, plums, pawpaws, persimmons, prunes, figs, or cherries from any provision of this title relating to the manufacture of spirits, except as to the tax thereon, when in his judgment it may seem expedient to do so: Provided, That where, in the manufacture of wine, artificial sweetening has been used the wine or the fruit pomace residium may be used in the distillation of brandy, and such use shall not prevent the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, from exempting such distiller from any provision of this title relating to the manufacture of spirits, except as to the tax thereon, when in his judgment it may seem expedient to do so: And provided further, That the distillers mentioned in this section may add to not less than 500 gallons (or 10 barrels) of grape cheese not more than 500 gallons of a sugar solution made from cane, beet, starch, or corn sugar, 95 per cent pure, such solution to have a saccharine strength of not to exceed 10 per cent, and may ferment the resultant mixture on a winery or distillery premises, and such fermented product shall be regarded as distilling material."

SEC. 626. That distilled spirits known commercially as gin of not less than 80 per cent proof may at any time within eight years after entry in bond at any distillery be bottled in bond at such distillery for export without the payment of tax, under such rules and regulations as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe.

SEC. 627. That section 3354 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the act approved June 18, 1890, be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3354. Every person who withdraws any fermented liquor from any hogshead, barrel, keg, or other vessel upon which the proper stamp has not been affixed for the purpose of bottling the same, or who carries on or attempts to carry on the business of bottling fermented liquor in any brewery or other place in which fermented liquor is made or upon any premises having communication with such brewery, or any warehouse, shall be liable to a fine of $500, and the property used in such bottling or business shall be liable to forfeiture: Provided, however, That this section shall not be construed to prevent the withdrawal and transfer of unfermented, partially fermented, or fermented liquors from any of the vats in any brewery by way of a pipe line or other conduit to another building or place for the sole purpose of bottling the same, such pipe line or conduit to be constructed and operated in such manner and with such cisterns, vats, tanks, valves, cocks, faucets, and gauges, or other utensils or apparatus, either on the premises of the brewery or the bottling house, and with such changes of or additions thereto, and such locks, seals, or other fastenings, and under such rules and regulations as shall be from time to time prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and all locks and seals prescribed shall be provided by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at the expense of the United States: Provided further, That the tax imposed in section 3339 of the Revised Statutes shall be paid on all fermented liquor removed from a brewery to a bottling house by means of a pipe or conduit, at the time of such removal, by the cancellation and defacement, by the collector of the district or his deputy, in the presence of the brewer, of the number of stamps denoting the tax on the fermented liquor thus removed. The stamps thus canceled and defaced shall be disposed of and accounted for in the manner directed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. And any violation of the rules and regulations hereafter prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, in pursuance of these provisions shall be subject to the penalties above provided by this section. Every owner, agent, or superintendent of any brewery or bottling house who removes, or connives at the removal of, any fermented liquor through a pipe line or conduit without payment of the tax thereon, or who attempts in any manner to defraud the revenue as above, shall forfeit all the liquors made by and for him, and all the vessels, utensils, and apparatus used in making the same."

SEC. 628. That there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in lieu of the taxes imposed by sections 313 and 315 of the revenue act of 1917—

(a) Upon all beverages derived wholly or in part from cereals or substitutes therefor and containing less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol, sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, in bottles or other closed containers, a tax equivalent to 15 per cent of the price for which so sold; and upon all ginger ale, root beer, sarsaparilla, pop, artificial mineral waters (carbonated or not carbonated), other carbonated waters or beverages, and other soft drinks (except fruit or berry juice), sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, in bottles or other closed containers, a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the price for which so sold; and

(b) Upon all natural mineral waters or table waters sold by the producer, bottler, or importer thereof, in bottles or other closed containers, a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the price for which so sold.

SEC. 629. That each manufacturer, producer, bottler, or importer of any of the articles enumerated in section 628 shall make monthly returns under oath in duplicate and pay the taxes imposed in respect to such articles by such section to the collector for the district in which is located the principal place of business, containing such information necessary for the assessment of the tax, and at such times and in such manner as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulation prescribe.

The tax shall, without assessment by the commissioner or notice from the collector, be due and payable to the collector at the time so fixed for filing the return. If the tax is not paid when due there shall be added as part of the tax a penalty of 5 per cent, together with interest at the rate of 1 per cent for each full month, from the time when the tax became due.

SEC. 630. That on and after ————, ——, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid to any person conducting a soda fountain, ice-cream parlor, or other similar place of business, for drinks commonly known as soft drinks, compounded or mixed at such place of business, or for ice cream, ice-cream sodas, sundaes, or other similar articles of food or drink, when any of the above are sold on or after such date for consumption in or in proximity to such place of business. Such tax shall be paid by the purchaser to the vendor at the time of the sale and shall be collected, returned, and paid to the United States by such vendor in the same manner as provided in section 502.

TITLE VII.—TAX ON CIGARS, TOBACCO, AND MANUFACTURES THEREOF.

SEC. 700. (a) That upon cigars and cigarettes manufactured in or imported into the United States, and hereafter sold by the manufacturer or importer, or removed for consumption or sale, there shall be levied, collected, and paid under the provisions of existing law, in lieu of the internal-revenue taxes now imposed thereon by law, the following taxes, to be paid by the manufacturer or importer thereof:

On cigars of all descriptions made of tobacco, or any substitute therefor, and weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand, $1.50 per thousand;

On cigars made of tobacco, or any substitute therefor, and weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand, if manufactured or imported to retail at not more than 5 cents each, $4 per thousand;

If manufactured or imported to retail at more than 5 cents each and not more than 8 cents each, $5.40 per thousand;

If manufactured or imported to retail at more than 8 cents each and not more than 15 cents each, $9 per thousand;

If manufactured or imported to retail at more than 15 cents each and not more than 20 cents each, $12 per thousand;

If manufactured or imported to retail at more than 20 cents each, $15 per thousand;

On cigarettes made of tobacco, or any substitute therefor, and weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand, $2.90 per thousand;

Weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand, $7.20 per thousand.

(b) Whenever in this section reference is made to cigars manufactured or imported to retail at not over a certain price each, then in determining the tax to be paid regard shall be had to the ordinary retail price of a single cigar.

(c) The commissioner may, by regulation, require the manufacturer or importer to affix to each box, package, or container a conspicuous label indicating the clause of this section under which the cigars therein contained have been tax-paid, which must correspond with the tax-paid stamp on such box or container.

(d) Every manufacturer of cigarettes (including small cigars weighing not more than 3 pounds per thousand) shall put up all the cigarettes and such small cigars that he manufactures or has manufactured for him, and sells or removes for consumption or sale, in packages or parcels containing 5, 8, 10, 12, 15, 16, 20, 24, 40, 50, 80, or 100 cigarettes each, and shall securely affix to each of such packages or parcels a suitable stamp denoting the tax thereon and shall properly cancel the same prior to such sale or removal for consumption or sale under such regulations as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe; and all cigarettes imported from a foreign country shall be packed, stamped, and the stamps canceled in a like manner, in addition to the import stamp indicating inspection of the customhouse before they are withdrawn therefrom.

SEC. 701. (a) That upon all tobacco and snuff manufactured in or imported into the United States, and hereafter sold by the manufacturer or importer, or removed for consumption or sale, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in lieu of the internal-revenue taxes now imposed thereon by law, a tax of 18 cents per pound, to be paid by the manufacturer or importer thereof.

(b) Section 3362 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3362. All manufactured tobacco shall be put up and prepared by the manufacturer for sale, or removal for sale or consumption, in packages of the following description and in no other manner:

"All smoking tobacco, snuff, fine-cut chewing tobacco, all cut and graulated tobacco, all shorts, the refuse of fine-cut chewing, which has passed through a riddle of 36 meshes to the square inch, and all refuse scraps, clippings, cuttings, and sweepings of tobacco, and all other kinds of tobacco not otherwise provided for, in packages containing one-eighth of an ounce, three-eighths of an ounce, and further packages with a difference between each package and the one next smaller of one-eighth of an ounce up to and including 2 ounces, and further packages with a difference between each package and the one next smaller of one-fourth of an ounce up to and including 4 ounces, and packages of 5 ounces, 6 ounces, 7 ounces, 8 ounces, 10 ounces, 12 ounces, 14 ounces, and 16 ounces: Provided, That snuff may, at the option of the manufacturer, be put up in bladders and in jars containing not exceeding 20 pounds.

"All cavendish, plug, and twist tobacco, in wooden packages not exceeding 200 pounds net weight.

"And every such wooden package shall have printed or marked thereon the manufacturer's name and place of manufacture, the registered number of the manufactory, and the gross weight, the tare, and the net weight of the tobacco in each package: Provided, That these limitations and descriptions of packages shall not apply to tobacco and snuff transported in bond for exportation and actually exported: And provided further, That perique tobacco, snuff flour, fine-cut shorts, the refuse of fine-cut chewing tobacco, refuse scraps, clippings, cuttings, and sweepings of tobacco, may be sold in bulk as material, and without the payment of tax, by one manufacturer directly to another manufacturer, or for export, under such restrictions, rules, and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe: And provided further, That wood, metal, paper, or other materials may be used separately or in combination for packing tobacco, snuff, and cigars, under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may establish."

SEC. 702. That upon all the articles enumerated in section 700 or 701, which were manufactured or imported, and removed from factory or customhouse on or prior to the date of the passage of this act, and upon which the tax imposed by existing law has been paid, and which are, on the day after the passage of this act, held by any person and intended for sale, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a floor tax equal to the difference between (a) the tax imposed by this act upon such articles according to the class in which they are placed by this title, and (b) the tax imposed upon such articles by existing law other than section 403 of the revenue act of 1917.

In the case of any person making due return as required by the commissioner of the stock of all such articles on such date so held by him, the tax imposed by this section shall apply only to the excess of manufactured tobacco and snuff over 50 pounds, to the excess of cigars over 1,000, and to the excess of cigarettes over 3,000.

SEC. 703. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in lieu of the taxes imposed by section 404 of the revenue act of 1917, upon cigarette paper made up into packages, books, sets, or tubes, made up in or imported into the United States and hereafter sold by the manufacturer or importer to any person (other than to a manufacturer of cigarettes for use by him in the manufacture of cigarettes) the following taxes, to be paid by the manufacturer or importer: On each package, book, or set, containing more than 25 but not more than 50 papers, one-half cent; containing more than 50 but not more than 100 papers, 1 cent; containing more than 100 papers, one-half cent for each 50 papers or fractional part thereof; and upon tubes, 1 cent for each 50 tubes or fractional part thereof.

Every manufacturer of cigarettes purchasing any cigarette paper made up into tubes (a) shall give bond in an amount and with sureties satisfactory to the commissioner that he will use such tubes in the manufacture of cigarettes or pay thereon a tax equivalent to the tax imposed by this section, and (b) shall keep such records and render under oath such returns as the commissioner finds necessary to show the disposition of all tubes purchased or imported by such manufacturer of cigarettes.

SEC. 704. That section 35 of the act of August 5, 1909, be, and is hereby, repealed, to take effect April 1, 1919.

That section 3360 of the Revised Statutes be, and is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3360. (a) Every dealer in leaf tobacco shall file with the collector of the district in which his business is carried on, a statement in duplicate, subscribed under oath, setting forth the place, and if in a city, the street and number of the street, where his business is to be carried on, and the exact location of each place where leaf tobacco is held by him on storage, and, whenever he adds to or discontinues any of his leaf tobacco storage places, he shall give immediate notice to the collector of the district in which he is registered.

"Every such dealer shall give a bond with surety, satisfactory to, and to be approved by, the collector of the district, in such penal sum as the collector may require, not less than $500; and a new bond may be required in the discretion of the collector or under instructions of the commissioner.

"Every such dealer shall be assigned a number by the collector of the district, which number shall appear in every inventory, invoice, and report rendered by the dealer, who shall also obtain certificates from the collector of the district setting forth the place where his business is carried on and the places designated by the dealer as the places of storage of his tobacco, which certificates shall be posted conspicuously within the dealer's registered place of business, and within each designated place of storage.

"(b) Every dealer in leaf tobacco shall make and deliver to the collector of the district a true inventory of the quantity of the different kinds of tobacco held or owned, and where stored by him, on the 1st day of January of each year, or at the time of commencing and at the time of concluding business, if before or after the 1st day of January, such inventory to be made under oath and rendered in such form as may be prescribed by the commissioner.

"Every dealer in leaf tobacco shall render such invoices and keep such records as shall be prescribed by the commissioner, and shall enter therein, day by day, and upon the same day on which the circumstance, thing, or act to be recorded is done or occurs, an accurate account of the number of hogsheads, tierces, cases, and bales, and quantity of leaf tobacco contained therein, purchased or received by him, on assignment, consignment, for storage, by transfer, or otherwise, and of whom purchased or received, and the number of hogsheads, tierces, cases, and bales, and the quantity of leaf tobacco contained therein, sold by him, with the name and residence in each instance of the person to whom sold, and if shipped, to whom shipped, and to what district; such records shall be kept at his place of business at all times and preserved for a period of two years, and the same shall be open at all hours for the inspection of any internal-revenue officer or agent.

"Every dealer in leaf tobacco on or before the 10th day of each month, shall furnish to the collector of the district a true and complete report of all purchases, receipts, sales, and shipments of leaf tobacco made by him during the month next preceding, which report shall be verified and rendered in such form as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe.

"(c) Sales or shipments of leaf tobacco by a dealer in leaf tobacco shall be in quantities of not less than a hogshead, tierce, case, or bale, except loose leaf tobacco comprising the breaks on warehouse floors, and except to a duly registered manufacturer of cigars for use in his own manufactory exclusively.

"Dealers in leaf tobacco shall make shipments of leaf tobacco only to other dealers in leaf tobacco, to registered manufacturers of tobacco, snuff, cigars or cigarettes, or for export.

"(d) Upon all leaf tobacco sold, removed, or shipped by any dealer in leaf tobacco in violation of the provisions of subdivision (c), or in respect to which no report has been made by such dealer in accordance with the provisions of subdivision (b), there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a tax equal to the tax then in force upon manufactured tobacco, such tax to be assessed and collected in the same manner as the tax on manufactured tobacco.

"(e) Every dealer in leaf tobacco

"(1) who neglects or refuses to furnish the statement, to give bond, to keep books, to file inventory, or to render the invoices, returns, or reports required by the commissioner, or to notify the collector of the district of additions to his places of storage; or

"(2) who ships or delivers leaf tobacco, except as herein provided; or

"(3) who fraudulently omits to account for tobacco purchased, received, sold, or shipped; shall be fined not less than $100 or more than $500, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

"(f) For the purposes of this section a farmer or grower of tobacco shall not be regarded as a dealer in leaf tobacco in respect to the leaf tobacco produced by him."

TITLE VIII.—TAX ON ADMISSIONS AND DUES.

SEC. 800. (a) That from and after ————, ——, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid, in lieu of the taxes imposed by section 700 of the revenue act of 1917—

(1) A tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission to any place on or after such date, including admission by season ticket or subscription, to be paid by the person paying for such admission;

(2) In the case of persons (except bona fide employees, municipal officers on official business, persons in the military or naval forces of the United States when in uniform, and children under 12 years of age) admitted free or at reduced rates to any place at a time when and under circumstances under which an admission charge is made to other persons, a tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the price so charged to such other persons for the same or similar accommodations, to be paid by the person so admitted;

(3) Upon tickets or cards of admission to theaters, operas, and other places of amusement, sold at news stands, hotels, and places other than the ticket offices of such theaters, operas, or other places of amusement, at not to exceed 50 cents in excess of the sum of the established price therefor at such ticket offices plus the amount of any tax imposed under paragraph (1), a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the amount of such excess; and if sold for more than 50 cents in excess of the sum of such established price plus the amount of any tax imposed under paragraph (1), a tax equivalent to 50 per cent of the whole amount of such excess, such taxes to be returned and paid, in the manner provided in section 903, by the person selling such tickets;

(4) A tax equivalent to 50 per cent of the amount for which the proprietors, managers, or employees of any opera house, theater, or other place of amusement sell or dispose of tickets or cards of admission in excess of the regular or established price or charge therefor, such tax to be returned and paid, in the manner provided in section 903, by the person selling such tickets;

(5) In the case of persons having the permanent use of boxes or seats in an opera house or any place of amusement or a lease for the use of such box or seat in such opera house or place of amusement (in lieu of the tax imposed by paragraph (1)), a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the amount for which a similar box or seat is sold for each performance or exhibition at which the box or seat is used or reserved by or for the lessee or holder, such tax to be paid by the lessee or holder; and

(6) A tax of 1 cent for each 10 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for admission to any public performance for profit at any roof garden, cabaret, or other similar entertainment, to which the charge for admission is wholly or in part included in the price paid for refreshment, service, or merchandise; the amount paid for such admission to be deemed to be 20 per cent of the amount paid for refreshment, service, and merchandise; such tax to be paid by the person paying for such refreshment, service, or merchandise.

(b) No tax shall be levied under this title in respect to any admissions all the proceeds of which inure exclusively to the benefit of religious, educational, or charitable institutions, societies, or organizations, or organizations conducted for the sole purpose of maintaining symphony orchestras and receiving substantial support from voluntary contributions, or exclusively to the benefit of persons in the military or naval forces of the United States, or admissions to agricultural fairs none of the profits of which are distributed to stockholders or members of the association conducting the same.

(c) The term "admission" as used in this title includes seats and tables, reserved or otherwise, and other similar accommodations, and the charges made therefor.

(d) The price (exclusive of the tax to be paid by the person paying for admission) at which every admission ticket or card is sold shall be conspicuously and indelibly printed, stamped, or written on the face or back thereof, together with the name of the vendor if sold other than at the ticket office of the theater, opera, or other place of amusement. Whoever sells an admission ticket or card on which the name of the vendor and price is not so printed, stamped, or written, or at a price in excess of the price so printed, stamped, or written thereon, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $100.

SEC. 801. That from and after ——— there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid, in lieu of the taxes imposed by section 701 of the revenue act of 1917, a tax equivalent to 10 per cent of any amount paid on or after such date, for any period after such date, (a) as dues or membership fees (where the dues or fees of an active resident annual member are in excess of $10 per year) to any social, athletic, or sporting club or organization, or (b) as initiation fees to such a club or organization, if such fees amount to more than $10, or if the dues or membership fees (not including initiation fees) of an active resident annual member are in excess of $10 per year; such taxes to be paid by the person paying such dues or fees: Provided, That there shall be exempted from the provisions of this section all amounts paid as dues or fees to a fraternal society, order, or association, operating under the lodge system. In the case of life memberships a life member shall pay annually, at the time for the payment of dues by active resident annual members, a tax equivalent to the tax upon the amount paid by such a member, but shall pay no tax upon the amount paid for life membership.

SEC. 802. That every person (a) receiving any payments for such admission, dues, or fees shall collect the amount of the tax imposed by section 800 or 801 from the person making such payments, or (b) admitting any person free to any place for admission to which a charge is made, shall collect the amount of the tax imposed by section 800 from the person so admitted. Every club or organization having life members shall collect from such members the amount of the tax imposed by section 801. In all the above cases returns and payments of the amount so collected shall be made at the same time and in the same manner as provided in section 502.

TITLE IX.—EXCISE TAXES.

SEC. 900. That there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid, upon the following articles sold or leased by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, a tax equivalent to the following percentages of the price for which so sold or leased—

(1) Automobiles, motorcycles, automobile trucks, automobile wagons, automobile trailers or tractors, 5 per cent;

(2) Tires, inner tubes, parts, or accessories, for any of the articles enumerated in subdivision (1), sold to any person other than a manufacturer or producer of any of the articles enumerated in subdivision (1), 5 per cent;

(3) Pianos, organs (other than pipe organs), piano players, graphophones, phonographs, talking machines, music boxes, and records used in connection with any musical instrument, piano player, graphophone, phonograph, or talking machine, 5 per cent;

(4) Tennis rackets, nets, racket covers and presses, skates, snowshoes, skis, toboggans, canoes, paddles and cushions, polo mallets, baseball bats, gloves, masks, protectors, shoes and uniforms, football helmets, harness, and goals, basket-ball goals and uniforms, golf bags and clubs, lacrosse sticks, balls of all kinds, including baseballs, footballs, tennis, golf, lacrosse, billiard and pool balls, fishing rods and reels, billiard and pool tables, chess and checker boards and pieces, dice, games and parts of games (except playing cards and children's toys and games), and all similar articles commonly or commercially known as sporting goods, 10 per cent;

(5) Chewing gum or substitutes therefor, 3 per cent;

(6) Cameras, 10 per cent;

(7) Photographic films and plates, other than moving-picture films, 5 per cent;

(8) Candy, 5 per cent;

(9) Firearms, shells, and cartridges, except those sold for the use of the United States, any State, Territory, or possession of the United States, any political subdivision thereof, the District of Columbia, or any foreign country while engaged against the German Government in the present war, 10 per cent;

(10) Hunting and bowie knives, 10 per cent;

(11) Dirk knives, daggers, sword canes, stilettos, and brass or metallic knuckles, 100 per cent;

(12) Portable electric fans, 5 per cent;

(13) Thermos and thermostatic bottles, carafes, jugs, or other thermostatic containers, 5 per cent;

(14) Cigar or cigarette holders and pipes, composed wholly or in part of meerschaum or amber, humidors, and smoking stands, 10 per cent;

(15) Automatic slot-device weighing or vending machines, 5 per cent; if the manufacturer, producer, or importer of any such machine operates it for profit he shall pay a tax in respect to each such machine put into operation equivalent to 5 per cent of its fair market value;

(16) Liveries and livery boots and hats, 10 per cent;

(17) Hunting and shooting garments and riding habits, 10 per cent;

(18) Articles made out of any fur, or articles of which fur is the component material of chief value, 10 per cent;

(19) Yachts and motor boats; and pleasure boats and canoes if sold for more than $15, 10 per cent; and

(20) Toilet soaps and toilet-soap powders, 3 per cent.

If any manufacturer, producer, or importer of any of the articles enumerated in this section customarily sells such articles both at wholesale and at retail, the tax in the case of any article sold by him at retail shall be computed on the price for which like articles are sold by him at wholesale.

The taxes imposed by this section shall, in the case of any article in respect to which a corresponding tax is imposed by section 600 of the revenue act of 1916, be in lieu of such tax.

SEC. 901. That if any person manufactures, produces, or imports any article enumerated in section 900, or leases or licenses for exhibition any positive motion-picture film containing a picture ready for projection, and, whether through any agreement, arrangement, understanding, or otherwise, sells, leases, or licenses at less than the fair market price obtainable therefor, either (a) in such manner as directly or indirectly to benefit such person or any person directly or indirectly interested in the business of such person, or (b) with intent to cause such benefit, the amount for which such article is sold, leased, or licensed shall be taken to be the amount which would have been received from the sale, lease, or license of such article if sold, leased, or licensed at the fair market price.

SEC. 902. That there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid upon sculpture, paintings, statuary, art porcelains, and bronzes, sold by any person other than the artist, and upon antique furniture sold by any person, a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the price for which so sold. This section shall not apply to the sale of any such article to an educational institution or art museum.

SEC. 903. That every person liable for any tax imposed by section 900, 902, or 905 shall make monthly returns under oath in duplicate and pay the taxes imposed by such sections to the collector for the district in which is located the principal place of business. Such returns shall contain such information and be made at such times and in such manner as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations prescribe.

The tax shall, without assessment by the commissioner or notice from the collector, be due and payable to the collector at the time so fixed for filing the return. If the tax is not paid when due there shall be added as part of the tax a penalty of 5 per cent, together with interest at the rate of 1 per cent for each full month, from the time when the tax became due.

SEC. 905. (a) That on and after November 1, 1918, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid a tax equivalent to 20 per cent of so much of the amount paid for any of the following articles as is in excess of the price hereinafter specified as to each such article, when such article is sold on or after such date for consumption or use—

(1) Carpets and rugs, including fiber, except imported and American rugs made principally of wool, on the amount in excess of $5 per square yard;

(2) Picture frames, on the amount in excess of $10 each;

(3) Trunks, on the amount in excess of $50 each;

(4) Valises, traveling bags, suit cases, hat boxes used by travelers, and fitted toilet cases, on the amount in excess of $25 each;

(5) Purses, pocketbooks, shopping and hand bags, on the amount in excess of $7.50 each;

(6) Portable lighting fixtures, including lamps of all kinds and lamp shades, on the amount in excess of $25 each;

(7) Umbrellas, parasols, and sun shades, on the amount in excess of $4 each;

(8) Fans, on the amount in excess of $1 each;

(9) House or smoking coats or jackets, and bath or lounging robes, on the amount in excess of $7.50 each;

(10) Men's waistcoats, sold separately from suits, on the amount in excess of $5 each;

(11) Men's and boys' suits or overcoats, not including uniforms of officers in the military or naval forces of the United States, on the amount in excess of $50 each;

(12) Women's and misses' suits, cloaks, and coats, on the amount in excess of $50 each, or, when made up by a tailor or seamstress, on the amount in excess of $50 in value each;

(13) Women's and misses' dresses, on the amount in excess of $40 each, or, when made up by a tailor or seamstress, on the amount in excess of $40 in value each;

(14) Women's and misses' hats, bonnets, and hoods, on the amount in excess of $15 each;

(15) Men's and boys' hats, on the amount in excess of $5 each;

(16) Men's and boys' caps, on the amount in excess of $2 each;

(17) Men's, women's, misses', and boys' boots, shoes, pumps, and slippers, not including shoes or appliances made to order for any person having a crippled or deformed foot or ankle, on the amount in excess of $10 per pair.

(18) Men's and boys' neckties and neckwear, on the amount in excess of $2 each;

(19) Men's and boys' silk stockings or hose, on the amount in excess of $1 per pair;

(20) Women's and misses' silk stockings or hose, on the amount in excess of $2 per pair;

(21) Men's shirts, on the amount in excess of $3 each;

(22) Men's, women's, misses', and boys' pajamas, nightgowns, and underwear, on the amount in excess of $5 each; and

(23) Kimonos, petticoats, and waists, on the amount in excess of $15 each.

(b) The tax imposed by this section shall not apply to any article enumerated in paragraphs (2) to (8), both inclusive, of subdivision (a), if such article is made of, or ornamented, mounted, or fitted with, precious metals or imitations thereof or ivory, or to any article enumerated in subdivision (20) or (21) of section 900.

(c) The taxes imposed by this section shall be paid by the purchaser to the vendor at the time of the sale and shall be collected, returned, and paid to the United States by such vendor in the same manner as provided in section 502. As used in this subdivision the term "vendor" includes a tailor or dressmaker making up women's or misses' suits, cloaks, coats, or dresses.

SEC. 906. That on and after ————, ——, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid (in lieu of the tax imposed by subdivision (e) of section 600 of the revenue act of 1917) upon all articles commonly or commercially known as jewelry, whether real or imitation; pearls, precious and semiprecious stones, and imitations thereof; articles made of, or ornamented, mounted, or fitted with, precious metals or imitations thereof or ivory (not including surgical instruments); watches; clocks; opera glasses; lorgnettes; marine glasses; field glasses; and binoculars; upon any of the above when sold by a dealer for consumption or use, a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the price for which so sold.

Every person selling any of the articles enumerated in this section shall make returns under oath in duplicate (monthly or quarterly, as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe) and pay the taxes imposed in respect to such articles by this section to the collector for the district in which is located the principal place of business. Such returns shall contain such information and be made at such times and in such manner as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations prescribe.

The tax shall, without assessment by the commissioner or notice from the collector, be due and payable to the collector at the time so fixed for filing the return. If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax a penalty of 5 per cent, together with interest at the rate of 1 per cent for each full month from the time when the tax became due.

SEC. 907. That on and after the 1st day of ————, 1919, any person engaged in the business of leasing or licensing for exhibition positive motion-picture films containing pictures ready for projection shall pay monthly an excise tax in respect to carrying on such business equal to 5 per cent of the total rentals earned from each such lease or license during the preceding month. If a person owning such a film exhibits it for profit he shall pay a tax equivalent to 5 per cent of the fair rental or license value of such film at the time and place where and for the period during which exhibited. If any such person has, prior to December 6, 1918, made a bona fide contract with any person for the lease or licensing, after the tax imposed by this section takes effect, of such a film for exhibition for profit, and if such contract does not permit the adding of the whole of the tax imposed by this section to the amount to be paid under such contract, then the lessee or licensee shall, in lieu of the lessor or licensor, pay so much of such tax as is not so permitted to be added to the contract price. The tax imposed by this section shall be in lieu of the tax imposed by subdivisions (c) and (d) of section 600 of the revenue act of 1917.

SEC. 908. (a) That on and after ————, ——, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid (in lieu of the taxes imposed by subdivisions (g) and (h) of section 600 of the revenue act of 1917) a tax of 1 cent for each 25 cents or fraction thereof of the amount paid for any of the following articles when sold by a dealer on or after such date for consumption or use:

(1) Perfumes, essences, extracts, toilet waters, cosmetics, petroleum jellies, hair oils, pomades, hair dressings, hair restoratives, hair dyes, tooth and mouth washes, dentifrices, tooth pastes, aromatic cachous, toilet powders (other than soap powders), or any similar substance, article, or preparation by whatsoever name known or distinguished, any of the above which are used or applied or intended to be used or applied for toilet purposes;

(2) Pills, tablets, powders, tinctures, troches or lozenges, sirups, medicinal cordials or bitters, anodynes, tonics, plasters, liniments, salves, ointments, pastes, drops, waters (except those taxed under section 628 of this act), essences, spirits, oils, and other medicinal preparations, compounds, or compositions (not including serums and antitoxins), upon the amount paid for any of the above as to which the manufacturer or producer claims to have any private formula, secret, or occult art for making or preparing the same, or has or claims to have any exclusive right or title to the making or preparing the same, or which are prepared, uttered, vended, or exposed for sale under any letters patent, or trade-mark, or which (if prepared by any formula, published or unpublished) are held out or recommended to the public by the makers, vendors, or proprietors thereof as proprietary medicines or medicinal proprietary articles or preparations, or as remedies or specifics for any disease, diseases, or affection whatever affecting the human or animal body: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to the sale of medicinal preparations which are not advertised to the general lay public.

(b) The taxes imposed by this section shall be collected by whichever of the following methods the commissioner may deem expedient: (1) by stamp affixed to such article by the vendor, the cost of which shall be reimbursed to the vendor by the purchaser; or (2) by payment to the vendor by the purchaser at the time of the sale, the taxes so collected being returned and paid to the United States by such vendor in the same manner as provided in section 502.

SEC. 909. That under such rules and regulations as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe, the tax imposed under the provisions of this title shall ont apply in respect to articles sold or released for export and in due course so exported. Under such rules and regulations the amount of any internal-revenue tax erroneously or illegally collected in respect to exported articles may be refunded to the exporter of the article, instead of to the manufacturer, if the manufacturer waives any claim for the amount so to be refunded.

TITLE X.—SPECIAL TAXES.

SEC. 1000. (a) That on and after July 1, 1918, in lieu of the tax imposed by the first subdivision of section 407 of the revenue act of 1916—

(1) Every domestic corporation shall pay annually a special excise tax with respect to carrying on or doing business, equivalent to $1 for each $1,000 of the excess over $5,000 of the amount of its net assets shown by its books as of the close of the preceding annual period used by the corporation for purposes of making its income-tax return; but if the corporation made no such return then of the excess over $5,000 of the amount of its net assets shown by its books as of the 30th day of June preceding;

(2) Every foreign corporation shall pay annually a special excise tax with respect to carrying on or doing business in the United States, equivalent to $1 for each $1,000 of the average amount of capital employed in the transaction of its business in the United States during the preceding year ending June 30.

(b) The taxes imposed by this section shall not apply in any year to any corporation which was not engaged in business (or, in the case of a foreign corporation, not engaged in business in the United States) during the preceding year ending June 30, nor to any corporation enumerated in section 231.

(c) Section 257 shall apply to all returns filed with the commissioner for purposes of the tax imposed by this section.

SEC. 1001. That on and after January 1, 1919, there shall be levied, collected, and paid annually the following special taxes—

(1) Brokers shall pay $40. Every person whose business it is to negotiate purchases or sales of stocks, bonds, exchange, bullion, coined money, bank notes, promissoy notes, other securities, produce or merchandise, for others, shall be regarded as a broker. If a broker is a member of a stock exchange, or if he is a member of any produce exchange, board of trade, or similar organization, where produce or merchandise is sold, he shall pay an additional amount as follows: If the average value, during the preceding year ending June 30, of a seat or membership in such exchange or organization was $2,000 or more but not more than $5,000, $100; if such value was more than $5,000, $150.

(2) Pawnbrokers shall pay $100. Every person whose business or occupation it is to take or receive, by way of pledge, pawn, or exchange, any goods, wares, or merchandise, or any kind of personal property whatever, as security for the repayment of money loaned thereon, shall be regarded as a pawnbroker. If the gross receipts of such pawnbroker for the preceding year ending June 30 were $2,000 or more but not more than $5,000, he shall pay $100 additional; if such gross receipts were more than $5,000 he shall pay $150 additional.

(3) Ship brokers shall pay $40. Every person whose business it is as a broker to negotiate freights and other business for the owners of vessels, or for the shippers or consignors or consignees of freight carried by vessels, shall be regarded as a ship broker.

(4) Customhouse brokers shall pay $40. Every person whose occupation it is, as the agent of others, to arrange entrise and other customhouse papers, or transact business at any port of entry relating to the importation of exportation of goods, wares, or merchandise, shall be regarded as a customhouse broker.

(5) Proprietors of theaters, museums, and concert halls, where a charge for admission is made, having a seating capacity of not more than 250, shall pay $50; having a seating capacity of more than 250 and not exceeding 500, shall pay $100; having a seating capacity exceeding 500 and not exceeding 800, shall pay $150; having a seating capacity of more than 800, shall pay $200. Every edifice used for the purpose of dramatic or operatic or other representations, plays, or performances, for admission to which entrance money is received, not including halls or armories rented or used occasionally for concerts or theatrical representations, and not including edifices owned by religious, educational or charitable institutions, societies or organizations where all the proceeds from admissions inure exclusively to the benefit of such institutions, societies, or organizations or exclusively to the benefit of persons in the military or naval forces of the United States, shall be regarded as a theater: Provided, That in cities, towns, or villages of 5,000 inhabitants or less the amount of such payment shall be one-half of that above stated: Provided further, That whenever any such edifice is under lease at the time the tax is due the tax shall be paid by the lessee, unless otherwise stipulated between the parties to the lease.

(6) The proprietor or proprietors of circuses shall pay $100. Every building, space, tent, or area where feats of horsemanship or acrobatic sports or theatrical performances not otherwise provided for in this section are exhibited shall be regarded as a circus: Provided, That no special tax paid in one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia shall exempt exhibitions from the tax in another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, and but one special tax shall be imposed for exhibitions within any one State, Territory, or District.

(7) Proprietors or agents of all other public exhibitions or shows for money not enumerated in this section shall pay $15: Provided, That a special tax paid in one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia shall not exempt exhibitions from the tax in another State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, and but one special tax shall be required for exhibitions within any one State, Territory, or the District of Columbia: Provided further, That this paragraph shall not apply to Chautauquas, lecture lyceums, agricultural or industrial fairs, or exhibitions held under the auspices of religious or charitable associations: Provided further, That an aggregation of entertainments, known as a street fair, shall not pay a larger tax than $100 in any State, Territory, or in the District of Columbia.

(8) Proprietors of bowling alleys and billiard rooms shall pay $10 for each alley or table. Every building or place where bowls are thrown or where games of billiards or pool are played, except in private homes, shall be regarded as a bowling alley or a billiard room, respectively.

(9) Proprietors of shooting galleries shall pay $20. Every building, space, tent, or area where a charge is made for the discharge of firearms at any form of target shall be regarded as a shooting gallery.

(10) Proprietors of riding academies shall pay $100. Every building, space, tent, or area where a charge is made for instruction in horsemanship or for facilities for the practice of horsemanship shall be regarded as a riding academy.

(11) Persons carrying on the business of operating or renting passenger automobiles for hire shall pay $10 for each such automobile having a seating capacity of more than two and not more than seven and $20 for each such automobile having a seating capacity of more than seven.

The taxes imposed by this section shall, in the case of persons upon whom a corresponding tax is imposed by section 407 of the revenue act of 1916, be in lieu of such tax.

SEC. 1002. That on and after January 1, 1919, there shall be levied, collected, and paid annually, in lieu of the taxes imposed by section 408 of the revenue act of 1916, the following special taxes, the amount of such taxes to be computed on the basis of the sales for the preceding year ending June 30—

Manufacturers of tobacco whose annual sales do not exceed 50,000 pounds shall each pay $6;

Manufacturers of tobacco whose annual sales exceed 50,000 and do not exceed 100,000 pounds shall each pay $12;

Manufacturers of tobacco whose annual sales exceed 100,000 and do not exceed 200,000 pounds shall each pay $24;

Manufacturers of tobacco whose annual sales exceed 200,000 pounds shall each pay $24, and at the rate of 16 cents per thousand pounds, or fraction thereof, in respect to the excess over 200,000 pounds;

Manufacturers of cigars whose annual sales do not exceed 50,000 cigars shall each pay $4;

Manufacturers of cigars whose annual sales exceed 50,000 and do not exceed 100,000 cigars shall each pay $6;

Manufacturers of cigars whose annual sales exceed 100,000 and do not exceed 200,000 cigars shall each pay $12;

Manufacturers of cigars whose annual sales exceed 200,000 and do not exceed 400,000 cigars shall each pay $24;

Manufacturers of cigars whose annual sales exceed 400,000 cigars shall each pay $24, and at the rate of 10 cents per 1,000 cigars, or fraction thereof, in respect to the excess over 400,000 cigars.

Manufacturers of cigarettes, including small cigars weighing not more than 3 pounds per 1,000, shall each pay at the rate of 6 cents for every 10,000 cigarettes, or fraction thereof.

In arriving at the amount of special tax to be paid under this section, and in the levy and collection of such tax, each person engaged in the manufacture of more than one of the classes of articles specified in this section shall be considered and deemed a manufacturer of each class separately.

SEC. 1003. That 60 days after the passage of this act, and thereafter on July 1 in each year, and also at the time of the original purchase of a new boat by a user, if on any other day than July 1, there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid in lieu of the tax imposed by section 603 of the revenue act of 1917 upon the use of yachts, pleasure boats, power boats, and sailing boats, of over 5 gross tons, and motor boats with fixed engines, not used exclusively for trade, fishing, or national defense, or not built according to plans and specifications approved by the Navy Department, a special excise tax to be based on each yacht or boat, at rates as follows: Yachts, pleasure boats, power boats, motor boats with fixed engines, and sailing boats, of over 5 gross tons, length not over 50 feet, $1 for each foot, length over 50 feet and not over 400 feet, $2 for each foot; length over 100 feet, $4 for each foot; motor boats of not over 5 gross tons with fixed engines, $10.

In determining the length of such yachts, pleasure boats, power boats, motor boats with fixed engines, and sailing boats, the measurement of over-all length shall govern.

In the case of a tax imposed at the time of the original purchase of a new boat on any other date than July 1, and in the case of the tax taking effect 60 days after the passage of this act, the amount to be paid shall be the same number of twelfths of the amount of the tax as the number of calendar months (including the month of sale, or the month in which is included the 61st day after the passage of this act, as the case may be) remaining prior to the following July 1.

If the tax imposed by section 603 of the revenue act of 1917, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, has been paid in respect to the use of any boat, the amount so paid shall under such regulations as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe, be credited upon the first tax due under this section in respect to the use of such boat, or be refunded to the person paying the first tax imposed by this section in respect to the use of such boat.

SEC. 1004. That if the tax imposed by section 407 or 408 of the revenue act of 1916, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, has been paid by any person subject to the corresponding tax imposed by this title, collectors may issue a receipt in lieu of special tax stamp for the amount by which the tax under this title is in excess of that paid or payable and evidenced by stamp under the revenue act of 1916. Such receipt shall be posted as in the case of the special tax stamp, as provided by law, and with it, within the place of business of the taxpayer.

If the corresponding tax imposed by section 407 of the revenue act of 1916 was not payable by stamp, the amount paid under such section for any period for which a tax is also imposed by this title may be credited against the tax imposed by this title.

SEC. 1005. That any person who carries on any business or occupation for which a special tax is imposed by sections 1000, 1001, or 1002, without having paid the special tax therein provided, shall, besides being liable for the payment of such special tax, be subject to a penalty of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 1006. That section 1 of the act of Congress approved December 17, 1914, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That on or before July 1 of each year every person who imports, manufactures, produces, compounds, sells, deals in, dispenses, or gives away opium or coca leaves, or any compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, or preparation thereof, shall register with the collector of internal revenue of the district his name or style, place of business and place or places where such business is to be carried on, and pay the special taxes hereinafter provided;

"Every person who on January 1, 1919, is engaged in any of the activities above enumerated, or who between such date and the passage of this act first engages in any of such activities, shall within 30 days after the passage of this act make like registration, and shall pay the proportionate part of the tax for the period ending June 30, 1919;

"Every person who first engages in any of such activities after the passage of this act shall immediately make like registration and pay the proportionate part of the tax for the period ending on the following June 30;

"Importers, manufacturers, producers, or compounders, $24 per annum; wholesale dealers, $12 per annum; retail dealers, $6 per annum; physicians, dentists, veterinary surgeons, and other practitioners lawfully entitled to distribute, dispense, give away, or administer any of the aforesaid drugs to patients upon whom they in the course of their professional practice are in attendance, shall pay $3 per annum.

"Every person who imports, manufactures, compounds, or otherwise produces for sale or distribution any of the aforesaid drugs shall be deemed to be an importer, manufacturer, or producer.

"Every person who sells or offers for sale any of said drugs in the original stamped packages, as hereinafter provided, shall be deemed a wholesale dealer.

"Every person who sells or dispenses from original stamped packages, as hereinafter provided, shall be deemed a retail dealer: Provided, That the office, or if none, the residence, of any person shall be considered for the purpose of this act his place of business; but no employee or any person who has registered and paid special tax as herein required, acting within the scope of his employment, shall be required to register and pay special tax provided by this section: Provided further, That officials of the United States, Territorial, District of Columbia, or insular possessions, State or municipal governments, who in the exercise of their official duties engage in any of the business herein described, shall not be required to register, nor pay special tax, nor stamp the aforesaid drugs as hereinafter prescribed, but their right to this exemption shall be evidenced in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may by regulations prescribe.

"It shall be unlawful for any person required to register under the provisions of this act to import, manufacture, produce, compound, sell, deal in, dispense, distribute, administer, or give away any of the aforesaid drugs without having registered and paid the special tax as imposed by this section.

"That the word 'person' as used in this act shall be construed to mean and include a partnership, association, company, or corporation, as well as a natural person; and all provisions of existing law relating to special taxes, as far as necessary, are hereby extended and made applicable to this section.

"That there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid upon opium, coca leaves, any compound, salt, derivative, or preparation thereof, produced in or imported into the United States, and sold, or removed for consumption or sale, an internal-revenue tax at the rate of 1 cent per ounce, and any fraction of an ounce in a package shall be taxed as an ounce, such tax to be paid by the importer, manufacturer, producer, or compounder thereof, and to be represented by appropriate stamps, to be provided by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and the stamps herein provided shall be so affixed to the bottle or other container as to securely seal the stopper, covering, or wrapper thereof.

"The tax imposed by this section shall be in addition to any import duty imposed on the aforesaid drugs.

"It shall be unlawful for any person to purchase, sell, dispense, or distribute any of the aforesaid drugs except in the original stamped package or from the original stamped package; and the absence of appropriate tax-paid stamps from any of the aforesaid drugs shall be prima facie evidence of a violation of this section by the person in whose possession same may be found; and the possession of any original stamped package containing any of the aforesaid drugs by any person who has not registered and paid special taxes as required by this section shall be prima facie evidence of liability to such special tax: Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to any person having in his or her possession any of the aforesaid drugs which have been obtained from a registered dealer in pursuance of a prescription, written for legitimate medical uses, issued by a physician, dentist, veterinary surgeon, or other practitioner registered under this act; and where the bottle or other container in which such drug may be put up by the dealer upon said prescription bears the name and registry number of the druggist, serial number of prescription, name and address of the patient, and name, address, and registry number of the person writing said prescription; or to the dispensing, or administration, or giving away of any of the aforesaid drugs to a patient by a registered physician, dentist, veterinary surgeon, or other practitioner in the course of his professional practice in personal attendance upon such patient, and where said drugs are dispensed or administered to the patient for legitimate medical purposes, and the record kept as required by this act of the drugs so dispensed, administered, distributed, or given away.

"And all the provisions of existing laws relating to the engraving, issuance, sale, accountability, cancellation, and destruction of tax-paid stamps provided for in the internal-revenue laws are, in so far as necessary, hereby extended and made to apply to stamps provided by this section.

"That all unstamped packages of the aforesaid drugs found in the possession of any person, except as herein provided, shall be subject to seizure and forfeiture, and all the provisions of existing internal-revenue laws relating to searches, seizures, and forfeitures of unstamped articles are hereby extended to and made to apply to the articles taxed under this act and the persons upon whom these taxes are imposed.

"Importers, manufacturers, and wholesale dealers shall keep such books and records and render such monthly returns in relation to the transactions in the aforesaid drugs as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may by regulations require.

"The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall make all needful rules and regulations for carrying the provisions of this act into effect."

SEC. 1007. That all opium, its salts, derivatives, and compounds, and coca leaves, salts, derivatives, and compounds thereof, which may now be under seizure or which may hereafter be seized by the United States Government from any person or persons charged with any violation of the act of October 1, 1890, as amended by the acts of March 3, 1897, February 9, 1909, and January 17, 1914, or the act of December 17, 1914, shall upon conviction of the person or persons from whom seized be confiscated by and forfeited to the United States; and the Secretary is hereby authorized to deliver for medical or scientific purposes to any department, bureau, or other agency of the United States Government, upon proper application therefor under such regulation as may be prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, any of the drugs so seized, confiscated, and forfeited to the United States.

The provisions of this section shall also apply to any of the aforesaid drugs seized or coming into the possession of the United States in the enforcement of any of the above-mentioned acts where the owner or owners thereof are unknown. None of the aforesaid drugs coming into possession of the United States under the operation of said acts, or the provisions of this section, shall be destroyed without certification by a committee appointed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, that they are of no value for medical or scientific purposes.

SEC. 1008. That the act approved October 22, 1914, entitled "An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes," and the joint resolution approved December 17, 1915, entitled "Joint resolution extending the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to increase the internal revenue, and for other purposes,' approved October 22, 1914, to December 31, 1916," are hereby repealed, except that the provisions of such act shall remain in force for the assessment and collection of all special taxes imposed by sections 3 and 4 thereof, or by such sections as extended by such joint resolution, for any year or part thereof ending prior to January 1, 1917, and of all other taxes imposed by such act, or by such act as so extended, accrued prior to September 8, 1916, and for the imposition and collection of all penalties or forfeitures which have accrued or may accrue in relation to any of such taxes.

TITLE XI.—STAMP TAXES.

SEC. 1100. That on and after ——— there shall be levied, collected, and paid, for and in respect of the several bonds, debentures, or certificates of stock and of indebtedness, and other documents, instruments, matters, and things mentioned and described in Schedule A of title, or for or in respect of the vellum, parchment, or paper upon which such instruments, matters, or things, or any of them, are written or printed, by any person who makes, signs, issues, sells, removes, consigns, or ships the same, or for whose use or benefit the same are made, signed, issued, sold, removed, consigned, or shipped, the several taxes specified in such schedule. The taxes imposed by this section shall, in the case of any article upon which a corresponding stamp tax is now imposed by law, be in lieu of such tax.

SEC. 1101. That there shall not be taxed under this title any bond, note, or other instrument issued by the United States or by any foreign government, or by any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or local subdivision thereof, or municipal or other corporation exercising the taxing power; or any bond of indemnity required to be filed by any person to secure payment of any pension, allowance, allotment, relief, or insurance by the United States; or stocks and bonds issued by cooperative building and loan associations which are organized and operated exclusively for the benefit of their members and make loans only to their shareholders, or by mutual ditch or irrigating companies.

SEC. 1102. That whoever—

(a) Makes, signs, issues, or accepts, or causes to be made, signed, issued, or accepted, any instrument, document, or paper of any kind or description whatsoever without the full amount of tax thereon being duly paid;

(b) Consigns or ships, or causes to be consigned or shipped, by parcel post any parcel, package, or article without the full amount of tax being duly paid;

(c) Manufactures or imports and sells, or offers for sale, or causes to be manufactured or imported and sold, or offered for sale, any playing cards, package, or other article without the full amount of tax being duly paid;

(d) Makes use of any adhesive stamp to denote any tax imposed by this title without canceling or obliterating such stamp as prescribed in section 1104;

Is guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not more than $100 for each offense.

SEC. 1103. That whoever—

(a) Fraudulently cuts, tears, or removes from any vellum, parchment, paper, instrument, writing, package, or article, upon which any tax is imposed by this title, any adhesive stamp or the impression of any stamp, die, plate, or other article provided, made, or used in pursuance of this title;

(b) Fraudulently uses, joins, fixes, or places to, with, or upon any vellum, parchment, paper, instrument, writing, package, or article, upon which any tax is imposed by this title, (1) any adhesive stamp, or the impression of any stamp, die, plate, or other article, which has been cut, torn, or removed from any other vellum, parchment, paper, instrument, writing, package, or article, upon which any tax is imposed by this title; or (2) any adhesive stamp or the impression of any stamp, die, plate, or other article of insufficient value; or (3) any forged or counterfeit stamp, or the impression of any forged or counterfeited stamp, die, plate, or other article;

(c) Willfully removes, or alters the cancellation, or defacing marks of, or otherwise prepares, any adhesive stamp, with intent to use, or cause the same to be used, after it has been already used, or knowingly or willfully buys, sells, offers for sale, or gives away, any such washed or restored stamp to any person for use, or knowingly uses the same;

(d) Knowingly and without lawful excuse (the burden of proof of such excuse being on the accused) has in possession any washed, restored, or altered stamp, which has been removed from any vellum, parchment, paper, instrument, writing, package, or article;

Is guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than five years, or both, and any such reused, canceled, or counterfeit stamp and the vellum, parchment, document, paper, package, or article upon which it is placed or impressed shall be forfeited to the United States.

SEC. 1104. That whenever an adhesive stamp is used for denoting any tax imposed by this title, except as hereinafter provided, the person using or affixing the same shall write or stamp or cause to be written or stamped thereupon the initials of his or its name and the date upon which the same is attached or used, so that the same may not again be used: Provided, That the commissioner may prescribe such other method for the cancellation of such stamps as he may deem expedient.

SEC. 1105. (a) That the commissioner shall cause to be prepared and distributed for the payment of the taxes prescribed in this title suitable stamps denoting the tax on the document, articles, or thing to which the same may be affixed, and shall prescribe such method for the affixing of said stamps in substitution for or in addition to the method provided in this title, as he may deem expedient.

(b) The commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, is authorized to procure any of the stamps provided for in this title by contract whenever such stamps can not be speedily prepared by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; but this authority shall expire on January 1, 1920, except as to imprinted stamps furnished under contract, authorized by the commissioner.

(c) All internal-revenue laws relating to the assessment and collection of taxes are hereby extended to and made a part of this title, so far as applicable, for the purpose of collecting stamp taxes omitted through mistake or fraud from any instrument, document, paper, writing, parcel, package, or article named herein.

SEC. 1106. That the commissioner shall furnish to the Postmaster General without prepayment a suitable quantity of adhesive stamps to be distributed to and kept on sale by the various postmasters in the United States. The Postmaster General may require each such postmaster to give additional or increased bond as postmaster for the value of the stamps so furnished, and each such postmaster shall deposit the receipts from the sale of such stamps to the credit of and render accounts to the Postmaster General at such times and in such form as he may by regulations prescribe. The Postmaster General shall at least once monthly transfer all collections from this source to the Treasury as internal-revenue collections.

SEC. 1107. That the collectors of the several districts shall furnish without prepayment to any assistant treasurer or designated depositary of the United States located in their respective collection districts a suitable quantity of adhesive stamps for sale. In such cases the collector may require a bond, with sufficient sureties, to an amount equal to the value of the adhesive stamps so furnished, conditioned for the faithful return, whenever so required, of all quantities or amounts undisposed of, and for the payment monthly of all quantities or amounts sold or not remaining on hand. The Secretary may from time to time make such regulations as he may find necessary to insure the safe-keeping or prevent the illegal use of all such adhesive stamps.

SCHEDULE A.—STAMP TAXES.

1. Bonds of indebtedness: On all bonds, debentures, or certificates of indetedness issued by any person, and all instruments, however termed, issued by any corporation with interest coupons or in registered form, known generally as corporate securities, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 5 cents: Provided, That every renewal of the foregoing shall be taxed as a new issue: Provided further, That when a bond conditioned for the repayment or payment of money is given in a penal sum greater than the debt secured, the tax shall be based upon the amount secured.

2. Bonds, indemnity and surety: On all bonds executed for indemnifying any person who shall have become bound or engaged as surety, and on all bonds executed for the due execution or performance of any contract, obligation, or requirement, or the duties of any office or position, and to account for money received by virtue thereof, and on all other bonds of any description, made, issued, or executed, not otherwise provided for in this schedule, except fidelity and surety bonds taxable under subdivision (b) of section 503, and bonds required in legal proceedings, 50 cents.

3. Capital stock, issue: On each original issue, whether on organization or reorganization, of certificates of stock, or of profits, or of interest in property or accumulations, by any corporation, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 5 cents: Provided, That where a certificate is issued without face value, the tax shall be 5 cents per share, unless the actual value is in excess of $100 per share, in which case the tax shall be 5 cents on each $100 of actual value or fraction thereof.

The stamps representing the tax imposed by this subdivision shall be attached to the stock book and not to the certificates issued.

4. Capital stock, sales or transfers: On all sales, or agreements to sell, or memoranda of sales or deliveries of, or transfers of legal title to shares or certificates of stock or of profits or of interest in property or accumulations in any corporation, or to rights to subscribe for or to receive such shares or certificates, whether made upon or shown by the books of the corporation, or by any assignment in blank, or by any delivery, or by any paper or agreement or memorandum or other evidence of transfer or sale, whether entitling the holder in any manner to the benefit of such stock, interest, or rights, or not, on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 2 cents, and where such shares are without par or face value, the tax shall be 2 cents on the transfer or sale or agreement to sell on each share, unless the actual value thereof is in excess of $100 per share, in which case the tax shall be 2 cents on each $100 of actual value or fraction thereof: Provided, That it is not intended by this title to impose a tax upon an agreement evidencing a deposit of certificates as collateral security for money loaned thereon, which certificates are not actually sold, nor upon the delivery or transfer for such purpose of certificates so deposited: Provided further, That the tax shall not be imposed upon deliveries or transfers to a broker for sale, nor upon deliveries or transfers by a broker to a customer for whom and upon whose order he has purchased same, but such deliveries or transfers shall be accompanied by a certificate setting forth the facts: Provided further, That in case of sale where the evidence of transfer is shown only by the books of the corporation the stamp shall be placed upon such books; and where the change of ownership is by transfer of the certificate the stamp shall be placed upon the certificate; and in cases of an agreement to sell or where the transfer is by delivery of the certificate assigned in blank there shall be made and delivered by the seller to the buyer a bill or memorandum of such sale, to which the stamp shall be affixed; and every bill or memorandum of sale or agreement to sell before mentioned shall show the date thereof, the name of the seller, the amount of the sale, and the matter or thing to which it refers. Any person liable to pay the tax as herein provided, or anyone who acts in the matter as agent or broker for such person, who makes any such sale, or who in pursuance of any such sale delivers any certificate or evidence of the sale of any stock, interest or right, or bill or memorandum thereof, as herein required, without having the proper stamps affixed thereto with intent to evade the foregoing provisions, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not exceeding $1,000, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

5. Produce, sales of, on exchange: Upon each sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell (not including so-called transferred or scratch sales), any products or merchandise at, or under the rules or usages of, any exchange, or board of trade, or other similar place, for future delivery, for each $100 in value of the merchandise covered by said sale or agreement of sale or agreement to sell, 2 cents, and for each additional $100 or fractional part thereof in excess of $100, 2 cents: Provided, That on every sale or agreement of sale or agreement to sell as aforesaid there shall be made and delivered by the seller to the buyer a bill, memorandum, agreement, or other evidence of such sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, to which there shall be affixed a lawful stamp or stamps in value equal to the amount of the tax on such sale: Provided further, That sellers of commodities described herein, having paid the tax provided by this subdivision, may transfer such contracts to a clearing-house corporation or association, and such transfer shall not be deemed to be a sale, or agreement of sale, or an agreement to sell within the provisions of this act, provided that such transfer shall not vest any beneficial interest in such clearing-house association but shall be made for the sole purpose of enabling such clearing-house association to adjust and balance the accounts of the members of such clearing-house association on their several contracts. Every such bill, memorandum, or other evidence of sale or agreement to sell shall show the date thereof, the name of the seller, the amount of the sale, and the matter or thing to which it refers; and any person liable to pay the tax as herein provided, or anyone who acts in the matter as agent or broker for such person, who makes any such sale or agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, or who, in pursuance of any such sale, agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, delivers any such products or merchandise without a bill, memorandum, or other evidence thereof as herein required, or who delivers such bill, memorandum, or other evidence of sale, or agreement to sell, without having the proper stamps affixed thereto, with intent to evade the foregoing provisions, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall pay a fine of not exceeding $1,000 or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

No bill, memorandum, agreement, or other evidence of such sale, of agreement of sale, or agreement to sell, in case of cash sales or products or merchandise for immediate or prompt delivery which in good faith are actually intended to be delivered shall be subject to this tax.

6. Drafts or checks (payable otherwise than at sight or on demand) upon their acceptance or delivery within the United States, whichever is prior, promissory notes, except bank notes issued for circulation, and for each renewal of the same, for a sum not exceeding $100, 2 cents; and for each additional $100 or fractional part thereof, 2 cents.

This subdivision shall not apply to a promissory note secured by the pledge of bonds or obligations of the United States issued after April 24, 1917, or secured by the pledge of a promissory note which itself is secured by the pledge of such bonds or obligations: Provided, That in either case the par value of such bonds or obligations shall be not less than the amount of such note.

7. Conveyances: Deed, instrument, or writing whereby any lands, tenements, or other realty sold shall be granted, assigned, transferred, or otherwise conveyed to, or vested in, the purchaser or purchasers, or any other person or persons, by his, her, or their direction, when the consideration or value of the interest or property conveyed, exclusive of the value of any lien or encumbrance remaining thereon at the time of sale, exceeds $100 and does not exceed $500, 50 cents; and for each additional $500 or fractional part thereof, 50 cents. This subdivision shall not apply to any instrument or writing given to secure a debt.

8. Entry of any goods, wares, or merchandise at any customhouse, either for consumption or warehousing, not exceeding $100 in value, 25 cents; exceeding $100 and not exceeding $500 in value, 50 cents; exceeding $500 in value, $1.

9. Entry for the withdrawal of any goods or merchandise from customs bonded warehouse, 50 cents.

10. Passage ticket, one way or round trip, for each passenger, sold or issued in the United States for passage by any vessel to a port or place not in the United States, Canada, or Mexico, if costing not exceeding $30, $1; costing more than $30 and not exceeding $60, $3; costing more than $60, $5. This subdivision shall not apply to passage tickets costing $10 or less.

11. Proxy for voting at any election for officers, or meeting for the transaction of business, of any corporation, except religious, educational, charitable, fraternal, or literary societies, or public cemeteries, 10 cents.

12. Power of attorney granting authority to do or perform some act for or in behalf of the grantor, which authority is not otherwise vested in the grantee, 25 cents. This subdivision shall not apply to any papers necessary to be used for the collection of claims from the United States or from any State for pensions, back pay, bounty, or for property lost in the military or naval service, or to powers of attorney required in bankruptcy cases.

13. Playing cards: Upon every pack of playing cards containing not more than 54 cards, manufactured or imported, and sold, or removed for consumption or sale, a tax of 8 cents per pack.

14. Parcel-post packages: Upon every parcel or package transported from one point in the United States to another by parcel post on which the postage amounts to 25 cents or more, a tax of 1 cent for each 25 cents or fractional part thereof charged for such transportation, to be paid by the consignor.

No such parcel or package shall be transported until a stamp or stamps representing the tax due shall have been affixed thereto.

15. On each policy of insurance, or certificate, binder, coveri note, memorandum, cablegram, letter, or other instrument by whatever name called whereby insurance is made or renewed upon property within the United States (including rents and profits) against peril by sea or on inland waters or in transit on land (including transshipments and storage at termini or way points) or by fire, lightning, tornado, windstorm, bombardment, invasion, insurrection, or riot, issued to or for or in the name of a domestic corporation or partnership or an individual resident of the United States by any foreign corporation or partnership or any individual not a resident of the United States, when such policy or other instrument is not signed or countersigned by an officer or agent of the insurer in a State, Territory, or district of the United States within which such insurer is authorized to do business, a tax of 5 cents on each dollar, or fractional part thereof of the premium charged: Provided, That policies of reinsurance shall be exempt from the tax imposed by this subdivision.

Any person to or for whom or in whose name any such policy or other instrument is issued, or any solicitor or broker acting for or on behalf of such person in the procurement of any such policy or other instrument, shall affix the proper stamps to such policy or other instrument, and for failure to affix such stamps with intent to evade the tax shall, in addition to other penalties provided therefor, pay a fine of double the amount of the tax.

TITLE XII.—TAX ON EMPLOYMENT OF CHILD LABOR.

SEC. 1200. That every person (other than a bona fide boys' or girls' canning club recognized by the Agricultural Department of a State and of the United States) operating (a) any mine or quarry situated in the United States in which children under the age of 16 years have been employed or permitted to work during any portion of the taxable year; or (b) any mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment situated in the United States in which children under the age of 14 years have been employed or permitted to work, or children between the ages of 14 and 16 have been employed or permitted to work more than eight hours in any day or more than six days in any week, or after the hour of 7 o'clock p. m. or before the hour of 6 o'clock a. m., during any portion of the taxable year, shall pay for each taxable year, in addition to all other taxes imposed by law, an excise tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the entire net profits received or accrued for such year from the sale or disposition of the product of such mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment.

SEC. 1201. That in computing net profits under the provisions of this title, for the purpose of the tax there shall be allowed as deductions from the gross amount received or accrued for the taxable year from the sale or disposition of such products manufactured within the United States the following items:

(a) The cost of raw materials entering into the production;

(b) Running expenses, including rentals, cost of repairs, and maintenance, heat, power, insurance, management, and a reasonable allowance for salaries or other compensations for personal services actually rendered, and for depreciation;

(c) Interest paid within the taxable year on debts or loans contracted to meet the needs of the business, and the proceeds of which have been actually used to meet such needs;

(d) Taxes of all kinds paid during the taxable year with respect to the business or property relating to the production; and

(e) Losses actually sustained within the taxable year in connection with the business of producing such products, including losses from fire, flood, storm, or other casualties, and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise.

SEC. 1202. That if any such person during any taxable year or part thereof, whether under any agreement, arrangement, or understanding, or otherwise, sells or disposes of any product of such mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment at less than the fair market price obtainable therefor either (a) in such manner as directly or indirectly to benefit such person or any person directly or indirectly interested in the business of such person, or (b) with intent to cause such benefit, the gross amount received or accrued for such year or part thereof from the sale or disposition of such product shall be taken to be the amount which would have been received or accrued from the sale or disposition of such product if sold at the fair market price.

SEC. 1203. (a) That no person subject to the provisions of this title shall be liable for the tax herein imposed if the only employment or permission to work, which but for this section would subject him to the tax, has been of a child as to whom such person has in good faith procured at the time of employing such child or permitting him to work, and has since in good faith relied upon and kept on file a certificate, issued in such form, under such conditions and by such persons as may be prescribed by a board consisting of the Secretary, the commissioner, and the Secretary of Labor, showing the child to be of such age as not to subject such person to the tax imposed by this title. Any person who knowingly makes a false statement or presents false evidence in or in relation to any such certificate or application therefor shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than three months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

In any State designated by such board an employment certificate or other similar paper as to the age of the child issued under the laws of that State and not inconsistent with the provisions of this title shall have the same force and effect as a certificate herein provided for.

(b) The tax imposed by this title shall not be imposed in the case of any person who proves to the satisfaction of the Secretary that the only employment or permission to work which but for this section would subject him to the tax has been of a child employed or permitted to work under a mistake of fact as to the age of such child, and without intention to evade the tax.

SEC. 1204. That on or before the 1st day of the third month following the close of each taxable year a true and accurate return under oath shall be made by each person subject to the provisions of this title to the collector for the district in which such person has his principal office or place of business in such form as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe, setting forth specifically the gross amount of income received or accrued during such year from the sale or disposition of the product of any mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment in which children have been employed subjecting him to the tax imposed by this title and from the total thereof deducting the aggregate items of allowance authorized by this title, and such other particulars as to the gross receipts and items of allowance as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may require.

SEC. 1205. That all such returns shall be transmitted forthwith by the collector to the commissioner, who shall, as soon as practicable, assess the tax found due and notify the person making such return of the amount of tax for which such person is liable, and such person shall pay the tax to the collector on or before 30 days from the date of such notice.

SEC. 1206. That for the purposes of this act the commissioner, or any other person duly authorized by him, shall have authority to enter and inspect at any time any mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment. The Secretary of Labor, or any person duly authorized by him, shall, for the purpose of complying with a request of the commissioner to make such an inspection, have like authority, and shall make report to the commissioner of inspections made under such authority in such form as may be prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Any person who refuses or obstructs entry or inspection authorized by this section shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. 1207. That as used in this title the term "taxable year" shall have the same meaning as provided for the purposes of income tax in section 200. The first taxable year for the purposes of this title shall be the period between 60 days after the passage of this act and December 31, 1919, both inclusive, or such portion of such period as is included within the fiscal year (as defined in section 200) of the taxpayer.

TITLE XIII.—GENERAL ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.

SEC. 1300. That hereafter the salary of the commissioner shall be $10,000 a year. The difference between the amount appropriated under existing law and the salary herein established shall, for the period between the passage of this act and July 1, 1919, be paid out of the appropriations for collecting internal revenue.

SEC. 1301. (a) That hereafter there may be employed in the Bureau of Internal Revenue, in lieu of the deputy commissioners whose salaries are now fixed by law, five deputy commissioners and an assistant to the commissioner, who shall each receive a salary of $5,000 a year, payable monthly. The assistant to the commissioner may be authorized by the commissioner to perform any duties which the deputy commissioners may perform under existing law.

(b) The salaries of collectors may be readjusted and increased under such regulations as may be prescribed by the commissioner, subject to the approval of the Secretary, but no collector shall receive a salary in excess of $6,000 a year.

(c) There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the sum of $7,500,000 for the expenses of assessing and collecting the internal-revenue taxes as provided in this act, including the employment of necessary officers, attorneys, experts, agents, inspectors, deputy collectors, clerks, janitors, and messengers, in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts, to be appointed as provided by law, telegraph and telephone service, rental and repair of quarters, postage, and the purchase of such supplies, equipment, furniture, mechanical devices, printing, stationery, law books and books of reference, not to exceed $500 for street car fares in the District of Columbia, and such other articles as may be necessary for use in the District of Columbia and the several collection districts: Provided, That not more than $2,750,000 of the total amount appropriated by this section may be expended in the Bureau of Internal Revenue, in the District of Columbia: Provided further, That not more than $60,000 of the total amount appropriated by this section may be expended for salaries and traveling expenses of members of an "advisory-tax board" to be appointed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary. Under rules and regulations prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, the secretary of the commissioner may, and on the request of any taxpayer directly interested shall, submit to the board any question relating to the interpretation or administration of the internal-revenue laws. Such board shall have the power to summon witnesses, to take testimony, administer oaths, and require any person to produce books, papers, documents, or other papers relating to any matter under investigation by the board. Such board may be continued for two years.

SEC. 1302. That all internal-revenue agents and inspectors shall be granted leave of absence with pay, which shall not be cumulative, not to exceed 30 days in any calendar year, under such regulations as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe.

SEC. 1303. (a) That there is hereby created a legislative drafting service under the direction of two draftsmen, one of whom shall be appointed by the President of the Senate, and one by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, without reference to political affiliations and solely on the ground of fitness to perform the duties of the office. Each draftsman shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year, payable monthly. The draftsmen shall, subject to the approval of the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, employ and fix the compensation of such assistant draftsmen, clerks, and other employees, and purchase such furniture, office equipment, books, stationery, and other supplies, as may be necessary for the proper performance of the duties of the service and as may be appropriated for by Congress.

(b) The drafting service shall aid in drafting public bills and resolutions or amendments thereto on the request of any committee of either House of Congress, but the Library Committee of the Senate and the Library Committee of the House of Representatives, respectively, may determine the preference, if any, to be given to such requests of the committees of either House, respectively. The draftsmen shall, from time to time, prescribe rules and regulations for the conduct of the work of the service for the committees of each House, subject to the approval of the Library Committee of each House, respectively.

(c) For the remainder of the current fiscal year there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the establishment and maintenance of the service, including the payment of salaries herein authorized. One-half of all appropriations for the service shall be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate and one-half by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 1304. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid in the United States, upon articles coming into the United States from the Virgin Islands, a tax equal to the internal-revenue tax imposed in the United States upon like articles of domestic manufacture; such articles shipped from such islands to the United States shall be exempt from the payment of any tax imposed by the internal-revenue laws of such islands: Provided, That there shall be levied, collected, and paid in such islands, upon articles imported from the United States, a tax equal to the internal-revenue tax imposed in such islands upon like articles there manufactured; and such articles going into such islands from the United States shall be exempt from payment of any tax imposed by the internal-revenue laws of the United States.

SEC. 1305. That all administrative, special, or stamp provisions of law, including the law relating to the assessment of taxes, so far as applicable, are hereby extended to and made a part of this act, and every person liable to any tax imposed by this act, or for the collection thereof, shall keep such records and render, under oath, such statements and returns, and shall comply with such regulations as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may from time to time prescribe.

The commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may require any person, whether liable to tax or not, to file returns of income or such statements as may be deemed by him to be sufficient to show whether or not such person is so liable.

The commissioner, for the purpose of ascertaining the correctness of any return or for the purpose of making a return where none has been made, is hereby authorized, by any revenue agent or inspector designated by him for that purpose, to examine any books, papers, records, or memoranda bearing upon the matters required to be included in the return, and may require the attendance of the person rendering the return or of any officer or employee of such person, or the attendance of any other person having knowledge in the premises, and may take his testimony with reference to the matter required by law to be included in such return, with power to administer oaths to such person or persons.

SEC. 1306. That where floor taxes are imposed by this act in respect to articles or commodities, in respect to which the tax imposed by existing law has been paid, the person required by this act to pay the tax shall, within 30 days after its passage, make return under oath in such form and under such regulations as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe. Payment of the tax shown to be due may be extended to a date not exceeding seven months from the passage of this act, upon the filing of a bond for payment in such form and amount and with such sureties as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe.

SEC. 1307. That in all cases where the method of collecting the tax imposed by this act is not specifically provided in this act, the tax shall be collected in such manner as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may prescribe. All administrative and penalty provisions of Title XI of this act, in so far as applicable, shall apply to the collection of any tax which the commissioner determines or prescribes shall be paid by stamp.

SEC. 1308. (a) That any person required under Titles V, VI, VII, VIII, IX, X, or XII, to pay, or to collect, account for, and pay over any tax, or required by law or regulations made under authority thereof to make a return or supply any information for the purposes of the computation, assessment, or collection of any such tax, who fails to pay, collect, or truly account for and pay over any such tax, make any such return or supply any such information at the time or times required by law or regulation shall in addition to other penalties provided by law be subject to a penalty of not more than $1,000.

(b) Any person who willfully refuses to pay, collect, or truly account for and pay over any such tax, make such return or supply such information at the time or times required by law or regulation, or who willfully attempts in any manner to evade such tax shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and in addition to other penalties provided by law shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both, together with the costs of prosecution.

(c) Any person who willfully refuses to pay, collect, or truly account for and pay over any such tax shall in addition to other penalties provided by law be liable to a penalty of the amount of the tax evaded, or not paid, collected, or accounted for and paid over, to be assessed and collected in the same manner as taxes are assessed and collected: Provided, however, That no penalty shall be assessed under this subdivision for any offense for which a penalty may be assessed under authority of section 3176 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, or of section 605 or 620 of this act, or for any offense for which a penalty has been recovered under section 3256 of the Revised Statutes.

(d) The term "person" as used in this section includes an officer or employee of a corporation or a member or employee of a partnership, who as such officer, employee, or member is under a duty to perform the act in respect of which the violation occurs.

SEC. 1309. That the commissioner, with the approval of the secretary, is hereby authorized to make all needful rules and regulations for the enforcement of the provisions of this act.

The commissioner with such approval may by regulation provide that any return required by Titles V, VI, VII, VIII, IX, or X to be under oath may, if the amount of the tax covered thereby is not in excess of $10, be signed or acknowledged before two witnesses instead of under oath.

SEC. 1310. (a) That in the case of any overpayment or overcollection of any tax imposed by section 628 or 630 or by Title V, Title VIII, or Title IX, the person making such overpayment or overcollection may take credit therefor against taxes due upon any monthly return, and shall make refund of any excessive amount collected by him upon proper application by the person entitled thereto.

(b) Wherever in this act a tax is required to be paid by the purchaser to the vendor at the time of a sale, and such sale is made on credit, then, under regulations prescribed by the commissioner, with the approval of the secretary, the tax may, at the option of the vendor, be returned and paid by him to the United States as if paid to him by the purchaser at the time of the sale, and in such case the vendor shall have a right of action in any court of competent jurisdiction against the purchaser for the amount of the tax so returned and paid to the United States.

SEC. 1311. That where the rate of tax imposed by this act, payable by stamps, is an increase over previously existing rates, stamps on hand in the collectors' offices and in the Bureau of Internal Revenue may continue to be used until the supply on hand is exhausted, but shall be sold and accounted for at the rates provided by this act, and assessment shall be made against manufacturers and other taxpayers having such stamps on hand on the day this act takes effect for the difference between the amount paid for such stamps and the tax due at the rates provided by this act.

SEC. 1312. (1) That (a) if any person has prior to May 9, 1917, made a bona fide contract with a dealer for the sale or lease, after the tax takes effect, of any article in respect to which a tax is imposed under Titles VI, VII, or IX, or under subdivision 13 of Schedule A of Title XI, or under this subdivision, and (b) if such contract does not permit the adding of the whole of such tax to the amount to be paid under such contract, then the vendee or lessee shall, in lieu of the vendor or lessor, pay so much of such tax as is not so permitted to be added to the contract price. If a contract of the character above described was made with any person other than a dealer, the tax collected under this act shall be the tax in force on May 9, 1917.

(2) If (a) any person has prior to September 3, 1918, made a bona fide contract with a dealer for the sale or lease, after the tax takes effect, of any article in respect to which a tax is imposed under Titles VI, VII, or IX, or under subdivision 13 of Schedule A of Title XI, or under this subdivision, and in respect to which no corresponding tax was imposed by the revenue act of 1917, and (b) such contract does not permit the adding, to the amount to be paid under such contract, of the whole of the tax imposed by this act, then the vendee or lessee shall, in lieu of the vendor or lessor, pay so much of the tax imposed by this act, as is not so permitted to be added to the contract price. If a contract of the character above described was made with any person other than a dealer, no tax shall be collected under this act.

(3) If (a) any person has prior to September 3, 1918, made a bona fide contract with a dealer for the sale or lease, after the tax takes effect, of any article in respect to which a tax is imposed under Titles VI, VII, or IX, or under subdivision 13 of Schedule A of Title XI, or under this subdivision, and in respect to which a corresponding tax was imposed by the revenue act of 1917, and (b) such contract does not permit the adding, to the amount to be paid under such contract, of the whole of the difference between such tax and corresponding tax imposed by the revenue act of 1917, then the vendee or lessee shall, in lieu of the vendor or lessor, pay so much of such difference as is not so permitted to be added to the contract price. If a contract of the character above described was made with any person other than a dealer, the tax collected under this act shall be the tax in force on September 3, 1918.

(4) The taxes payable by the vendee or lessee under this section shall be paid to the vendor or lessor at the time the sale or lease is consummated, and collected, returned, and paid to the United States by such vendor or lessor in the same manner as provided in section 502.

(5) The term "dealer" as used in this section includes a vendee who purchases any article with intent to use it in the manufacture or production of another article intended for sale.

SEC. 1313. That in the payment of any tax under this act not payable by stamp a fractional part of a cent shall be disregarded unless it amounts to one-half cent or more, in which case it shall be increased to 1 cent.

SEC 1314. That collectors may receive, at par with an adjustment for accrued interest, certificates of indebtedness issued by the United States and uncertified checks in payment of income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes, and any other taxes payable other than by stamp, during such time and under such regulations as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe; but if a check so received is not paid by the bank on which it is drawn the person by whom such check has been tendered shall remain liable for the payment of the tax and for all legal penalties and additions the same as if such check had not been tendered.

SEC. 1315. That section 3315 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3315. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue may, under regulations prescribed by him with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, issue stamps for restamping packages of distilled spirits, tobacco, cigars, snuff, cigarettes, fermented liquors, and wines which have been duly stamped but from which the stamps have been lost or destroyed by unavoidable accident."

SEC. 1316. (a) That section 3220 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3220. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized to remit, refund, and pay back all taxes erroneously or illegally assessed or collected, all penalties collected without authority, and all taxes that appear to be unjustly assessed or excessive in amount, or in any manner wrongfully collected; also to repay to any collector or deputy collector the full amount of such sums of money as may be recovered against him in any court, for any internal revenue taxes collected by him, with the cost and expenses of suit; also all damages and costs recovered against any assessor, assistant assessor, collector, deputy collector, agent, or inpector, in any suit brought against him by reason of anything done in the due performance of his official duty, and shall make report to Congress at the beginning of each regular session of Congress of all transactions under this section."

(b) Section 3225 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3225. When a second assessment is made in case of any list, statement, or return, which in the opinion of the collector or deputy collector was false or fraudulent, or contained any understatement or undervaluation, such assessment shall not be remitted, nor shall taxes collected under such assessment be refunded, or paid back, or recovered by any suit, unless it is proved that such list, statement, or return was not willfully false or fraudulent and did not contain any willful understatement or undervaluation."

(c) That the paragraph of section 3689 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, reading as follows:

"Refunding taxes illegally collected (internal revenue): To refund and pay back duties erroneously or illegally assessed or collected under the internal-revenue laws," is hereby amended to read as follows:

"To refund and pay back duties or taxes erroneously or illegally assessed or collected under the internal-revenue laws, and to pay judgments, including interest and costs, rendered for taxes or penalties erroneously or illegally assessed or collected under the internal-revenue laws, notwithstanding any limitations imposed by the act of June 20, 1874."

SEC. 1317. That sections 3164, 3165, 3167, 3172, 3173, and 3176 of the Revised Statutes as amended are hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3164. It shall be the duty of every collector of internal revenue having knowledge of any willful violation of any law of the United States relating to the revenue, within 30 days after coming into possession of such knowledge, to file with the district attorney of the district in which any fine, penalty, or forfeiture may be incurred, a statement of all the facts and circumstances of the case within his knowledge, together with the names of the witnesses, setting forth the provisions of law believed to be so violated on which reliance may be had for condemnation or conviction.

"SEC. 3165. Every collector, deputy collector, internal-revenue agent, and internal-revenue officer assigned to duty under an internal-revenue agent, is authorized to administer oaths and to take evidence touching any part of the administration of the internal-revenue laws with which he is charged, or where such oaths and evidence are authorized by law or regulation authorized by law to be taken.

"SEC. 3167. It shall be unlawful for any collector, deputy collector, agent, clerk, or other officer or employee of the United States to divulge or to make known in any manner whatever not provided by law to any person the operations, style of work, or apparatus of any manufacturer or producer visited by him in the discharge of his official duties, or the amount or source of income, profits, losses, expenditures, or any particular thereof, set forth or disclosed in any income return, or to permit any income return or copy thereof or any book containing any abstract or particulars thereof to be seen or examined by any person except as provided by law; and it shall be unlawful for any person to print or publish in any manner whatever not provided by law any income return, or any part thereof or source of income, profits, losses, or expenditures appearing in any income return; and any offense against the foregoing provision shall be a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, at the discretion of the court; and if the offender be an officer or employee of the United States he shall be dismissed from office or discharged from employment.

"SEC. 3172. Every collector shall, from time to time, cause his deputies to proceed through every part of his district and inquire after and concerning all persons therein who are liable to pay any internal-revenue tax, and all persons owning or having the care and management of any objects liable to pay any tax, and to make a list of such persons and enumerate said objects.

"SEC. 3173. It shall be the duty of any person, partnership, firm, association, or corporation, made liable to any duty, special tax, or other tax imposed by law, when not otherwise provided for, (1) in case of a special tax, on or before the 31st day of July in each year, and (2) in other cases before the day on which the taxes accrue, to make a list or return, verified by oath, to the collector or a deputy collector of the district where located, of the articles or objects, including the quantity of goods, wares, and merchandise, made or sold and charged with a tax, the several rates and aggregate amount, according to the forms and regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, for which such person, partnership, firm, association, or corporation is liable: Provided, That if any person liable to pay any duty or tax, or owning, possessing, or having the care or management of property, goods, wares, and merchandise, article or objects liable to pay any duty, tax, or license, shall fail to make and exhibit a list or return required by law, but shall consent to disclose the particulars of any and all the property, goods, wares, and merchandise, articles, and objects liable to pay any duty or tax, or any business or occupation liable to pay any tax as aforesaid, then, and in that case, it shall be the duty of the collector or deputy collector to make such list or return, which, being distinctly read, consented to, and signed and verified by oath by the person so owning, possessing, or having the care and management as aforesaid, may be received as the list of such person: Provided further, That in case no annual list or return has been rendered by such person to the collector or deputy collector as required by law, and the person shall be absent from his or her residence or place of business at the time the collector or a deputy collector shall call for the annual list or return, it shall be the duty of such collector or deputy collector to leave at such place of residence or business, with some one of suitable age and discretion, if such be present, otherwise to deposit in the nearest post office, a note or memorandum addressed to such person, requiring him or her to render to such collector or deputy collector the list or return required by law within 10 days from the date of such note or memorandum, verified by oath. And if any person, on being notified or required as aforesaid, shall refuse or neglect to render such list or return within the time required as aforesaid, or whenever any person who is required to deliver a monthly or other return of objects subject to tax fails to do so at the time required, or delivers any return which, in the opinion of the collector, is erroneous, false, or fraudulent, or contains any undervaluation or understatement, or refuses to allow any regularly authorized Government officer to examine the books of such person, firm, or corporation, it shall be lawful for the collector to summon such person, or any other person having possession, custody, or care of books of account containing entries relating to the business of such person or any other person he may deem proper, to appear before him and produce such books at a time and place named in the summons, and to give testimony or answer interrogatories, under oath, respecting any objects or income liable to tax or the returns thereof. The collector may summon any person residing or found within the State or Territory in which his district lies; and when the person intended to be summoned does not reside and can not be found within such State or Territory, he may enter any collection district where such person may be found and there make the examination herein authorized. And to this end he may there exercise all the authority which he might lawfully exercise in the district for which he was commissioned: Provided, That 'person,' as used in this section, shall be construed to include any corporation, joint-stock company or association, or insurance company when such construction is necessary to carry out its provisions.

"SEC. 3176. If any person, corporation, company, or association fails to make and file a return or list at the time prescribed by law or by regulation made under authority of law, or makes, willfully or otherwise, a false or fraudulent return or list, the collector or deputy collector shall make the return or list from his own knowledge and from such information as he can obtain through testimony or otherwise. In any such case the commissioner may, from his own knowledge and from such information as he can obtain through testimony or otherwise, make a return or amend any return made by a collector or deputy collector. Any return or list so made and subscribed by the commissioner, or by a collector or deputy collector and approved by the commissioner, shall be prima facie good and sufficient for all legal purposes.

"If the failure to file a return or list is due to sickness or absence, the collector may allow such further time, not exceeding 30 days, for making and filing the return or list as he deems proper.

"The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall determine and assess all taxes, other than stamp taxes, as to which returns or lists are so made under the provisions of this section. In case of any failure to make and file a return or list within the time prescribed by law, or prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or the collector in pursuance of law, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall add to the tax 25 per cent of its amount, except that when a return is filed after such time and it is shown that the failure to file it was due to a reasonable cause and not to willful neglect, no such addition shall be made to the tax. In case a false or fraudulent return or list is willfully made, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall add to the tax 50 per cent of its amount.

"The amount so added to any tax shall be collected at the same time and in the same manner and as part of the tax unless the tax has been paid before the discovery of the neglect, falsity, or fraud, in which case the amount so added shall be collected in the same manner as the tax."

SEC. 1318. That if any person is summoned under this act to appear, to testify, or to produce books, papers, or other data, the district court of the United States for the district in which such person resides shall have jurisdiction by appropriate process to compel such attendance, testimony, or production of books, papers, or other data.

